A man in Bellevue Hospital, dying from wounds made by his own hand, was asked why he tried to commit suicide, and he said: "The spirits told me to." Parents have strangled their children, and when asked why they did it, replied: "Spiritualism demanded it." It is the patronizer and forager for the madhouse. Judge Edmunds, in Broadway Tabernacle, New York, delivering a lecture concerning Spiritualism, admitted, in so many words: "There is a fascination about consultation with the spirits of the dead that has a tendency to lead people off from their right judgment, and to instil into them a fanaticism that is revolting to the natural mind."

It not only ruins its disciples, but it ruins the mediums also, only give it time. The Gadarene swine, on the banks of the Lake of Galilee, no sooner became spiritual mediums than down they went, in an avalance of pork, to the consternation of all the herdsmen. The office of a medium is bad for a man, bad for a woman, bad for a beast.

I bring against this delusion a more fearful indictment: It ruins the soul immortal. First, it makes a man a quarter of an infidel; then it makes him half an infidel; then it makes him a whole infidel. The whole system, as I conceive it, is founded on the insufficiency of the Word of God as a revelation. God says the Bible is enough for you to know about the future world. You say it is not enough, and there is where you and the Lord differ. And although the Scriptures say: "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar," you risk it, and say, "Come back, spirit of my departed father; come back, spirit of my departed mother; of my companions; of my little child—and tell me some things I don't know about you, and about the unseen world."

If God is ever slapped in the face, it is when a spiritual medium puts down her hand on the table, invoking spirits departed to make a revelation. God has told you all you ought to know, and how dare you be prying into that which is none of your business? You cannot keep the Bible in one hand and Spiritualism in the other. One or the other will slip out of your grasp, depend upon it. Spiritualism is adverse to the Bible, in the fact that it has in these last day called from the future world Christia men to testify against Christianity. It mediums call back Lorenzo Dow, th celebrated evangelist, and Lorenzo Do testifies that Christians are idolater Spiritualism calls back Tom Paine, an he testifies that he is stopping in the sam house in heaven with John Bunyan. The call back John Wesley, and he testifie against the Christian religion, which h all his life gloriously preached. Andre Jackson Davis, the greatest of all th Spiritualists, comes to the front, and de clares that the New Testament is bu "the dismal echo of a barbaric age."

I have in my house a book used i Spiritualistic service. It contains a cate chism and a hymn book. The catechism has these questions and answers:

Q. What is our chief baptism?
A. Frequent ablution in water.
Q. What is our inspiration?
A. Fresh air and sunshine.
Q. What is our love feast?
A. Clear conscience and sound sleep.
Q. What is our prayer?
A. Physical exercise.

And then it goes on to show that great proportion of their religious servic is a system of calisthenics. Then when they want to arouse the devotion of th people to the highest pitch, they give ou the hymn on the 65th page:

The night hath gathered up her silken fringes

"But," says some one, "wouldn't it be o advantage to hear from the future world Don't you think it would strengthen Chris tians? There are a great many Material ists who do not believe there are souls but if spirits from the future world shoul knock and talk over to us, they woul be persuaded." To that I answer, in the ringing words of the Son of God: "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, nei ther will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

I believe these are the days of which the apostle spake when he said: "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits." Audiences in this day need to have re iterated in their hearing the passages I quoted some minutes ago: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familia spirits, or wizard, or necromancer; for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord;" and, "The soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, I will set myself against them, and they shall be cut off from their people."

But I invite you now to a Christian seance, a noonday seance. This congregation is only one great family. Here is the church table. Come around the church table; take your seats for this great Christian seance; put your Bible on the table, put your hands on top of the Bible, and then listen, and hear if there are any voices coming from the eternal world. I think there are. Listen! "Secret things belong unto the Lord, our God; but things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children." Surely, that is a voice from the spirit world! But before you rise from this Christian seance, I want you to promise me you will be satisfied with the Divine revelation until the light of the eternal throne breaks upon your vision. Do not go after the witch of En-dor. Do not sit down at table-rappings, either in sport or in earnest.

Teach your children there are no ghosts to be seen or heard in this world, save those which walk on two feet or four—human or bestial. Remember that Spiritualism, at the best, is a useless thing; for if it tells what the Bible reveals, it is a superfluity; and if it tells what the Bible does not reveal, it is a lie. Instead of going out to get other people to tell your fortune, tell your own fortune by putting your trust in God and doing the best you can. I will tell your fortune: "All things work together for good to them that love God." Insult not your departed friends by asking them to come down and scrabble under an extension table. Remember that there is only one Spirit whose dictation you have a right to invoke, and that is the holy, blessed and omnipotent Spirit of God. Hark! He is rapping now, not on a table, or the floor, but rapping on the door of your heart, and every rap is an invitation to Christ and a warning of judgment to come. Oh, grieve him not away! Quench him not. Hark! There comes a voice with tender, overmastering intonation, saying: "My Spirit shall not always strive."

What One Good Man Did in Cuba

lmer E. Hubbard's Noble Work Among the Homeless Reconcentrado Children of Matanzas—An Uphill Struggle Which Deserves Encouragement

THE LITTLE CUBAN WAIFS GATHERED BY MR. HUBBARD

ON the beautiful hills overlooking the city and bay of Matanzas, is an out-of-town house, or "Quinta," as it is called in Cuba, which was first the residence of aristocratic Cubans, then the barracks of Spanish soldiers. It is now the home ıd school for forty little homeless Cuban oys, ranging from six to eleven years age, who were gathered up from the rst of last April by Mr. Elmer E. Hubrd, a graduate of Ann Harbor, at one ne a teacher in Japan and afterward ssisting in the teaching in a New York uban mission school. He took with m between four and five hundred dolrs obtained by sacrificing all his posssions. He soon discovered that he eed not go beyond Matanzas to find the ork he sought. It was easier to find ttle children hungry and homeless than find a roof to cover them. He hired ıe old and dilapidated house on the hill. ıd employed two poor Cubans to whiteash some of the rooms, which were arred with the wanton destruction of he war. Soon the place was made fairly abitable.

Mr Hubbard then began the task of rnishing From strips of waste lumer he made frames for cots upon which e tacked canvas, and setting each end pon a soap box, thus contrived to make eds for his boys. This was a wonderıl improvement upon the hard, rough aving stones of the city, upon which the oor reconcentrado waifs had been sleepng. A table was made by laying some oards upon boxes turned on end, and chairs" were manufactured by turning he boxes on one side and placing boards n them. Table cloth there was none, ut the boards were clean, as were the ishes, which were few in number, conisting chiefly of odds and ends procured rom the American soldiers. These erved the purpose until the Eighth Mas achusetts regiment was ordered home, hen the officers gave him some sheets, nd the men a few blankets and dishes, nives, forks and spoons. The old Cuan kitchen still had its stone "stove" f the type used in that land, and with he addition of a few army pots and pans he cooking arrangements were complete.

While government rations were being listributed to the Cubans, these little oys had their share of rice, beans, bread nd canned meat, and when these failed o come, or were insufficient, the emergency was met by purchases with Mr. Hubbard's ever-diminishing store of money. After the distribution of rations had been discontinued, the needs of the waifs compelled Mr. Hubbard to ask a small loan to keep his little charges from suffering the pangs of hunger. Providentially, at this time a church organization—one which was struggling to do a large work with too little money—contributed $100 to the work, and this was used to repay the loan.

In the large main room of the old house, which served for a schoolroom, there was as furniture a folding cot given by an army officer, an uncertain campchair from the same source, a goods box turned on edge and fitted with pigeon holes, the cover hinged to open for a writing table and the whole set on soap boxes to give it the proper height. There was also a table made of a box lid, with shaky legs of stray bits of lumber. For school furniture, the boards used at the table, laid on the flat sides of the overworked soap boxes, served as seats and were placed on three sides of a square, the fourth side being occupied by this devoted teacher. One English and one Spanish primer, an English first-reader and a numerical frame were the aids to teaching that were in evidence. Strips of paper bearing texts from the Bible, lettered in Spanish by Mr. Hubbard, were on the walls.

For the first contingent of little boys, Mr. Hubbard himself did all the cooking and housekeeping that were needed, beside teaching them, and all this while he made preparations for a greater number. Then there came to him two desolate widows, with little boys of their own, and begged to be allowed to do the cooking, washing and sewing, in return for which they received food and shelter. Since then a third woman has joined this cooking, cleaning and mending volunteer force. Day by day some new little wanderer would find refuge in the place and have a little cot tacked together to receive his weary little body.

Before leaving Cuba, the writer took to this school a bright, black-eyed little lad, who is the sole survivor of his immediate family and his entire relationship. Of his reception, Mr. Hubbard said: "We were short of cots, so we took a stout sack of proper length and breadth, ran two mop-handles through the corners, spread the handles with sticks at the ends, set the whole upon two cracker boxes and provided it with sheets, a pillow and a nightgown, and there lies Suello sleeping the sleep of happy childhood."

I cannot forbear quoting further from his letter:

The Good Book says something about forsaken houses, lands, brothers, sisters, children, etc., and getting back a hundred-fold. I now have three times as much land and ten times as much house as I left; the brothers and sisters are coming and I shall soon have more children than I can "shake a stick at;" but I would like very much to read between the lines "and Jersey cows." Then at the very lowest estimate I could expect instead of the three Jerseys, which I left up there in Western New York, six equally good ones here. My milkman with the aerator, the milk bottles and the cream measured by inches rather than by the breath of a hair, would present a picture as novel in the streets of Matanzas as the present Matanzas milkman would be in the streets of New York; and we could turn this rich Cuban grass into heaps of American and Spanish gold, or better still, into strong, beautiful, noble Cuban men and women.

It seems that some of us should help him "read between the lines" and not consider "Jersey cows" too free a translation. In the village of Mocha, twelve miles from Matanzas, with its less than eight hundred inhabitants, all too poor to assume other responsibilities than their own, there are forty-four orphans under twelve years of age living where and how they may. The only one of this number who has been provided for is the one for whom the mop-handle cot was made. There are also at least fifteen girls between the ages of twelve and fifteen years. This is about the usual proportion of homeless children.

MR. HUBBARD'S CUBAN SCHOOL IN SESSION

Having voluntarily assumed the responsibility of Cuba's future, the people of the United States cannot overlook the welfare of the most important factor in it —the children. They need food an clothes and education, and, above and beyond all, homes and home influence and training. To us they have an entire right to look for them. If these children are not to have the opportunity of growing up into good, self-supporting honorable men and women, harsh as it may sound, it might have been better had they too perished during the ghastly work of extermination, instead of being spared to lives of wickedness, into which they must in all likelihood be forced if neglected now. Gov. Gen. Wood has very truly said of these Cuban orphans: "Personally I know of nothing which would be taken as an indication of better spirit and greater good-will on our part than taking hold of these fatherless and motherless children who have no one to look after them. I think if you do take hold of this work, which I hope you will, you will never have any occasion to regret it, and I think it will be a very creditable thing to our own people and our own flag."

Christian Work in the Canary Isles

In a letter just received from Mrs. T. MacKnight, the well-known Christian missionary at Tafira, Las Palmas, Canary Islands, the writer gives a most encouraging account of the progress of spiritual work there. The situation has greatly changed since the writer and her husband began work in the Canaries at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, at which time the feeling against English-speaking missionaries was exceedingly hostile. Now the people are friendly to the missionary workers, as the letter from which we quote shows. Mrs. MacKnight writes:

This is a veritable harvest field and we claim this island, 30 miles by 30, for the Lord. The Sunday School has several little ones in it. It goes on all Sunday morning and again with the older ones in the afternoon. There is no native church, no native evangelists or helpers, no native Christians except two or three, but we have the beginning of all these among us. The Word is received gladly and we see opposition departing.

In the cave town of Atalaya the boys there requested a boys' school; therefore we now have one and a native teacher, and I had to spare my picture roll and other things. We visit this wonderful town on Tuesdays, walking the three miles there. It is rough and steep all the way along the mule path, and the town is far from church or priest or school. The exceeding poverty of the people has led to a barbaric style of life. Many are old and bedridden in these caves. Here we speak to the people as they gather in the open air. The school has brought out the gratitude of the people. Another school will open by request in another village shortly. There is no opposition in our path. Our first work is the Living Word to each person—personally offered. In December, 64 Testaments were thus given and 164 Gospels. Pictures of any sort help us much and we are very glad to be remembered in this way.

Jesus at Capernaum

The Paralytic Healed

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 11th. MARK 2: 1-12

UNCLE Will: "Let us all go by thought express to Capernaum, and straight to the sick room of the paralytic, who lies helpless on his oriental bed, which is hardly more than a thick quilt or comforter laid on the floor. The door opens and his brother comes rushing in, saying, 'Jesus, who healed my withered hand and cured so many other sick people last Sabbath, has come back to the city again and is in the house of his friend where he always stays, on the other side of the city.'

"The sick man answers wearily, 'I fear he couldn't heal me. My case was worse than yours. But if my feet were not palsied I would go and see whether he could do anything for me.' The sick man's wife said eagerly, 'We will carry you. I will get two of the neighbors who were healed to help us, and brother and I will take the other two corners of your bed.' Presently they were hurrying down the street, but others with no load were hurrying faster, and many with sick ones had started earlier, and so when they reached the house it was full and overflowing into the street. Plead as they would they could not get through the closely packed door. But love is inventive and persistent, and the wife said, 'Let us go up those outside stairs and get in from the roof.' Up they went with their load, and found yet another difficulty, a temporary roof over the court made to shut out the sun, which seemed to shut them out. But love would not be defeated and so the men began to pull the roof open, while the faithful wife hurried to the neighbors for ropes. Down through the opened roof they lowered the sick man, as the dead are lowered, only this time it was for the resurrection, not burial, of one as good as dead."

A Service Interrupted Selah Brown said with a smile, "How this interruption of the decorum of that preaching service to save a man must have offended some of the apostles! I heard Rev. A. J. Gordon tell of such a case in his fashionable Boston church at the time of the great Moody meetings. As the big tabernacle was not open on Sabbath morning, one of the 'poor sinners' that had been stirred on Saturday, but not quite to action, came at that time to the church of Dr. Gordon because he had seen him so much at the revival meetings.

"He came early and took a seat in one of the highest-priced pews, knowing nothing of the church system of reserved seats in the house of God. After Dr. Gordon had invoked God's presence to the end that souls might be saved and some hymn—perhaps 'Just as I am'—had been sung, the convicted sinner rose to his feet and said right out loud in that stately church, 'I want to be saved; pray for me.' If he had been suddenly let down through the roof he would not have more startled the congregation. No doubt many were offended at the interruption, for nothing is more out of order than for a man to seek salvation in a morning service—so far have we drifted from New Testament simplicity into conventionalism."

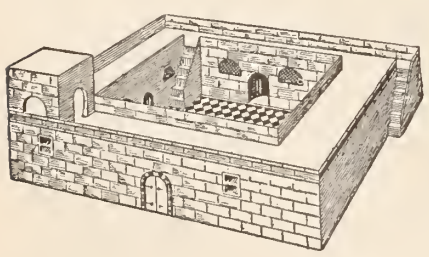
The Faith of Friends Ruth, the Quakeress, said: "What impresses and solemnizes me is the cheering yet awful suggestion of that word, 'When Jesus saw their faith.' Whether that includes faith in the man himself or not, it seems clear that he would not have been saved but for the faith of the friends who bore him to Christ. Many of the miracles teach this great lesson: that the fate of a soul may often depend on the faith and faithfulness of his friends. In the story of last Sabbath, probably Peter's wife's mother would not have been healed of the fever if friends had not told Jesus of her. God has an unbounded reservoir of power to save, but it flows only through human channels."



MODEL OF ORIENTAL HOUSE

"I note," said Sanders, "that the faith of those friends was a faith that worked. They helped to answer their own prayers. They were not disheartened by obstacle after obstacle. They did what they could, and only asked God to do what they could not do. Much of praying seems to me a lazy effort to throw upon God what we might do ourselves—at least in part."

Tom, our prospective preacher, said: "If I were a preacher, I think I would take for a text, 'That ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, then saith he to the sick of the palsy, Arise.' I would show that Christ's miracles were not chiefly to relieve the body, but to teach the soul, and that no really Christian philanthropy will stop with physical relief. The minds and souls of the degraded are really more to be pitied than their rag-clad bodies. Was it Ruskin who said: 'The lack of goods for the higher wants is not so sad as the lack of wants for the higher goods.'"

Modern Miracles of Healing Mrs. Brown: "I think we may find a message here for those who make bodily healing to-day the chief feature of their religion. Whether miracles of healing are wrought to-day I do not care to debate, but surely it is not Christlike to make so much of the dying body that the interests of immortal souls seem to be secondary. Even in the days of the apostles miracles on the body almost wholly ceased, giving place to greater miracles wrought in the soul, such as the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. And to-day the supreme miracles—as the transformation of such characters as Jerry McAuley and Romanes, and Christianizing of nations, of Europe in the Christian centuries, and more recently of Hawaii, Fiji, Madagascar, the Karens, the Telegus."

Uncle Will: "That key Jesus gave to the spiritual meaning of miracles gives some warrant to the common habit of preachers and teachers in using the miracles as pictures of sin and salvation. We are now in what is called 'the miraculous Scripture,' where miracles are thicker than anywhere else in the Bible. They are by no means as common in the Bible as many suppose. There are really only four miracle periods in the Bible, each lasting about forty years, associated with the four great names—Abraham, Moses, Elijah and Christ. And it is no strained analogy to make the various diseases types of the various forms of sin, for disease is largely due to sin. Nor is it unnatural to make restoration to bodily wholeness stand for the same word in its spiritual form—holiness. Leprosy is a parable of guilt; palsy, of the powerlessness produced by sin; fever, of aroused passion; demoniacal possession, of subjection to Satan; 'the issue of blood,' of hopeless uncleanness; blindness, deafness, dumbness, of lost capacities to see, to hear, to speak, spiritual truth; the dead, of moral death. Over all these Christ had power."

Miracles as Teachers of Prayer Mrs. Uncle Will: "The miracles in the Gospels, it seems to me, are best used to-day as teachers of prayer. Christ was God made visible, hearing the prayers of men and answering in miracles so varied as to illustrate his manifold ways of answering prayer. Usually Christ waited for the needy one to ask (John 5:6) and even drew out the request sometimes, saying to another paralytic at Bethesda, 'Wilt thou be made whole?' Sometimes he answered when the asking was chiefly, if not wholly, the anxious prayer of friends, as in the case of the paralytic and of Peter's wife's mother (verse 30). Sometimes, as in the case of the Syrophœnician mother, the answer was delayed for his own wise reasons (Matt. 15:22-28), probably to test and develop earnestness in that case. Sometimes he gave a different but better answer than was desired (John 11:3-6, 45), as when Mary and Martha prayed for the healing of Lazarus and Jesus answered, after delay, with a resurrection that converted Mary. Oh blessed encouragement, though he honored great faith, he answered even the cry of little faith, as in the stilling of the tempest (Matt. 8:26), when the apostles' faith was too small to count and Jesus said, 'How is it that ye have no faith?' And he required men to co-operate with him so far as they could in answering their prayers, as when he sent the blind man to wash in Siloam (John 9:7)."

"I SAY UNTO THEE ARISE AND TAKE UP THY BED AND GO THY WAY"

"I have a story" said Mrs. Isaacs, "that just fits your idea of recalling Jesus on earth when we wish to come to God for prayer or conversion. The celebration of a young man's twenty-first birthday had just closed; the guests had all departed. Charles Wilcox and his younger brother Edward stood alone together. The older brother looked sad, and was startled from his reverie when Edward said, 'Charles, I am very glad you could get back in season for to-night.' 'I was still more glad to come,' was the reply, 'yet, though I have enjoyed this evening much, one thought, my dear brother, has constantly haunted me. You have attained what we call your majority, but you have not yet, I fear, come to Christ. Edward, why won't you truly begin a new life?'

"'Charles,' rejoined the other, 'I have thought and tried to pray over what you said to me in your last letter, but I don't know how to find Christ; he seems a great way off.'

"'If Jesus stood in this room, where I do, would you come to him?'

"'Come to him! Yes, even if the whole world laughed me to scorn,' was the impetuous reply.

"'Edward,' said Charles tenderly, 'Christ is here, close by your side, only waiting for you to say, "Here I am Lord, do with me as thou wilt."'

"Edward was deeply moved, and a look of joy overshadowing his face, he knelt down and said reverently, 'Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.' And the new life began."

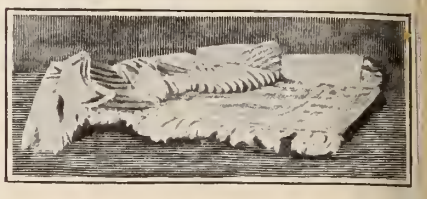
Uncle Will was ever watching to get these lessons of our home department study lived as well as learned. Thinking how this story of the paralytic might be repeated to-day, his mind rested on a neighboring farmer, robust enough of body but a paralytic in soul. He cared for nothing mental or spiritual. The routine of farm life, with three meals a day and a slowly increasing bank account in the nearest town seemed to be all he cared for. Every enthusiasm, whether for the Flag or the Bible, seemed to him a waste of nerves. Uncle Will and others had tried often and in vain to get him to religious meetings. It seemed as if one might as well try to wring water out of iron ore as to get religious interest from him. Uncle Will tried to drop the mental suggestion as impracticable, but could not banish it. "Well," he said at last, "perhaps if four of us take hold of him with as much faith and persistency as those four men of Capernaum did of their friend, we may yet bring him to Christ." And they did.



RUG USED IN PALESTINE AS A BED

"We four children can bring somebody to Jesus," said little Christina, ten years of age, at the close of that lesson on the paralytic. The children went aside and talked it all over. Christina had been greatly troubled by the swearing and Sabbath-breaking of some of the cowboys of the nearby ranches. She therefore prepared a little morality play in unconscious resemblance of those of the early church, and invited the cowboys to see it the next Saturday evening in Uncle Will's big kitchen. One child personated the soul, another the bad spirit that tempted the soul to do wrong, another the good spirit that warned against the wrong and invited to the right. At last the good spirit triumphed and sang:

"A soul is won! A soul is won!"

The cowboys listened solemnly and some brushed away a tear as the children recalled their own childhood and mothers' prayers. One of the cowboys, a preacher's wayward son, soon after went back to his home and back to God.

A Road in the Rock

When they could not come nigh unto him. Some people would have given up the attempt and would have carried the man back. We all know people who are easily discouraged and confess their failure. These four friends were of a different kind. They resemble a man who, when asked to define an obstacle, said: "It is a thing that has to be overcome." The four friends, not being able to penetrate the crowd, went on the roof, and when they found that covered, they broke up the covering. Spurgeon used to describe a road that he saw in the Alps, the construction of which much impressed him. Nature seemed to have effectually barred the path by a rock which was worse than perpendicular, for it overhung the course by which the road must run. One engineer after another pronounced it impossible to proceed; but at last one engineer was consulted who overcame the obstacle. He blasted a groove in the side of the mountain and leveled a path. The road is now like a tunnel which has one of its sides missing. When a man of that kind is determined to get to Christ, or to bring one of his friends to him, he lets nothing stand in his way and Christ rewards his persistence.

A Dog's Ministry

When Jesus saw their faith. How did they get their faith? Perhaps one or more of them had already tested his power. The surgeon of St. Bartholomew's Hospital in London tells a touching story of canine faith of this kind. He saw a dog on the street come limping on three legs and evidently in great pain. Examining the suspended leg he found that one of the small bones was broken. The dog had probably been run over. He picked the animal up and carried it to the hospital where he set the leg and bound it up in splints. In a short time the dog was running around quite cured. Some weeks afterwards as the surgeon was entering the hospital at night, the dog came jumping up to him. The surgeon patted him and was going on, but the dog began to whine and run a little way and then turn, asking as plainly as he could for his human friend to follow him. The surgeon did follow and the dog led him to an archway, where lay another dog with a broken leg. The dog who had been cured had evidently brought the injured dog. If Christians who have been saved would bring to Christ those who need saving, the world would be converted.

eneral Lawton's Funeral

ALL that a grateful nation can do to express its grief and to show honor to a brave and gallant soldier, was done in Washington when the remains of General Henry W. Lawton were committed to the tomb. For a day and a ght the body of the soldier lay in state the Presbyterian Church of the Covhant. So it lay when the doors were pened on the morning of the funeral: oopers from his old command, with ibres drawn, keeping vigil at the head nd feet. Beneath the soft lights of the er rose a tropic jungle of palms and gher than the flag-draped coffin, rose anks of flowers, tributes from every uarter of the land. At his head hung in m folds the dingy battle flag from San lateo, still on its bamboo staff and supported by one of the men who was near im when he fell. From the ceiling hung ie red-centred colors of the Eighth Corps, nder which he had won fame in two land wars. About him as the shrill pipes f the organ trembled with the opening nthem, stood grouped his superiors and is brother officers, with and for whom is life-work had been done. Close to ie coffin sat President McKinley rrounded by the members of the abinet. Close by the pew where Irs. Lawton, little Manley and the ther members of the family sat, ere Gen. Miles, Gen. Merritt, Gen. rooke, Gen. Shafter and their taff officers, all in uniform, and all awton's comrades, who at one me or another had camped or ought beside him. In the body of he church was a scarcely less notble gathering. Assistant secrearies and heads of bureaus, the Iilitary Committees of the House nd Senate, diplomats, the Orientls in their flowing robes of somre color, and the Europeans replendent in decorations, prominent mong them the Spanish Minister. There were delegations from the oyal Legion, the Grand Army and ther patriotic societies. The simple urial service was read, and then President Stryker, of Hamilton College, pronounced a eulogy. At s close, the sorrowing comrades of he dead raised the coffin, and bore t to the caisson on which it was onveyed to Arlington Cemetery. There it was laid in the grave; the oldiers fired a parting volley and he bugle sounded the melancholy taps," suggestive of the darkness nd stillness of the soldier's rest. A ad ceremony which in every age the ations have had to perform over hose whom they loved and honored:

THE FUNERAL, AT WASHINGTON, D. C., OF THE LATE GEN. H. W. LAWTON

And they buried him; and all Israel mourned for im (I. Kings 14 : 18).

A Solace in Prison

A New York daily journal, giving deails of the prison life of Roland B. Molneux, the young man who has been conicted of the murder of Mrs. Katharine . Adams, and has been condemned to leath, mentions that some persons who isited him in his cell found him reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We have since learned that during the whole year hat he was in the Tombs he was one of our regular readers and apparently an appreciative one. Some surprise has been expressed that a young man who was ighting for his life against a powerful prosecution and was immeshed in a web of circumstantial evidence, which an accused man always finds it difficult to rebut, should have read a journal which has never mentioned his case and contained nothing that could help in his legal struggle. There is, however, no reason for surprise, if the young man realized, as one in peril so dire would be likely to do, that sooner or later, he must appear before another tribunal, to give account of all the deeds done in the body. To be absolved there, is of far greater importance to him than are the decisions of any earthly court. If this journal has contributed in any degree to that consummation, we shall be devoutly grateful. For all crime and sin we have only hatred and detestation: but for the sinner, whether he be an actual criminal or not, we have only pity and a desire to lead him to Christ, who died for him, and welcomes all who come to him repentant.

And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin (I. John 1 : 7).

A Terrible Mistake

A press dispatch from Rochester, N. Y., reports a sad blunder which was made a few days ago at a funeral in that city. One of the near relatives of the deceased was overcome by her emotions during the progress of the ceremonies and fell to the floor in a swoon. A lady who was sitting near her, sprang to her assistance. She ran to a table in the room on which there was a vessel which, she thought, contained water. She hurried to the fainting woman and threw the contents in her face. Instantly the mistake was apparent. It was not water in the vessel, but carbolic acid, almost pure. As soon as a doctor could be found, remedies were applied, but the sufferer was in torture and if she lives, will be disfigured for life. The lady whose mistake caused the suffering was overcome when she realized what she had done, became hysterical and is in danger of losing her reason. Her sorrow is natural, but she ought not to reproach herself too severely. Her motive was good and that fact should mitigate her grief. No such mitigation can come to those who blunder in spiritual matters. Many a soul suffering under conviction has been led back into worldliness by some officious friend who thinks thus to relieve its suffering, in spite of the prophet's warning:

They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace (Jer. 6 : 14).

A Chequered Career Closing

A cable message from the French capital reports that in one of the hotels of that city the ex-Empress Eugenie is lying dangerously ill. As the illustrious lady is now seventy-four years of age, such an illness must be full of peril to her. It is remarkable that the seizure should have taken place in the city in which she was once the most conspicuous of all its inhabitants and was honored above all of her sex. During the seventeen years that elapsed from her marriage to the Emperor Napoleon III., to the fall of the empire in 1870, her career was one of grandeur and magnificence. She took a deep interest in state affairs and when her husband was absent on his military expeditions, ruled the country as Regent. She heartily approved of the war against Prussia, which ended so disastrously for him, and indeed had a share in inciting him to enter upon it. "This is my war," she said to a group of courtiers who were discussing the situation at the beginning of the conflict. When the collapse came, an American citizen aided her in escaping from the infuriated French people who, like herself, had clamored for the war, but were maddened by defeat. She found refuge in England, where she has spent most of her time during the past thirty years. It has been a time of sorrow and sadness for her. First came the death of her husband and then of her only son, who fell under the assegais of the Zulus, while fighting under the English flag. Left alone save for the sympathetic company of a few faithful adherents and the friendship of the English Queen, she has had an opportunity of realizing the fleeting nature of the world's highest glories. The childless widow, lying sick in her old age, must surely, as she thinks of her past splendor, feel the truth of the verdict of the preacher:

Vanity of vanities, all is vanity (Eccles. 1 : 2).

EUGENIE, EX-EMPRESS OF THE FRENCH

The Situation in South Africa

The cable dispatches from the scene of war during the week ended February 17, transferred public interest from the east where Gen. Buller is operating, to the west where Lord Methuen is encamped on the Modder River, facing the force which under Gen. Cronje defeated him at Magersfontein. Lord Roberts quietly massed his forces as early as February 9, and on February 12 pushed forward a cavalry division under Gen. French, which crossed the Modder River and attacked the eastern wing of the Boers, who were besieging Kimberley. Cronje appears to have realized that the cavalry were strongly supported, and would, if prompt measures were not taken, get between him and the Orange Free State, thus hemming in his army in a position where he might be compelled to fight or surrender. He, therefore, made a rapid retreat in the direction of Bloemfontein, abandoning the siege of Kimberley. Lord Roberts occupied Cronje's headquarters at Jacobsdaal, while Gen. Kelly-Kenny followed Cronje into the Free State. The Boer commander kept a strong rear guard, which disputed the British General's progress and protected the main body of the Boer army. The retreat, however, appears to have been a very trying one, the oxen being worn out. The British captured a hundred and fifty wagons laden with arms, ammunition and food. Gen. French joined in the pursuit, evidently intending to follow closely on Cronje's rear and compel a battle before the Boers have time to intrench themselves. A rumor was current that the battle had already been fought and that the Boers had surrendered, but the British war office had not received confirmation of the rumor. There is, however, no doubt that the siege of Kimberley has been raised, and that Magersfontein, so strongly held by the Boers, has been occupied by the British, who found that the position had been deserted in such haste that the heavy artillery had been left behind. In the east, Gen. Buller was reported to be making a fourth attempt to relieve Ladysmith. It is still closely invested and the garrison is said to be living chiefly on horseflesh. Gen. White has been informed of the relief of Kimberley and that news may encourage him to hold out still longer. There is also a possibility that when the Boers from the Free State hear of the invasion of their own land, many of them may quit the besieging force to go to the defence of their homes. If a serious depletion of the besiegers takes place, Gen. Buller may succeed in forcing his way through. This change in the situation gives rise to the hope that the end of this deplorable war may not be far off. It is far more likely to come through British successes than through British defeats, because Great Britain's resources, being so vastly superior to those of the Boers, her final success seems inevitable, and every repulse she endures only protracts the conflict. We may hope that at the end she will show the magnanimity that becomes a great and powerful nation in dealing with a weaker one, which has proved itself a foe deserving respect.

Mercy and truth preserve the king, and his throne is upholden by mercy (Prov. 20 : 28).

BRIEF NOTES

The first Christian Endeavor Society in Palestine has been formed at the Friends' Mission, at Ramallah.

Bishop Tucker reports that in the year ending September last, 5,000 baptisms took place in Uganda. Communicants, catechumens and contributions also increased. Public worship is held at some 500 centres.

The pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Eighteenth street and Eighth avenue, New York, Rev. W. McK. Darwood, D. D., has been much cheered by a revival which has come under his preaching. Already seventy persons have made profession of faith.

Rev. N. B. Randall has been holding successful meetings at Andover, N. Y. The meetings were held in the Baptist church, but all the four churches united in the movement. At the closing meeting sixty-five persons testified to the saving power of Christ and many others are inquiring the way to him.

"The House of Fire"

WELL, after that long enchantin' ride through Paradise, at last we reached the place we wuz bound for and put up to the Volcano House, from which a good view of the volcano is seen at night, but nothin' to what it is to stand on its shores. Well, I will pass over all intervenin' incidents, some as the lava duz when it gits started, and draw the curtain on us agin as we stood in front of that awful, majestic, dretful, sublime, unapproachable, devilish, glorious—a thousand times glorious—and not to be forgot till death, sight. Tongue can't utter words to describe it; the pen hain't made, the egg hain't laid to hatch out the soarin' eagle whose feathers could be wrought into a pen fittin' to describe that seen. Why, I have thought when the mash got to burnin' down to the lake it wuz a grand sight; Jonesvillians have driv milds to see it. I have seen upwards of ten acres of the mash burnin' over at one time, and felt awe struck, and so did Sister Bobbett, for we went down together once with our pardners on a buckboard. But, sez I to myself almost instinctively:

"What if Sister Bobbett wuz here? What would she say?"

Imagine a great lake of fire instead of water, waves of burning lava dashing up onto its shores, bustin' way up in the air at times, towerin' pillers of flame, swishin' and swashin', fire and flames, and brimstun for all I know. What—what wuz goin' on way down in the depths below if this wuz the seen outside? So wildly I questioned my heart and Josiah. "Oh, Josiah!" sez I, "what—what a sight! Did I ever expect to witness such a seen? No, oh no," I sez. "What do you spoze is goin' on inside of that great roarin', blazin' monster?" Sez he, "I know what's goin' on inside of me; I know I am jest starvin', faintin' away fur want of food."

"Well," sez I soothin'ly, "when we get back to the Volcano House I will ask for some bread and milk for you."

"Bread and milk!" sez he bitterly. "I want pork and beans, and ham, and biled greens, and chicken pie and Injin puddin'!"

"Well, well," sez I, "be calm. Do jest see them great waves and fields of lava, milds and milds of 'em, once jest melted fire, rollin' on and rollin' on—what a sight!" sez I. On one side wuz a sort of a high terrace, over which the fiery flames had fell and hardened into solid waves lookin' some as our Niagara would look if her flowin' waters should suddenly harden as they flowed. I pinted it out to Arvilly, who wuz by my side. Sez I, "Do look at that! It seems as if Nater had jest hung up that stupendous sheet there and writ on it the word Glory! Unapproachable glory and magesty!"

Sez Arvilly dreamily, "If I could jest dig out in that smooth lava the words:

'THE TWIN CRIMES OF AMERICA— INTEMPERANCE AND GREED.'

and train the volcano to run blazin' fire into the mould, what a advertisement that would be for my book, or for the Wild, Wicked and Warlike Deeds of Man. It would help the sale of both on 'em tremendously."

And I sez, "Don't try to train no volcanos, Arvilly; you would find them worse to handle than any man you ever tackled."

"Well," sez she dreamily, "I believe it could be done."

"OH, JOSIAH," SEZ I, "WHAT A GRAND SIGHT!"

Robert Strong and Dorothy stood clost together, he a-protectin' her, as I spozed. 'Tennyrate he seemed dretful careful where she stepped and how and when, and she looked up real confidin' and sweet into his face, and then, awe-struck and wonder smit, down into the burnin' lake below. The Englishman and Scotchman had gone on a little nigher to it, with the guide. Hale-mau-mau (House of Endless Fire), well did the nativ name it. Well, it wuz long before we tore ourselves from the sublime seen, and dremp of it all night. I see Josiah bore from me on the lava flood, and then ag I wuz swep' from him and dashed up on a billow of flame, and visey ve sey, versey visey. I had a dretful night, and got up twice ar looked out of the winder on the grand spectacle. But towar mornin' I had a beautiful vision: my pardner and me w bore back to Jonesville, and sot in our own do yard under a spreadin' geranium tree, and Sist Bobbett stood admirin'ly before me with tea-cup in her hand, beggin' for a slip fro the immense branches. It wuz a swe dream, and I waked up refreshed. We one week later we found ourselv agin on the boundless deep, the broa Pacific, bound for the Philippine How fur off from Jonesville did seem as I thought on't, but Lov journeyed with me, and Dut Tommy wuz gittin' fat and ros his cough grew better every da and he looked and acted like different child.

This wuz to be a longer vo age than we had took. W layed out to stop to the Philip pines first, and so on to Chin and Japan. It beats all ho soon you settle down an seem to feel as if the gre ship you are embarked on i the world, and the little corne you occupy, your home, spe cially if you have a devote pardner with you to share you corner, for Love can make home anywhere. Arvilly got number of new subscribers an made friends amongst the pa sengers, but Elder Wessel avoide her. And he didn't seem to lik Sister Evangeline. I told him wha I had seen and hearn, for it seeme to me like a olive branch bore int our dark rainy world by a dove of Par dise. But he scoffed at it; he said tha it wuz all imagination. But I sez: "It hain imagination that the poor woman wuz dyin and Sister Evangeline saved her." And he sai that wuz a coincidence, and I said that it wuz pity there wuzn't more such coincidences. An he didn't answer me at all. He wuz settin' straight up on his creed with his leg hangin' off, and he sot straight, no danger of his gittin' off and goin' down amongs the poor steerage passengers and helpin' 'em. He thought he wuz a eminen Christian, but in my opinion he might have been converted over agin withou doin' him any harm.

Studies in the Book of Human Nature

Well, the big world we wuz inhabitin' moved on over the calm waters. Josial read a good deal, settin' in the library with Tommy on his knee. And I reac some myself, but took considerable comfort studyin' the different passengers, som as if they wuz books with different bindin's, some gilt and gay, some dull and solic and some sombry, but each with different readin' inside. One mournful volume, t continue metafor, wuz a widder by the name of Gray. I got real well acquainte with her, she wuz congenial and so onhappy that I pitied her. She wuz in deep mournin', her husband and two boys had died within a year, and her only child lef had enlisted in the Philippine war and lay sick to death in Manila. I told her I hoped that she would find him better, but she didn't seem to have any hopes of him, and sez she:

"Oh, if I only knew my poor boy had someone to talk and pray with him as he lay tostin' on his sick bed, but there is nobody," sez she bustin' into tears.

"Why, I thought that that wuz the chaplain's business," sez I.

"Oh," sez she, "I hear that they don't have chaplains in the Philippine army now."

Sez I, "I can't believe that, when the head of the army is a Methodist," sez I, for I felt considerable madded. "I hope you hain't castin' any aspersions on the M. E. meetin' house" (she wuz a Baptist, she had told me). "I know well enough," sez I, "no Methodist in full standin' would send out a mob of soldiery with no restraining power of religion to curb' em in and comfort and soothe their dying beds;" but Elder Wessel spoke right up and sez, "If it is as Sister Gray sez, you must remember that chaplains are expensive; they have to have their pay, their board has to be considered too and—"

Widder Gray turned pale, and afterwards she told me why. Her two sons who had died got their death-blow in Cuba. They were pattern young men when they went into the army, but got to drinking and carousing in the licensed Canteens, spilte their constitutions, left the army perfect wrecks morally and physically he died in a hospital in Florida and the her before he had been home three onths. I could have cried day after y to see the agony she wuz in. It emed to do her good to talk to me, and let her go on, thinkin' my heart might tter be wracked to pieces hearin' her e, than to have her keep it in and break ght down under it.

A Mother's Prayer

"Oh, if Willie had some good man with m to comfort him, to pray with him, to pe the death sweat from his brow and oint his poor soul to heaven!" She emed to know he wuz going to die, and r worst agony wuz to think he wuz in' alone over the dark divide.

And I sez to her, "Mebby there is chapins there; you never can tell by what u hear." Well, onheedin' her agony, heedin' any of our feelin's or fears, the eat ship ploughed on, takin' us towards hat wuz comin' to meet us onbeknown us. Miss Meechim kep' up pretty well, epin' a good lookout on Dorothy, but stin' her mind on Robert Strong's proction, and Robert and Dorothy seemed enjoy themselves better and better all e time, singing together, and walking and down the deck for hours on pleasit days and matchless nights with the brilliant light of oon and star, and Southern ross, and I didn't know what her light might be shinin on m onbeknown to Miss Meechn, but mistrusted by me.

Elder Wessel, when he wuz ith Lucia, didn't seem to want ything else on earth. She wuz pretty girl, but I could see at she wuz very romantic; she d read sights of novels, and uz lookin' out for some prince disguise to ride up on a hite charger to carry her off d share his throne. But I uld see that if the right influces wuz throwed around her e had the makin' of a noble oman in her, and I hoped she uld grow up a good, helpful oman. She had a great influce over Aronette, whose nater uz more yieldin' and gentle, d I didn't altogether approve their intimacy, but consided that it would be broke f pretty quick, as they would art for good and all when we t to China. You may wonder hy I worried about Aronette; ell the reason wuz, I loved r, jest as everybody else did ho knew her well. She wuz darling girl, always sweet mpered, always trying to help mebody; Dorothy loved her st as much as though she wuz her sister d would have treated her exactly like one if it hadn't been for Miss Meechim. She loved Aronette herself, and showed her love by her goodness, buying her everything she needed and didn't need, but she wuz so hauty naturally that she insisted on Aronette's keepin' her place, as she said. And she wuz so sweet dispositioned and humble sperited she didn't want to do any different. Well, I spoze Miss Meechim wuz right: if Aronette wuz Dorothy's maid it wuzn't to be expected that she would take her visitin' with her, and it wuz Aronette's delight to wait on Dorothy as devotedly as if no ties of love bound their young hearts together. Robert Strong liked and respected her, I spoze mebby on Dorothy's account, and Tommy adored her; why even Josiah felt towards her, he said, some as if she wuz Tirzah Ann growed young agin.

Arvilly's heart she won completely by makin' her a bag to carry the Twin Crimes in. It wuz made of handsome black silk, worked all round in pink silk in a handsome pattern, and she had worked on one side in big letters:

"THE TWIN CRIMES OF AMERICA, INTEMPERANCE AND GREED."

Arvilly almost cried with joy when she gin it to her, and sez to me "That Aronette is the best girl in the hull world and the sweetest. Look at that embroidery," sez she, holdin' up the handsome bag before my eyes, "you can see that as fur as you can see me; that bag alone is enough to sell the book, and I wuz jest wearin' out the agent's copy. There hain't anything in the world I wouldn't do for that girl." Yes, we all loved her dearly, and a dozen times a day we would say to each other what should we ever do without Aronette.

"THEY STOOD CLOST TOGETHER"

Fairy-like Scenes

Josiah wuz seasick some, but not nigh so bad as he thought, and Tommy kept well and happy all the time, and wonnered and wonnered at everything and seemed to take comfort in it, and he would set in his little chair on deck and talk to Carabi for hours, and I d'no whether Carabi wuz enjoyin' the trip or not; I didn't seem to have any way of knowin'. One day Tommy and I wuz lookin' off on the broad blue waters and we see approachin' what looked like a boat with its tiny sail set. It looked so like a boat set out from fairyland that instinctively I thought of Carabi, but a passenger standin' by said that it wuz a Nautilus, and afterwards we see lots of 'em. And the Southern Cross bent over us nights as if to uphold our souls with the thought that our heavenly gardeen would take care on us. And some nights the sea wuz lit up with phosphorescent light into a seen of glory that I can't describe and hain't goin' to let Josiah try to; I hain't a goin' to have that man made light of, and Shakespeare couldn't do justice to it. Low down over our heads the heavens leaned, the glassy waters aspired upward in sparks of flame. The south wind whispered soft, strange secrets to us, sweeping up from the misty horizon. Our souls listened—but shaw! I said I wuzn't goin' to try to describe the glory and I hain't.

Elder Wessel Checkmated

And the ship sailed on. One evenin' there wuz another steamer sighted, most everybody wuz on deck. Sister Evangeline wuz down takin' care of that poor woman and child and the fever patients; Tommy wuz asleep; Josiah wuz readin' the old newspaper he had wropped his clothes in, and which he had treasured fondly. He wuz readin' the advertisements now—Help Wanted and such. I asked him what good them advertisements would do him ten thousands milds from hum, but he said no knowin' what would happen, and anything in the paper wuz good readin'. That man's blind adherence to party has caused me many a forebodin'; it is a menace to good government and public safety, and I've told him so. Well, I santered down into the cabin, and there I found Elder Wessel all alone. He had just been readin' a powerful editorial that coincided with his views exactly, and he leaned back, put a thumb in each armhole of his vest and talked powerful to me about the glorious mission of the United States. "Why," sez he, "this war is the weapon God is usin' to save the souls of the barbarous tribes who inhabit the isles of the sea and carry our glorious Christianity and civilization to 'em." Arvilly had come in onbeknown, and I see her fairly snortin' with indignation. The Elder didn't see her, and he looked off as on a pleasant picter as he said: "Yes, yes, our Christian nation goes to these benighted islands, carrying Christianity and civilization in its hand. Of course they may not ever come up to the hite of our own perfect, matchless civilization, but they will approach it, they will approach it."

Sez Arvilly: "Our nation won't come up to them in years and years, if it ever duz!"

He jumped as if he had been shot; he thought we wuz alone, and sez: "Why—why, Sister Arvilly—you must admit these savages are behind us in knowledge."

"So much the worse for us: the sin of ignorance is goin' to be winked at, but if we know better we ort to do better." Elder Wessel wuz stunted, but he murmured instinctively sunthin' about our carryin' the Bible and the knowledge of heaven to 'em."

Arvilly snapped out: "What good will that do if we carry private hells to burn 'em up before they die? A pretty help that is! What is the use of teachin' 'em about heaven if our civilization makes sure the first thing it duz to keep 'em out of it, for no drunkard shall inherit heaven. What's the use of gittin' 'em to hankerin' after sunthin' they can't have."

"WIDDER GRAY WAS UNHAPPY"

The Elder wuz almost paralyzed, but he murmured instinctively sunthin' about our duty to the poor naked heathen hanging like monkeys from the tree tops, like animals even in their recreation. And Arvilly bein' so rousted up and beyend reasonable reason, sez: "That's their bizness about not bein' clothed, and any way it is jest as the Lord started the human race out in the Garden of Eden, and they do wear enough to cover their nakedness, and that's more than some of our fashionable wimmen do, and 'tennyrate they don't suffer so much as our wimmen do with their torturin' tight shoes and steel instruments of agony bound round their waists, compressin' their vital organs into a mass of deformity.

Elder Wessel wuz so browbeat that he kinder got offen his subject, and with a dazed look he murmured sunthin about "the wicked religion of Cuba when the Americans took it—the Papal indulgences, the cruel bull fights, the national recreations—you could always tell the low state of a nation's civilization by the brutish recreations they indulged in."

Sez Arvilly, in a loud, mad axent, "Talk about brutal amusements, why they ort to send missionaries to America to reform us as fur up in decency as to use animals to fight fur our recreation instead of human bein's. Bulls hain't spozed to have immortal souls, and think how America pays two men made in the image of God so much an hour—high wages, too—to beat and pound and maim and kill each other for the amusement of a congregation of Christian men and wimmen, who set and applaud and howl with delight when a more cruel blow than common fells one on 'em to the earth. And then our newspapers fight it all over for the enjoyment of the family fireside, for the wimmen and children and invalids, mebby, that couldn't take in the rare treat at first sight. Every blow, every cruel bruise that wuz made in the suffering flesh reproduced for Sunday reading. And if one of the fighters is killed and his mangled body taken out of the fighting ring forever, taken home to his wife and children with the comfortin' peticulars that he wuz killed for the amusement of men and wimmen, most on 'em church members, and all citizens of our Christian republic in 1900 by special license of the government, why then the newspapers, which are the exponents of our civilization and the teachers of our youth, have a splendid time gloating over the ghastly story under staring headlines. After all this, talk to me about our country's dastin to have the face to reform any other country's amusement. Our prize fights that our nation gives licenses for its people to enjoy are as much worse than bull fights, in view of America's professions of goodness, as much worse as it would be for an angel to fly down 'lection day amongst a drunken crowd and git drunk as a fool, and stagger round and act with her wings dirty and a-floppin'."

... Under the Evening Lamp ...

By Margaret E. Sangster

Our Dumb Friends

I WONDER how many of us care as we ought for the dumb friends who serve us so faithfully and ask so little of us in return—nothing, in fact, beyond kind care, food, shelter and protection. To ill-treat an animal, which cannot retaliate, seems to me to show a very low state of humanity, and one of which we may well be ashamed. In Ernest Seton Thompson's remarkable book, Wild Animals That I Have Known, he shows a certain kinship between the untamed denizens of the forest—the wild, hunted creatures, wolves, bears, foxes—and ourselves; and just to put new and loving notions into their heads I would like every one of our children to read that book, and also Kipling's jungle books for the same reason. Whatever we may feel about the savage beasts which "seek their meat from God" and must prey upon the defenseless, we cannot but acknowledge our debt and our duty to the horse, the dog, the cat, the donkey, and the birds around our doors. They are our dependents; we can make their lives happy or miserable, and we must answer to their Creator for every act of neglect or positive cruelty which we show them. I hope most of our young people have joined Bands of Mercy or belong to the Audubon Society, or else are in connection with the local associations which have for their object the prevention of cruelty to animals. Each one of us can do our own work, and if each does that, a great many in combination will bring about a general reign of kindness and compassion, which is only just and right. Remember, the unit counts.

Children should be taught kindness to animals by example and precept. Little hands should not be suffered to torture insects, nor small boys permitted to be unkind to stray cats and dogs. Every child should have the care of some pets, for whose comfort and well-being he is held responsible—pets who will be his dear companions. A boy is the better for having a dog, or if his home be in a crowded city, where dogs have no room to run at freedom, he should have his little friend in Madame Puss. I shall speak of this again before long in another view of the case—the economic aspect—but to-day I want you to read this suggestive story, which has an appeal for many readers, a story told by Octave Thanet, and a bit of her experience, well and simply told. It might almost be headed

"LEND A HAND"

I have always been sensitive to cruelty to animals; therefore one day, some years ago, when I heard the unmistakable sickening thud of blows and a furious voice, I ran to the door. I saw there what I had expected—two horses with quivering nostrils, frightened eyes and straining wet flanks, a loaded wagon fast in the mire, and a man with a heavy whip lashing the horses in vain. On the sidewalk, either side of the muddy street, stood half a dozen advisers, and advisers and man had lost their tempers.

"Don't beat those horses," cried a woman, "or I'll call the police!"

"It's a wicked shame to be so brutal," exclaimed another; "you will kill the horses!"

"Say, you'll never get out without unloading, or another pair of horses" — this from a man, between the puffs of his cigar.

An undistinguishable chorus of pity and indignation made a background for these louder remarks, and even through my own anger I had a perception that the man was getting a drubbing as well as the horses. Not a word did he say except to his horses. But he heard, and he grew more furious every minute. One of the poor beasts tugged with all his strength at each shout; the other had apparently abandoned the effort in despair, and gave no sign, beyond a tremor of his limbs when the lash fell.

I felt a sting of pity and anger at the sight; and then I saw my brother coming down the street—my muscular brother, who had recently returned from a German university, and who was as sensitive to cruelty as I was myself. I called, "Oh, Nat, come here!"

He came, took in the situation in one quick glance, and then, instead of the stern reproof I had expected, he shouted in a positively friendly tone, "Want a little help?"

The man nearly dropped his whip; he stared sullenly at the speaker, but with a new expression. In a minute my brother had turned up the bottoms of his new light trousers, had found two boards, and somehow got all the men on the sidewalk behind them prying the wagon out of the hole, and without another blow the horses pulled it safely over the bad place on to firm ground.

"Another time you get into the mud," my brother said, cheerily, "don't whip the horses; get the fellows on the sidewalk behind your wagon to help you."

"Well, I'm very much obliged to you," said the man. "I guess I got madder than I needed to."

I have never forgotten the episode, and many a time have I rescued a beaten animal by using the same plan.

Once, after a teamster and I, on a country road, had together pried a wagon out of the mud, I said, "Now you'll remember next time, won't you, that a stick on the wheel is better than a whip on your horse's back?" and we both smiled as he answered, "Yes, lady, I will; but I guess I'd have gone on licking the mules if you'd 'a' scolded me instead of lending a hand."

AMONG THE POTS AND PANS

Among the Pots and Pans

The tidy little French-woman, sitting beside her door and polishing her pans and spiders and skillets till they vie with silver in their resplendent shining, is not outdone by our American housekeepers, though they compare very favorably with her. Some notable matrons will tell you that cake and pie pans must not be too highly polished, that they bake better if less carefully burnished, though they must be immaculate in their cleanliness. But I, for one, like to see a spotless kitchen adorned with rows of glittering utensils, hanging on the wall like shields in the hall of a knight of old. How much of your time must be spent in the kitchen, and how little worth the parlor would be if the other, the foundation, were neglected. No young woman can be called well educated, even if she has gone through our finest universities, unless she is past-mistress of all kitchen arts, including culinary lore, and can deftly and gracefully manipulate her pots and pans.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—KEZIAH. If you do not like your own name, and are sure you never will enjoy it, don't give it to the baby.

—DAVID C. S. It was delightful to receive such a manly letter from one of my boy friends. I think you will be a great help to your mother when you are older, and indeed I am very sure you help her and auntie now. I am glad you like to take care of your chickens.

—JENNY P. L. G. I fancy the young man's attentions have been only friendly and that they have not meant that he was in love with you. Maintain a dignified attitude and don't pine away, nor go about drooping and sorrowful as if you had lost something precious. One cannot lose what one has not had.

—ELIZABETH H. Your letter interests me very much, because I feel just as you do upon the subject. But your family peace is of paramount importance, and as your husband is a Christian, and the welfare of his children as dear to him as to you, I would not advise your opposing him and them on a question of amusements. After all, the individual conscience must always decide which are right and which wrong recreations for a Christian. Try by tactful means to introduce other pleasures into your home, and do not magnify the one you do not approve of by making it a subject of contention.

—IRENE P. Many wealthy women in these days engage the services of a private secretary, but they seldom have to go outside their family connection to find one. Every rich household has relatives not so well off as they might be. A secretary must be a gentlewoman, well-bred and amiable. She must be intelligent obliging and prompt; must write a good and legible hand, and spell well. The position is desirable and is usually very well paid. It may or may not include a home. Visiting secretaries go to their employers at specified hours, and are paid by the hour. Others receive a monthly salary.

MY HEAVENLY FRIEND

My Lord comes down, so friendly, free
And all my pain beguileth—
And when I weep, he weeps with me,
And when I'm glad, he smileth.

Before I felt his love at first
I grieved him oft in blindness;
But now, of all my wounds, 'tis worse
To turn against his kindness.

And blessing thus my life's estate—
Dark days or sunshine vernal—
He'll not desert me at the gate
That leads to life eternal.

—From Poems, by William Nye Smith.

Parents and Teachers

PARENTS and teachers must co operate, if they wish their childre whom they are jointly concerne in educating, to make progres and develop sincere and noble cha acter. Just as nothing in the family i so hurtful to children as opposition be tween father and mother, so any clash ing or antagonism between the schoo room and the home is exceedingly unfo tunate in its effect on pupils. Occasion ally a young girl is convinced that he teacher is unfair to her, that she i not treated as her merits deserve, an she tells some story of insubordination o impertinence in class, which an indu gent father will hear without reproof perhaps with an amused smile. All thi is very bad for the young persons, boy o girl as it may be, and singularly unjus to the teacher, who, it is presumed is working for the child's best interests In the child's presence, in every such in stance, the better way would be to spea gently and soothingly, regretting that an opportunity for censure in the schoo room had been given, and saying, "i must be that there is a mistake; you teacher would not willingly show par tiality or be unfair, and teachers hav great responsibility and very difficul tasks, and are often very tired. I wi see and talk with your teacher about it i a day or two."

The parents' duty is not ended here It is his or her place, usually hers, be cause the mother has the greater com mand of her time, to investigate, to as certain whether or not her child is doin as he should, whether or not the teache is in sympathy with the child, or is de manding what is unreasonable. Ther are many cases where a quiet and firm remonstrance is in order, but the teache should know that the child is not aware o this. The teacher's position to the chil is that of parent for the time; the autho ity of the one is delegated to the othe and the child should equally respect bot teacher and parent.

The Stepchild's Side

We have discussed the stepmother' position from several points of view. I may be interesting to quote from a lette written by a stepdaughter:

"I was seventeen years old when m dear mother died and left me to tak charge of the family, four younger chi dren, one of them a baby being throw on my hands. I managed the house an the children, gave up my whole time an thought to my father, did not go out wit girls of my own age, and devoted mysel to my duties. When I was twenty-on my father, suddenly as it seemed to me decided to marry again, and brough home his second wife. I am now oblige to take the second place and to be over ruled by her, and she is only three year my senior. Do you wonder that I fee badly? What is there left to me?"

The question is open for discussion. I would seem as if the young lady wer much more free to live her own life through this action of her father's, an that she were relieved of a great deal o care and responsibility, and also that sh and her stepmother might be friends being nearly of the same age. But ever such situation has its difficulties and hard ships. As this is the first stepchild wh has spoken, her words deserve attention

Canvassing a City For Christ

8,000 House-to-House Visitors Taking a Religious Census in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA has always been foremost in good works. She is fortunate in possessing a large number of Christian laymen who apply to their religious effort the same business sagacity and enterprise that they use in their ily business. An undertaking of even reater magnitude than her last summer's vangelistic campaign is the religious cen- s of the city in a single day. By the listment of an army of workers of eight ousand persons, certain statistics con- rning all of Philadelphia's million and a arter of inhabitants will be placed at e service of the churches.

The Philadelphia County Sabbath chool Association is directly responsible r this movement. Through its agency, e State Superintendent of House-to- ouse Visitation, Mr. Hugh Cork, has en brought to the city to superintend e details of the canvass. In connection th the officers of the Sunday School ssociation—who are Rev. Wallace Mac- ullen, D. D., president; Mr. Richard Wallace, secretary and Wm H. Scott, easurer—a special committee, of which r. George W. Bailey is chairman, has en appointed to carry on the census. he city has been divided into eighteen stricts, with a leading Christian layman the chairman of each district. These strict chairmen in turn have one hun- ed and thirty-seven sub-district chair- n who direct the canvassers.

The systematic character of the work the first thing to impress a person who quires into it. The committee not only es large maps of the general territory be covered, but it even has diagrams each block of houses in the city. The my of workers go forth, each of them ovided with a diagram of the territory be covered, and on this diagram every use has been indicated. The workers re instructed to operate in pairs, each ir having about sixty houses to canvass. he questions asked at the homes vis- d were to be the number in the family o are members of church or Sunday hool, the number of children, church eference, if any, etc. These visitors rry no literature, and do no mis- onary work, as that term is commonly derstood, their sole object being to ther information for the later uses of e churches. It is hoped that shortly ter the canvass there will be placed the disposal of every pastor in town full statement of all the persons with- i his parish who are not members any church, and have no church pref- nce; and also of those who express a eference for his church or denomination.

A noteworthy feature of this house-to- use visitation is the remarkable unanimity with which the workers have volunteered and churches have co-operated. Absolutely every Christian denomination and organization in the city has agreed to co-operate in the taking of the census. An advisory committee, consisting of forty-four representatives of the denominations and Christian organizations—from the Episcopal Church to the Salvation Army—has been appointed. Not a single person who was asked to serve on this committee declined to do so. Even the Catholic church cordially endorses the census. Philadelphia has never before seen so complete and effective a union of her religious forces.

Pastor Sheldon's Experiment

Suggestions for His Christian Daily Newspaper Coming in from All Quarters

IF the volume of correspondence which is now rolling in upon Rev. Mr. Sheldon be accepted as an indication of the steady increasing interest in his experiment of publishing a Christian daily newspaper, there will be a veritable mountain of letters upon his desk when he assumes his editorial duties on March 13. A very large proportion of his mail contains suggestions as to topics to be discussed, evils to be attacked, and abuses to be exposed. Many such letters have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and forwarded to Mr. Sheldon at Topeka, Kan. Following are some of the topics submitted by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for treatment in The Capital under Mr. Sheldon's management:

"Intemperance" and "War," Mrs. W. N., Butler, Pa.

"Drunkenness and Treating," "Presidential Violation of the Constitution," "Farming as a Christian Calling," "Good Roads," W. H. C. McM., Alleghany City, Pa.

"Dispensary or Prohibition," A. P.W., Bishopville, S. C.

"Christ's Secular Friends," Henry E. P., Iowa City, Ia.

"Unity in Christian Work" and "Concert of Prayer," F. J. B., Philadelphia.

"What is the Soul?" F. B. A., Sharon, Mass.

"Socialism and the Competitive System," Charles A. Lopp.

"Secret Orders a Hindrance to Christianity," Subscriber, Noble, Ind.

"Amusements," A. H. M., Luton, Ia.

"The Best Plan for a Union of Temperance Organizations," Mrs. S. C. W. C., Burnside, Pa.

"Profanity," Mrs. Cornelia D., Conaquenessing, Pa.

"Card Playing," Subscriber, Morristown, N. J.

"Publish a Sunday Edition Also," S. Wiggins, New York.

"Difference Between Lies and Stories of Fiction," G. B. S., Indianola, Neb.

These are only a few from among many hundreds of topics that have been suggested to Mr. Sheldon, the list embracing a wide variety of subjects, frank discussion of which, in the true spirit of the Master, would be hailed with joy by Christians everywhere and might be productive of lasting benefit to society.

"What would Jesus do?" is the test question which Mr. Sheldon proposes to apply to every matter which comes up for editorial discussion in The Capital's columns, and by this standard all current events and topics of the day, whether local, State or national, will be judged. Everywhere his experiment will be watched with interest. As announced in last week's issue of this journal, all CHRISTIAN HERALD readers who wish to subscribe for The Capital during the six days of Pastor Sheldon's editorship, can have the entire six issues of that paper mailed to them by sending their names and addresses, with 25 cents in cash, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, to reach us not later than March 10.

As this edition goes to press, the following telegram comes to us from Mr. Sheldon:

TOPEKA, KANS.

LOUIS KLOPSCH, "Christian Herald," N. Y.

DEAR BROTHER:—I thank you for your telegram concerning the Christian daily. Will you please ask your many readers to pray that wisdom may be given to all those who are connected with the paper, so that the Kingdom of God on earth may derive all the glory.

CHARLES M. SHELDON.

"Do Not Call Me Back"

It is given to some of those who die to get a glimpse into the new life before, as was the case when Mr. Moody revived from a supposed sinking spell, and was told by his son that he had been sleeping. Mr. Moody replied: "I have been within the gate; earth is receding, Heaven is opening, God is calling me. Do not call me back."

Within the gates he calleth me
Away from earthly sorrows free
In blissful fellowship to be,
"Then do not call me back.

Earth is receding from my sight
And heaven is opening clear and bright
With sounds of welcome and delight,
"Then do not call me back."

I have been sleeping—now I wake
The bliss celestial to partake;
The dawn of heaven doth on me break,
"Then do not call me back."

The vail is rent, my soul is free
Oh! blissful immortality.
Abundant entrance mine shall be,
"Then do not call me back."

I've kept the faith, my race is run;
The journey's past, the labor done;
The battle fought, the victory won,
"Then do not call me back."

Consumption, Bronchitis and Bronchial Asthma

Diseases which Cause Almost as Many Deaths as Consumption.

BY DR. ROBERT HUNTER.

A cold settling on the chest or grippe that goes down to the lungs produces bronchitis, and when it has continued for several months it becomes chronic bronchitis.

There is at first only trifling cough in the morning with slight chilly feelings, followed by a sense of feverishness towards evening. Walking rapidly or going upstairs cause shortness of breath with a general sense of tightness and oppression in the chest.

As the disease advances the patient begins to raise yellow, or greenish-yellow matter; has hectic fever and night-sweats and loses in flesh and strength. From this point, unless arrested by treatment, it goes on rapidly, soon exhausts the vitality and causes death with symptoms closely resembling consumption and yet not consumption at all.

By careful observation extending through many years, I am confident that fully two-fifths of all the deaths charged to consumption are really deaths by consumptive bronchitis. On examining the sputum and the tissues of the lungs in these cases, we find neither tubercles nor the bacilli germs that are always present in true consumption.

This is a most important fact, for bronchitis is much easier to cure than consumption, every case being curable if properly treated. It is only a seated, chronic inflammation of the mucous lining of the air tubes, and at the worst is as certainly curable in the lungs as such inflammation in any other part of the body.

Consumptive bronchitis is not curable by medicine given by the stomach, nor by those hyperdermically injected, for they never reach its seat. It is only by the direct application of medicines to the lining of the bronchial tubes in the lungs that cure is ever effected. The disease is not in the stomach, nor in the blood, but in the lining of the lungs, and there the remedies must be applied.

Nothing but a direct application of healing medicines, antiseptics and germicides to the very seat of the disease will effect the cure of this or any other lung case, and they can be applied only by inhaling them in a gaseous state. The lungs constitute an air cavity, and can be reached medicinally only by medicated air. This treatment was discovered, perfected and first successfully applied by me. It is the only natural, scientific and commonsense treatment ever applied for the cure of bronchial and consumptive diseases. If it fails, nothing else could possibly succeed. But it never does fail, unless mortal injury to the lung structures has taken place before it is applied.

TESTIMONIALS.

Death of a Veteran

Dr. W. H. Green, of Princeton, Passes Away After a Long Life of Distinguished Service

NEWS of the death of Dr. Green, of Princeton, will be received in the homes of clergymen in all our States and in many foreign lands with the deep sorrow that is seldom awakened save by the death of a beloved father. To many a minister he was dear as a father and was reverenced with real filial feeling. For more than fifty years he has been the friend as well as the instructor of the men who fill our pulpits, enjoying their respect and affection. They will feel that a prince has fallen in Israel and will deplore the bereavement which has fallen on the Church of Christ. All the more will his loss be felt, because those who reverenced him most, believe that there is serious need for such men in these times. Their number grows less year by year and their places are not filled; for Dr. Green, though a ripe scholar, belonged to the old school and was a stalwart opponent of the higher criticism. From the time when Bishop Colenso startled the public by his bold theories, to the day when Dr. Green laid aside his pen forever, that pen had been busy in defence of the orthodox faith, and its power had been all the greater because of the kindliness with which it was wielded.

William Henry Green came of a distinguished family. One of his uncles was Chancellor of the State of New Jersey; another was Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals; while a third, a wealthy merchant, won enduring fame by the magnificence of his gifts to philanthropic enterprises and to education. The future professor was educated at Lafayette College and graduated at the early age of sixteen. Seldom has any college turned out a student so youthful who had made attainments so brilliant. It was his intention to proceed at once to Princeton for his theological course, but Lafayette urged its claims upon him and he was induced to remain for two years as a professor. In 1846 he had completed his studies in the seminary at Princeton, and though only just past his majority, was offered the post of Instructor in Hebrew. He accepted it and also undertook pastoral work as the stated supply of the Second Presbyterian Church of Princeton. Three years later he resigned to accept a call from the Central Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. But though a preacher of rare power, his strength lay in his teaching capacity, and at the end of a successful pastorate of ten years, he returned to his beloved college as Professor of Oriental and Old Testament Literature. From that time until his death, on February 10, he was the most prominent of the Princeton faculty.

Dr. Green had the gratification that few men enjoy so fully as he, of knowing how highly he was honored in the religious world. In 1868 the Presidency of Princeton was offered to him, but was declined. Rutgers College conferred on him the degree of LL. D., Princeton gave him the degree of D. D., and the same degree was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh. In 1891 the Presbyterian Church elected him to the highest office in its gift, that of Moderator of the General Assembly. But the highest tribute to his scholarship was the one paid him in his appointment as Chairman of the American Committee of Revisers of the Old Testament, the duties of which were long and arduous. He leaves behind him many valuable works, the best known of which are: The Argument of the Book of Job Unfolded; Moses and the Prophets; The Hebrew Feasts in Relation to Recent Critical Hypotheses Concerning the Pentateuch; The Unity of the Book of Genesis; The Higher Criticism of the Pentateuch; and A General Introduction to the Old Testament.

A Child's Beautiful Faith

MRS. JULIA D. KILPATRICK, a reader of this journal, residing at Madison, Neb., contributes this most touching anecdote of the early evangelistic career of the late Dwight L. Moody:

Your anecdotes of the life of Moody caused me to look through the diary kept by my father, Rev. H. Geer, while in City Point at the close of the war in the employ of the Christian Commission. At the conclusion of a very interesting meeting, attended by a large number of soldiers, a young man (Dwight L. Moody), came to the front of the platform with two small Bibles in his hands, which he said were to be given to two soldiers who would promise to comply with certain conditions, which he would state after telling a little story connected with these Bibles. There lived in Chicago, he said, a poor widow with two little girls. The father had been killed in the war. One day, the older little girl found her mamma crying, and throwing her arms around her neck she begged to know what made her feel bad. The mother told the child that her papa was dead and they were very poor and had nothing to eat; she didn't know where they were going to get any bread. The little one looked into her mother's face and asked "doesn't God know about it?" The mother replied "Yes." "Well, doesn't he care and won't he give us bread if we ask him?" "Why, yes," said the mother. "Can't we go and ask him then?" said the little girl. She led her baby sister into the next room beside the crib and they knelt down. The mother followed and listened to the prayer. "Oh, God," said the little supplicant, "we are poor and papa is dead and we haven't anything to eat. Won't you please send us some bread for Christ's sake? Amen." She went to her mother after the prayer and said: "Don't cry any more, mamma, for God will send us something to eat."

A short time after these events, Mr. Moody heard of the destitution of the family and carried them a basket of provisions. When the little girl saw the food, she cried out: "There, mamma! Didn't I tell you God would take care of us!" Mr. Moody found employment for the mother, and the little girls who were very much interested in soldiers, because their papa was a soldier, began to save every penny they could earn to help the soldiers in every way. When they had saved seventeen cents apiece, they took it to Mr. Moody and asked him what they could do with it to help the soldiers. Mr. Moody bought the two Bibles—cheap editions—and the little girls asked him to take them to the soldiers and give them to two who would promise to give their hearts to God. There was a solemn hush through the vast assembly after the recital of the story. Then Mr. Moody asked if there were two soldiers present who were ready to comply with the conditions. Quite a number rose, and two went forward to receive the Bibles, after which they knelt and gave themselves to God.

Samantha and Liliuokalani

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Dear Editor:—In February 14 issue I was very much delighted to see a picture of Queen Liliuokalani. While traveling across the continent in November, 1898, I had the pleasure of seeing the Queen, as she was on our train for two days, and stopped off at Salt Lake City the same day I did.

On the platform of the depot in Salt Lake City she was met by some of her former household servants. I noticed one in particular, who got down on her knees, kissed the Queen's hand, and was about to kiss the hem of her dress, when the Queen took her by the hand, lifted her to her feet, and kissed her. The whole scene was very impressive and was witnessed by a great number of people.

She spent the day in Salt Lake City, being entertained at the hotel by her friends, and in the evening she continued her journey to Washington to see President McKinley in behalf of her lost kingdom.

I may add that I am real glad Samantha did not kiss the Queen. SUSAN.

Unnatural Hunger

A Sure Sign of Hidden Dyspepsia.

"It was necessary to eat dinner at 11 o'clock," says Mrs. C. F. Ollman, 1131 Preston St., Rockford, Ill., in order to have strength to prepare the noonday meal for the family.

"While I was drinking coffee I felt so faint at 11 o'clock that I was unable to proceed with the work unless I had lunch. If I missed the 11 o'clock meal, I was attacked with a severe sick headache.

"My complexion at that time was a sight, great blotches appearing on my face, and I was so nervous I could sleep but a few minutes at a time, and would wake in the morning more tired than when I went to bed.

"Our grocer called my attention one day to Postum Cereal Coffee. This was about three years ago. I immediately quit the use of coffee and took up Postum having it prepared properly. The change produced a remarkable result. In a week or two I was able to leave off the 11 o'clock lunch and take my dinner in the regular way with the rest of the family. My blotchy complexion disappeared and a natural complexion took its place. Now I can go from morning until night without a meal, if I desire, and no headache or inconvenience of any kind appears. I sleep sound as a baby, and my kidney trouble, which was more than serious, has entirely disappeared.

"A lady friend was recommended to try Postum, and a short time after, told me she was disgusted with it for it had no taste. I asked her if she boiled it carefully fifteen minutes after the real bubbling commenced. She said no, and in reply to another question, said she used only one heaping teaspoonful to the cup. I explained to her that she must use two heaping teaspoons to the cup and let it boil long enough. The next time I saw her she said she used Postum regularly and liked it very much indeed, and that it had made a great change in her health and the health of one or two members of her family."

It seems plain, from this experiment, that one is justified in the inference that coffee is an actual poison to many human beings, and sets up all sorts of diseases. The remedy is plain enough—to abandon the coffee and use Postum Food Coffee, which is sold by all grocers at 15 and 25 cents a package.

A Life of Christian Service

JUDGE ENOCH LEWIS FANCHER, who died Feb. 9 in New York City, had been connected with the American Bible Society, first as manager, then as president, for a period of forty years. Any man serving God and his fellows in such wise has a profound hold upon the interest of our aders, and Judge Fancher's history and aracter are not unfamiliar to them: but this hour of his departure they will be ad to refresh their memories with some tailed account of the life of this good d true man, who died full of years and nors. That he was a true citizen and rhteous man of business is worthy of rord and memorial; that he was an einent lawyer and jurist, commands ther attention; but that he used his gts and acquirements to further the giv- it of God's Word to the multitude—this is that builds him an indestructible nument in human hearts and lives.

Dr. Fancher was born Jan. 10, 1817, in Ptchess Co., N. Y. His father was Smuel Newman Fancher, a farmer of od standing and large influence in his rghborhood, whose dwelling was known a "the preachers' home," for its hospable doors were ever open to wayfarin ministers of the Gospel; and so Foch grew up in an atmosphere of worsp and service. As a lad he heard contually at his father's fireside reading o the Scriptures, exhortations and pyer in the voices of men to whom relion was a vital truth and the Bible the nst precious and sacred of books. Little nder that he was ready to lend his nnhood's energy and talents to sending t Bible to those who had it not. His ecation began in the local schools; ws continued in Poughkeepsie; from Poughkeepsie he came to New York City, al here commenced that struggle for bsiness success in which he come out vtor, in spite of the fact that he had had nther friends nor money to help him n he start. Temperance, honesty, frugity, a Christian character and unrenting work made up his capital; and wo will say that such capital is not a bter foundation for any young man's s cess in life than any bank account his fher can give him? It was sufficient fo this young man. He climbed rapidly frn the lowest rung in the ladder to a p ition of distinction and influence; his zal in spiritual and philanthropic work a ays keeping pace with his application a enterprise in business matters. At tl time of his death he was president of th New York Institute for the Instructin of the Deaf and Dumb, president of th New Windsor Fresh Air Fund and psident of the Board of Trustees of St. Pal's M. E. Church.

His election as a justice of the Supreme Court in 1872 was a tribute not only to his forensic ability, but to his high integrity: such also was his appointment by Governor Dix, in 1874, to the post of legal arbitrator of the New York Chamber of Commerce. He was married in early manhood to Miss Mary A. Nicoll, of Windsor, where he has had a summer residence for many years. His dwelling, like his father's, was always the preacher's home. Mrs. Fancher died twenty-five years ago. There were no children; but his wife's niece and his adopted daughter, Mrs. William H. Harris, mourn the loss of one who had truly been as a father to her. Funeral services were held at his New York home, 141 Madison avenue, his pastor, Rev. Dr. George P. Eckman, officiating.

The following stanza from a poem written by Judge Fancher some years ago was appropriately read:

On faith's triumphal wing
We view that home above,
Where saved and happy spirits sing
The melodies of love.
From that ecstatic throng
Glad anthems fill the skies,
And o'er the plains of heaven prolong
Their choral harmonies.

In 1859 he became a member of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, and in 1885 its president. During this period, "his legal and personal services," as stated in The Bible Society Record, "given without thought of compensation, were of immense value to the Society, especially in the delicate questions relating to legacies. Above and beyond any special service, his best service has been the constant influence in its counsels of a rich and well-stored mind, animated by a pure and loving zeal for God and all things good, 'for he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith.'"

In its eighty-four years of existence, the Society has issued about 7,000,000 Bibles; and the Scriptures, in almost every tongue that is spoken, have been carried by its colporteurs to almost every corner of the globe. Mule-back and man-back, as well as in ships and railroad cars, these Bibles, printed in New York, have found their way, over seas and across rugged hills and desert wastes, to those who sat in darkness crying for light.

"Ye Must Be Born Again"

JOHN 3.

NICODEMUS, Nicodemus, chief in Israel;
Nicodemus, Nicodemus, mark this message well:
"If God's Kingdom man would see,
He a creature new must be."
Marvel not; I say to thee:
"Ye must be born again."

Nicodemus, Nicodemus, flesh but flesh doth yield;
Nicodemus, Nicodemus, God hath the Spirit sealed.
They who would be Spirit born
Must of fleshly lusts be shorn:
Then awakes the natal morn.
"Ye must be born again."

Nicodemus, Nicodemus, hear the night wind blow;
Nicodemus, Nicodemus, though its sound you know,
Yet man's wisdom cannot tell
Whence it rose or whence it fell:
So with Spirit-birth as well.
"Ye must be born again."

Nicodemus, Nicodemus, mark this truth I give;
Nicodemus, Nicodemus, "look to Christ and live."
"God so loved mankind that he Sent his Son the Way to be:
He the Light, the Saviour he."
"Ye must be born again."

The Best Chocolate.

When placing on the market the new product Van Houten's Chocolate (for eating) some time ago, the manufacturers had before them the object of offering buyers a nutritive and digestible Chocolate of irreproachable composition, while at the same time more delicious in flavor than any of the already existing kinds; in other words, a Chocolate which, both from the point of view as to health as well as to flavor, should satisfy the most exacting demands. The universal good opinion concerning Van Houten's Chocolate, seems to prove that this object has been attained; and it is recognised as being as superior to other Chocolates, as Van Houten's Cocoa is superior to other cocoas. When travelling, picnicking, or bicycling, it proves of great service.

The Coming Kingdom

Characteristics and Contrasts of the Millennial Reign of Christ

By Rev. William Maude

IT may be truly said of this our sin-stricken world, that, irrespective, of course, of the supreme individual need of salvation, it has four great wants; viz.: considered politically, it wants peace; considered socially, it wants righteousness; considered scientifically, it wants power; and considered intellectually and spiritually, it wants light. Let us look at the second of these, as it will be met in the millenium.

Peace is the flower of which righteousness is the root; morally there is an inseparable causal connection between them; there can be no real peace either for a man, a nation, or a world, in the absence of righteousness. Accordingly, we find in Scripture an intimate and inseparable connection between righteousness and peace again and again expressed. So Isaiah speaks of a time when "judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And," he adds, "the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever" (Isa. 32:16, 17).

But what is righteousness, and how shall we define it? It comes from two old Anglo-Saxon words signifying right or straight, and wise or prudent. Righteousness, therefore, is keeping to the straight line, pursuing the straight path and avoiding all serpentine deviations therefrom. In like manner, vulgarly indeed, but by the use of a similar analogy, we still speak of acting "on the square," as equivalent to acting uprightly and honestly. So Solomon says, "In the way of righteousness"—the straight open way in which neither robber nor serpent lurks—"is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death" (Prov. 12:28). While concerning Messiah it is divinely declared: "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever: a rod of straightness is the sceptre of Thy kingdom" (Heb. 1:8).

Let us note, then, some of the great forces which will "make for righteousness" in that kingdom of righteousness and peace whereof we speak.

The supreme and universal power and rule will be absolutely and divinely righteous. "Behold," says Isaiah, "a King shall reign in righteousness." And this King is none other than the Lord Jesus himself; for Zechariah says, "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one" (Zech. 14:9). Of his solemn investiture, Daniel had a sublime revelation when he "saw in the night visions, and, behold One like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. 7:13, 14).

Now concerning this King it is said, "He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. And righteousness also shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins" (Isaiah 11:3–5). While of him the Psalmist sings, "The Lord shall endure forever, he hath prepared his throne for judgment; and he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness. The Lord also will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of troubles" (Psalm 9:7–9).

And if this were all, what an unspeakable blessing would it prove to the world! An absolute monarchy is undoubtedly the only perfect form of human government, but it involves the possession and exercise of a power which cannot with safety be intrusted to any fallen man. But to his Son, God can with divinest confidence say, "Thy throne, oh God, is forever and ever," because he can add, "Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows" (Heb. 1:8, 9).

Again, how profoundly would it affect the conduct of men toward their fellows, whether inferior or superior in station, to know that there was on earth and within reach a Supreme Authority, not only armed with irresistible power, but whose decrees were infallibly true and incorruptibly righteous; and which was, moreover, accessible to the poor as well as the rich, to the servant as freely as his employer, nay, which made the former his special care, seeing that it is written, "with righteousness shall he judge the poor," and will be a "refuge for the oppressed." What a blessing, I say, would this be to the world; how completely would it alter the complexion and constitution of all human society. "I appeal unto Cæsar," said Paul, when he feared that justice was not to be had at a lower tribunal, though Cæsar did not rule in righteousness. But when the poorest and humblest shall be able to say, "I appeal to the King of kings," how will injustice shrink back appalled and selfishness hang its head in confusion and dismay!

A Pauper's Consecrated Gift

AMONG other contributions lately received by the General Committee recently appointed in New York for aiding in the erection of a great Protestant Memorial Church at Spires-on-the-Rhine was a gift from an aged inmate of the Almshouse on Blackwell's Island, N. Y. Accompanying the gift was a letter from the chaplain of the Almshouse, to Dr. Albert Beyschlag, the representative in this country of the Spires Memorial Committee, in which the writer said:

The history of this dollar may interest you and I believe you will feel with me that it is of more value than many a thousand dollars you may receive. This woman came to my office and said she wanted to give a dollar for your church. Next day, she came in again with a few pennies and said they were to pay the postage as she wished to make the gift complete. You may ask: "Where did she get her dollar?" It was probably the savings of five and ten-cent bits that charitable persons had given her from time to time, or a small monthly pittance which poor hard-working relations in the city may have sent her. It means for her the giving up of her cup of tea or other little luxury. The name of this good woman is Anna B——, and she is a devout communicant of our church and a constant attendant at its services.

In the New York Committee for the Spires Memorial Church movement are such eminent names as those of K. Buenz (German Consul-General), W. E. Dodge, F. W. Holls, Morris K. Jessup, Seth Low, Geo. H. Moller, J. P. Morgan, Maurice L. Muhleman, Oswald Ottendorfer, A. Pagenstecher, Whitelaw Reid, Herman Schaeffer, Chas. A. Schieren, Gustav H. Schwab, Samuel Sloan, Spencer Trask and Henry Villard.

Inquiries and contributions may be addressed to Louis Tag, Treasurer, American Tract Society, New York.

A Missionary Inventor

Mrs. Dora W. Miller, of Williamsport, Pa., sends us an interesting piece of information in this letter:

Noticing the item in your last number relating to the jinrikisha, allow me to say: My husband, Philip Miller, formerly Assistant Engineer United States steamer Monocacy, stationed in China and Japan in 1867-8-9, always told me that Rev. Jonathan Goble, a self-supporting Baptist missionary, was the inventor of the jinrikisha. My husband became acquainted with Mr. Goble while lying ill with typhus fever in a British hospital in Yokohama in 1868, and they became fast friends. On their visit to this country in 1872 he and his wife visited us. I remember that Mrs. Goble had come here before her husband for medical treatment, so the idea of the jinrikisha having been invented for her may be true, although I think it was made before she became ill. Mr. Goble visited us again in 1883, or four years after Mrs. Goble's death, but was nearly blind at that time. The last I heard of this venerable and worthy missionary was at the time of my husband's death in 1896, when he was in a home at or near Philadelphia for aged Baptist ministers. My husband also gave Mr. Goble the credit of being the man who first translated the four Gospels into the Japanese language.

HE LEADETH ME

IN pastures green? Not always; sometimes he Who knoweth best in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows be.

And by still waters? No, not always so;
Oftimes the heavy tempests round me blow,
And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.

But when the storms beat loudest, and I cry
Aloud for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispers to my soul, "So it is I."

Above the tempest will I hear him say,
"Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day,
In every path of thine I lead the way."

So, whether on the hill-tops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valleys where
The shadows lie, what matter? He is there.

A Sunday School Veteran

AMONG the many Bible class teachers throughout the Union whose long and faithful labors have produced an impression upon the spiritual welfare of hundreds of their fellows, few are better known or more highly esteemed than Mr. Russell W. McKee, vice-president of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union and Chairman of the Normal Class Committee. His Sunday School work has extended over more than a quarter of a century. He is now seventy-three, a patriarch in years, but hale and vigorous, and still finding it his delight to serve the Master in the way which, by reason of his peculiarly happy faculty of imparting instruction, has been a most valuable one.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the men's Bible class, of the Throop Avenue Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. McKee is founder and teacher, was recently celebrated in a social reunion of much interest. Mr. McKee gave in brief a record of the class, which has now about sixty on the roll. Many former members, now teachers and superintendents of Sunday Schools were present. Mr. F. R. Hibbard, superintendent of the Sunday School; Mr. Ira Goddard, teacher of the Woman's Bible Class; Mr. C. P. Ellison, assistant teacher of the class, and Rev. L. R. Foote, D.D., pastor, made brief addresses, congratulating Mr. McKee and the class on its long and most fruitful existence, together with testimonials as to members of the class as to its benefits to them.

Since Mr. McKee's work has been so enduring and crowned with such success, some account of its history and methods will doubtless be of practical value and a source of inspiration and encouragement to many earnest young Sunday School teachers numbered among our readers. One fact to be noted is that this successful business man has applied his best talents and energies to Sunday School ministry and has made it in a sense his life-work and profession. Thirty five years ago, he was impressed with the fact that the most important problem of the Sunday School was to know how to keep young men in attendance and to interest them. When he entered upon class work at the Park Avenue Mission, where he was leader for ten years, he determined to solve this problem. It was in 1875 that he took up the work in connection with the Throop Avenue Presbyterian Church, with a Bible class of only four members; at the end of the first year it numbered forty; and soon became a recognized feeder of other Sunday Schools to which it has continually supplied trained teachers and leaders. There have also graduated from its ranks men ready to give their lives to the Master, as ministers and missionaries.

It has always been Mr. McKee's aim to know each member of his class intimately; to be thoroughly familiar with the home and business surroundings of each; to give advice when needed; and to share in the joys and sorrows of each and all. His own statement is that he regards the following elements as essential to success in this work: Punctuality, Perseverance, Patience and Prayer; and he has found in his experience the use of the blackboard very valuable in illustrating the lessons weekly, with the topical outline and practical suggestions. The members take a copy and carry it with them for meditation until the next Sabbath, when the illustration is reviewed. No lesson passes without bringing home to the class the thought of Jesus' power to save and to keep all who will trust him, and many conversions have resulted.

In December, 1896, Mr. McKee's seventieth birthday was celebrated in a reunion, much like that which has just occurred, and by the presentation of a loving cup as a testimonial to his worth and faithfulness. In the address made by Mr. Ellison, on behalf of the Bible class, some things were said which forcibly demonstrate the manner in which he gained and kept his hold upon young men; among them this: "We wish to express our appreciation of the sympathy which you have shown us when sickness and death have visited our homes. At such times we were always sure of your friendship. We recall an instance when a member of our class in his last illness would express no desire to see a minister, and you saw him, pressed upon him the Gospel of Christ, and were rewarded before his departure by assurances that he had found the Saviour. We recall with delight those class prayer-meetings, which were marked by such spiritual power and blessing to us and to our homes, especially one night when Jarvis Powell and John and Henry Van Glahn came out for Christ; and we remember the beautiful life of Powell which followed and his triumphant death; and we know of the noble Christian characters of the Glahn brothers, who became, as have many of our band, pillars of strength in their churches. We recall the delightful annual meetings, when our wives and daughters and sweethearts shared with us in the joy of the occasion, and were made glad by the reports they heard concerning us, and incited by pleasant and kindly words to spur us on to greater things." Superintendent and pastor testified to the zeal and efficiency with which he had held up their hands and seconded their labors. He has been an elder in his church for many years. A number of young men, in his business employ as well as in his Bible class, swelled the list of the givers of the loving cup. As a member of the executive committee of the New York State Sunday School Association, Mr. McKee's activities in this branch of work has extended well beyond his own city.

Gospels for the Million

The American Bible Society has just issued from its presses The Four Gospels in very neat and convenient form, the little volume being of pocket size. They are particularly suitable for mission and evangelical work. The type is large and easily read. One style, in leather binding and gilt edges, will be supplied at twenty-five cents, by mail two cents extra. Another, in neat, durable cloth, is sold at fifteen cents, two cents extra for mailing. These may be procured from the American Bible Society, Bible House, New York.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

A slight indefinite pain in the joints is the first sign of Rheumatism. When you feel this warning sign take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and the progress of the disease will be arrested. This remedy acts directly on the blood and nerves and has cured hundreds of cases of rheumatism that have been declared hopeless by physicians.

Such a case was that of Mrs. Mary Rixton, of Barryville, Sullivan Co., N. Y. She says:

"About two years ago I had a severe attack of rheumatism. I suffered acute pain and much inconvenience. Physicians were unable to check the disease, and I was directed to a similar case, which was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. My son bought me some of the pills and the first box did me so much good that I procured another box and those two boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People cured me."

At druggists or direct from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. 50 cents per box; 6 boxes $2.50.

Messages from India

Missionaries Send Grateful Acknowledgments of the Funds Contributed by Our Readers for the Relief of the Starving People

ONE month is required to bring a letter from India to New York. We are consequently now in receipt of the letters from the missionaries to whom we cabled the first remittance of five thousand dollars on Jan. 15. Since that was sent, as our readers are aware, another remittance of ten thousand dollars has been sent by cable, which will doubtless be acknowledged in due time.

Rev. E. S. Hume, of Bombay, to whom was sent the five thousand dollars for distribution among five missionaries, including himself, writes that the money was promptly received and one thousand dollars was at once sent to each of the four missionaries mentioned in our cable dispatch, viz.: Pandita Ramabai, Christina H. Lawson, Mrs. M. B. Fuller and Rev. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar. The fifth thousand Dr. Hume gladly appropriated in the rescue of a large number of orphans, who were in a state of utter destitution. The arrival of the money was, he says, very timely, for a wealthy Parsee, named Nauroji M. Wadia, had just placed at his disposal, rent free, a large house and garden, which are usually rented at three thousand rupees, in order that he might accommodate 300 orphans who are in danger of starvation. Dr. Hume gladly accepted the use of the house, though until the money contributed by our readers reached him, he was unable to feed the waifs. So God works when men are ready to do his will and causes combinations to occur at just the right moment, of events at places more than 10,000 miles apart. The house to shelter the children was provided in Bombay just as the Christian people of America were sending the money to provide the food for them. "With this large house," Dr. Hume writes, "we are in a far better position to care for orphans than we were during the late famine. I shall write ere long more fully in regard to the carrying out of these plans. In addition to the rescuing of orphans we sorely need help for the distressed people around us. Tens of thousands are wandering about the streets, or are camping on open ground in the vicinity of Bombay. The government is exerting itself nobly, but the distress has already assumed such proportions that the government gladly welcomes any help and co-operation from individuals. It is appalling to think of the distress, which is sure to grow greater and greater during the coming weeks. Many expectant thoughts are being turned toward you. The noble service your readers rendered during the last famine can never be forgotten. I am sure they will do all they can for us again in this time of sore need. Thank them in the name of the missionaries in India for all that they have done and are doing and tell them we are praying that God will richly reward them for their tender compassion toward the starving people."

Mrs. M. B. Fuller writes that she had gone to Dr. Hume's house to consult with him about the possibility of doing something for the starving people, when to her astonishment and great joy, she found that he had gone to the bankers to collect five thousand dollars, which had been given by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in America for the purpose. Still greater was her pleasure when on Dr. Hume's return, she was told that she was to have the gratification of spending one thousand dollars of this sum on food for the people in her district. She says:

ORPHANS RESCUED BY THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS IN INDIA

"I want to thank the kind people who contributed the money, and Dr. Klopsch and the editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who made our sad situation known to them. In every part of our field the distress is appalling. Our missionary at Viramgaum in Gujerat, tells me that more than a score have died in front of his house and perhaps hundreds have died on the roadsides in that town. They come there from the native states, and by the time they get there are too far gone to work and lie down to die.

"One old woman with her four sons, two daughters-in-law and three grandchildren came from a long distance, hoping to get relief in some way, and failing to find work and worn and weakened by the journey, became hopeless and one after another died, till all her sons and their wives and two of the children had died, and the poor old woman was sent back with one grandchild to her country. This is only one of many instances of the sights that come to the notice of our missionaries. The living, dying and the dead skeletons are multiplying on all sides now and only God will ever fully comprehend what the suffering of the next months will be. With Christian love to you and all who have had a share in helping us to minister to the suffering people, I am as ever, yours sincerely. M. B. FULLER."

Rev. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, writes: "I do not know how adequately to express my thanks for the thousand dollars received from you through my brother in Bombay. For several weeks we have been longing for some assistance from America. Meanwhile we have advanced money and even borrowed money in order to meet a few of the most urgent calls for help. This generous help contributed by your readers is the first which has come to us. At our weekly prayer meeting last Wednesday the missionaries on this station pleaded with God for the means to deal with this emergency. Unusual opportunities are now occurring to reach high caste women, boys and girls. All that was lacking was the money wherewith to provide for them. So for ten days we have been preparing for this large service, in faith that God would supply us with the means. Now our faith is justified. In sending us the money contributed by your readers you have enabled us to proceed and so God has answered our prayers."

Our readers whose generosity is thus gracefully acknowledged will be thankful that God has enabled them to encourage these devoted workers who have, it appears, been borrowing money to feed the starving people. On page 179 of this issue will be found a list of contributions which have been received.

Rejecting Christ

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for March 11. Mark 12: 1-9

THERE are many ways of rejecting Christ, and one of those ways is described in the Parable of the Wicked Husbandmen which is associated with the topic. This was the way the Jews took—the way of violence and of murder. Christ foresaw that this would be their way and his parable was spoken to set its wickedness clearly before them. They were the spiritual teachers of the world. Such privileges had been given to them as were given to no other nation. No people had such divinely gifted men as arose among them—men sent from God, filled with his Spirit and specially commissioned by him to declare his will. God came nearer to them than he ever came to any other people, both directly and through these messengers. They had many and unusual privileges and their responsibility was therefore proportionately increased. How did they discharge it? Christ shows them in this parable. It was a common course for a vineyard-owner to place it in the hands of a number of men, who agreed to pay as rental a fixed proportion of the product. In this case, God expected from them service as well as holiness of life. When he sent his messengers to demand this of them, they ill-used them and when he sent his Son, they were about to kill him. This was Christ's indictment.

Very wicked of the Jews, must be the universal verdict; but the application of the parable does not end with them. The nations of Christendom in our day are under indictment, too. Is there one that is rendering to God the return that he has a right to expect? The Jewish prophets and teachers address us. They make it clear that God's way of government is to require a proper return for all the advantages to be given. In legislation, in political life, in business life and in social life there ought to be proofs that the nations have profited by the teachings of holy men of God. Yet looking down from high heaven what does God see? In our legislatures, in our courts of justice, in our stores and exchanges and in our homes the signs are very few that we are acting as God would have us act. Corruption, malfeasance in office, defrauding in business and vice in our streets cry aloud to God for vengeance. The men who accept Christ as their King and strenuously endeavor to obey him are a small minority. We are told again and again, that religion and politics should not be mixed and that the business man cannot hope to succeed if he is a consistent Christian. The liquor traffic and the social evil are regarded as necessary evils which cannot be extirpated, but must be tolerated, restricted and curtailed. We are not guilty of killing Christ; but we will not have him to reign over us and this is rejection of him as our King, which is what the Jews did.

Besides this, there is individual responsibility. God has not one law for the nation and another for the individual. He calls for the fruits of the vineyard; and every man has a vineyard that he holds in trust for God. His own heart and life are a trust for which every man must give account. Do the fruits of the Spirit enumerated by the apostle (Galatians 5: 22, 23) flourish there? Do we render to God the blamelessness and the active righteousness that he looks for? Christ still stands at the door and knocks; have we admitted him to reign and rule? Sometimes we turn a deaf ear to him? Sometimes we bid him wait till we have made a fortune. Sometimes we pretend to admit him, but exclude certain parts of our lives from his control. The method of rejection is not so much of a consideration with him, if we do reject him. Though we do not say, "Crucify him!" as the Jews did, we wound him by neglect, by procrastination, by rebellion. "What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do?" The question is one of infinite moment.

"A man is known by his friends." Hood's Sarsaparilla is known by its merit, made clear by the numberless and remarkable cures it has effected. There is no substitute for Hood's.

Rheumatism Completely Cured.

A physician practicing in Olcott, Vt., writes: "Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful remedy for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months, and I have never seen anything like it. I had one patient who had rheumatism all his life, and had taken everything, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, one bottle of which completely relieved him.

I had another patient, an old man who travels much on the road peddling, who was lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail.

THREE BOOKS ABSOLUTELY FREE

Atlas of the World
And City Guide.

This is the most comprehensive and valuable book of its kind ever published. The maps are not cheap prints—they are printed just as finely as those in books 10 or 100 times its size—are all in four and five colors. The maps cover not only the world in a general way, but many of them are in detail, showing the most important points in the whole world which anyone might want to find. In addition to the maps and possibly not less valuable, is a fund of statistical and other facts of great value for daily if not hourly reference. It contains 64 pages 3x6 inches, handsomely bound in imitation leather, and is especially designed for pocket use.

Samantha at Saratoga.

This is Josiah Allen's wife's best book. Contains 272 pages and nearly 100 illustrations, many of the latter by Opper of Puck. Is handsomely bound in stiff paper covers. Is without a doubt the funniest book of the century. Our edition has all the reading matter and illustrations contained in the $2.50 edition.

Comprehensive Webster Dictionary

Contains nearly every word in common usage, and fully answers the purpose of at least three out of every four people. A new device shows the plural forms of all the nouns. Another points out about 5000 especially difficult words; but the greatest of all achievements in modern dictionary making is the addition of 25,300 words to this dictionary by means of a single page, called the "Columbian Word-Builder." It has 12 departments, including a Gazetteer of the World, Letter Writer, Social Etiquette, Punctuation, Postal Guide, etc. It contains 192 pages 3x6 inches, bound in imitation leather covers, and is especially designed for pocket use.

OUR UNPARALLELED OFFERS.

The following offers are absolutely unparalleled in the history of publishing. Farm and Home, our national semi-monthly, now in its twentieth year, is published in four editions—Eastern, Western, Southern and Canadian. The regular subscription price is 50 cents a year, and it is the brightest farm and family paper published. A year's numbers make a volume of over 500 pages. It now has nearly 300,000 subscribers, but in order to introduce our paper into thousands of homes where it is not now taken, we make the following propositions:—

50 cents for 15 cents. We will send Farm and Home six months with either the Atlas or the Dictionary as above described for 15 cents, the books being sent postpaid.

75 cents for 20 cents. We will send Farm and Home six months with both Atlas and Dictionary as above described for 20 cents, the books being sent postpaid.

$1.00 for 25 cents. We will send Farm and Home six months with the Atlas, the Dictionary and Samantha at Saratoga as above described for 25 cents, the books being sent postpaid.

In payment for the above you may send silver or stamps. Each of the books retails for 25 cents postpaid, and Farm and Home alone for six months costs regularly 25 cents.

These Questions Will be Answered April 4.

1. Should church music be confined entirely to such as is promptly recognizable as sacred in its character or may purely operatic airs and sentimental tunes be laid under tribute in public worship?

2. Who is the author of the following lines and in what connection do they appear?

"That book of memory
Which is to grieving hearts as the sweet South
To the parched meadow, or the dying tree;
Which fills with elegy the craving mouth
Of sorrow—slakes with song the piteous drouth
And leaves her calm, though weeping silently!"

3. When were gold and silver first used for coinage?

4. Is there any particular significance in the number twenty-one in the firing of a national salute?

5. To what is the twinkling of the stars due?

6. What is the origin of the order of the "Daughters of the American Revolution"?

7. If I discover valuable minerals under my own land, and in process of digging for them, find that the lode passes the dividing line between my own and another man's property, have I a right to continue mining under his property?

8. What does Christ mean when he says "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil"?

9. What particular evils may the love of money induce in a person?

10. In what way can a person who has very little time at his disposal so read and study the Bible as to get a fairly comprehensive grasp of its contents and character?

Questions of the Week

1. What was the ring of Polycrates?

Polycrates, tyrant of Samos (536–523, B.C.), was so uniformly successful in his undertakings that his friend and ally—Amasis, king of Egypt—warned him to sacrifice something he highly valued to forestall the jealousy of the goddess of fortune. Accordingly he threw into the sea a treasured and beautiful ring. A few days later a fish was presented him, inside of which the ring was found. This led Amasis to break the alliance, as he feared disaster was in store for Polycrates. The conjecture proved true. Samos was subsequently overrun by the Persians and Polycrates was first crucified and then burned to death. R. J. WELCH.

2. What is the comparative speed of the hub and the tire of a wheel when in motion. How are the figures arrived at?

The hub and tire make the same number of revolutions, but the difference in the length of space covered is easily arrived at. Geometry tells us that "two circumferences have the same ratio as their radii." The speed of the hub is to the speed of the tire as the radius of the hub is to the radius of the tire. Their comparative speed may then be obtained by dividing the radius of the tire by the radius of the hub. The same result may be obtained by dividing the circumference of the wheel by the circumference of the hub, but owing to the difficulty of finding the circumference, the above way is better. THOMAS WOOD.

3. Who invented the bicycle?

The origin of the bicycle has, it is claimed, been traced to the fifteenth century, but the beginning of the modern wheel was made by M. de Sivrac, a Frenchman, who, in 1816, made the celeripede. This was composed of two wooden wheels joined by a perch upon which the rider sat with his feet resting on the ground. The machine was propelled by the rider's striding forward and steered by a handle-bar operating on the front wheel. At about this time, Baron Von Drais made a similar machine, the Draisienne. These two clumsy vehicles were improved upon by another Frenchman, Michaux, who, in 1855, invented the crank upon the front wheel. Since then countless mechanics have experimented upon the bicycle until we have the completed wheel of to-day.
L. A. MILLER.

4. What is the origin of the phrase "acknowledging the corn?"

In a Congressional Tariff debate, in 1828, Mr. Stewart (Pa.) said: "Millions are yearly sent to Europe. Americans buying $100 worth of foreign cloth, lace, etc., pay for wool, flax or hemp, bread, meat, etc., consumed. A yard of lace worth $6 is that much foreign stuff. To say a lady carries $6 worth of bacon, beans and cabbage converted into lace is not more strange than Ohio and Kentucky farmers sending hay, grass, corn and other grain to New York and Philadelphia for foreign produce converted into goods." Mr. Wicliffe (Ky.) interposed: "There never was a ton of hay, bushel of corn or other grain sent from Kentucky." "What do they send?" "Horses, cattle and hogs." "Very well, how much grass, grain, hay, etc., does a farmer feed a horse worth $100? Just $100 worth animated, carries this $100 worth of produce to Philadelphia and New York with the owner on top of it. How much of like produce does a fat ox worth $50 carry to the Eastern market? Just $50 worth. And how much does a fat hog worth $10 carry? Just $10 worth of corn!" Here Mr. W. sprang to his feet and exclaimed, "Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the corn!" A. E. HARBAUGH.

5. When was the piano first used, or, what are its origin and history?

Dr. Rimbault traces the first principle of the instrument, the stretched string, to the lyre, and from this it went through the forms of the harp, psaltery, dulcimer, etc. The first marked improvement to the piano appears in the twelfth century, in the transition from the dulcimer to the keyed cithara. Next followed the clavichord for about six centuries. An improvement of the keyed cithara, called the virginal, was very popular in Queen Elizabeth's time. The transitions from the above instruments to the piano appeared about two centuries ago. The invention was claimed in turn by Italians, Germans, French and English, but it is probable that the inventor was Bartolommeo Cristoforo, of Padua, Italy, before 1711. The first piano known in England (about 1757) was made by an English monk in Rome. The first patent for an English piano appears to have been granted to William Stoddart, in 1795. C. R. RUSSELL.

6. What would be a fair average annual expenditure for apparel by a woman in moderate circumstances?

If a woman is clever with her needle and has time to do her own sewing, she may dress neatly on $125 a year. Some women manage to do this on less; others, without being extravagant, require more. It must be borne in mind that the term "moderate circumstances" does not mean the same in one section as in another, in the town as in the country; also that a woman's occupation, her husband's position, and the social duties required of her, must modify her costume and its cost. It is a duty to look as well as one can; allowance for dress should not strain one's income, but it should not be niggardly. C. A. JOHNSON.

7. What is the relative status of Gladstone, Bismarck and Cavour?

As a statesman able to plan comprehensively and to carry out his plans through long years of adverse circumstances and against all possible obstacles, Bismarck must rank first. As a man who had at heart the interests of mankind, a thorough humanitarian, in general, Gladstone ranks first. Cavour was an Italian and a great statesman. Italy owes a great debt to Cavour. German federation owes a greater debt to Bismarck. Gladstone's life and career benefited the world. S. MARSHALL.

8. Are department stores helpful or harmful?

Generally speaking, they are beneficial because of the many different kinds of merchandise contained in one establishment, as well as by reason of the low prices of goods sold. And these low prices are made possible, not because of underpaid labor in production of wares, but because of the ability of these stores, with their abundant capital, to purchase goods in very large quantities. Of course, these stores must occasionally work injury to the smaller tradesmen. A. L. VERMILYA.

9. We are often told that it is a sin to get angry. What then does the Apostle Paul mean when he says to the Ephesians, "Be ye angry and sin not"?

Anger or indignation aroused when we see a wrong done to ourselves or to others is not wrong. It would be sinful not to be filled with anger at cruelty, treachery, licentiousness, etc. Christ flamed forth with indignation at the dreadful forms of sin which confronted him when he was upon the earth. Anger becomes a sin when it degenerates into hatred, when it is nursed until it becomes mere rage, when under it there exists an unforgiving spirit. R. F. SMITH.

10. Does God send trouble? Does the Bible afford any light on the subject?

Men often bring trouble upon themselves, of which God is by no means the immediate author. The Bible speaks of God sending sore judgment on Jerusalem (Ezekiel 14: 21), also of God's chastening his children, and of his not willingly afflicting nor grieving the children of men. These and other passages conclusively show that we must regard at least some of mankind's troubles as sent of God. Such troubles serve to develop moral and spiritual character, just as physical exercise develops the body. M. E. SMALL.

Miscellaneous Questions

C. O. A., Saugerties, N. Y. Of what noted man was it said that he could be silent in seven languages?

Of Count Helmuth Carl Bernhard von Moltke, 1800–1891. He was far from loquacious, and being conversant with several languages, when non-committal in conversation, was said by some witty person to be silent in seven languages. It would be interesting to know who was the author of the witticism.

L. R. S., Camden, N. J. Why were Christ's hearers so incensed against him on account of his remarks recorded in Luke 4:23–27?

The evangelist has evidently not recorded all that Christ said. He undoubtedly began to reveal God's plan of salvation for the world, of a revelation open to Gentile as well as Jew, thus ending the period of exclusive religious favor which the Jews had so thoroughly forfeited by departure from God's laws. Such a doctrine would be most unpalatable to Christ's auditors.

American sympathy is being once more poured out in a practical way for the relief of the starving people of India, and it is pleasant to note that even the children are taking an active interest in the movement. Here is a letter from a very young contributor, which speaks volumes for his goodness of heart:

RICHMONDVILLE, N. Y.

I have five cents to give to the starving children in India. I will take it from my bank. My papa has put a bell on my sled. I wish I could look in India to see the poor children, then I would be very sorry. My mamma told me the papas and mammas threw their children in the river, so they would not suffer. That was too bad.
CHARLES M. WALKER, age 5 years.

This example should not be lost upon other children.

F. M. R., Clarendon, N. Y. 1. What is meant by the terms Preferred Stock, Watered, Common? 2. What is the smallest capital stock under which a national bank can do business in the United States?

1. "Preferred" is the stock or shares on which dividends are payable before those on the original or common stock; "watered" stock is that which has been increased by dividing the original shares or by a new issue; "common" or "ordinary" stock is the regular stock, first issue, of any company or corporation. 2. $50,000.

Lizzie H. H., Hillsboro, O. Is there any place on record where, in modern times (say the last fifty years) as many as 3,000 souls were baptized in one day? Where and how?

It is doubtful whether there is any such record in modern missions. Narratives of early missionary work among the Kaffirs and in Uganda show some notable baptisms, and so also in China, the Fiji Islands, Hawaii, etc. In India, Pandita Ramabai recorded the baptism of over 100 of her girls in one day. In the South Sea Islands, where the natives accepted Christianity in great numbers, it is quite probable that hundreds may have been baptized in a day.

M. B. S., Lenora, Minn. Who is the Son of Perdition mentioned in the Scripture?

It is generally supposed that Christ referred to Judas Iscariot when he used the term in John 17:12. Paul used the term in II. Thess. 2:3, presumably referring to the anti-Christ of Revelation.

Miss K. M., Grandbury, Tex. 1. How often is dancing mentioned in the Bible? 2. Where is it pronounced a sin?

1. Dancing and the dance are mentioned in the Bible some twenty-seven times. 2. It has been repeatedly explained in THE MAIL-BAG that the dance, in those early times was not, as now, a social dissipation, but to a large extent a religious ceremonial. Its character and use have altogether degenerated. As it did not then exist as an evil (as now), there was no ground for denunciation.

Sunday School Teacher, Philadelphia, Pa. I have seen it stated that the verses John 3:16-21 are not the words of Christ, but of John. What is your opinion?

We are aware that some scholars have thought that John wrote those verses as a commentary and that they were not spoken by Christ; but the number of such scholars was small and has become smaller as the discussion proceeded. Their theory was based on the fact that there is a change of tense in the verses in question; that the phrase "only-begotten," was a favorite one with John; ar that no further interruption from Nicodem is reported. These reasons do not appe to us of serious weight. The change tense occurs only when the topic requir it, and if the words are Christ's the chan would occur as certainly as if they we John's. The phrase, "only begotten" was, is true, a favorite one with John, but prob bly because he had heard it so frequentl from his Master. And as to the third reaso it is not likely that Nicodemus broke in that wonderful revelation, or that if he di John would interrupt it to report hi qu tions. We cannot believe that Christ ende his talk with the fifteenth verse, because if had done so, Nicodemus would not hav heard the essential facts. Neither woul statements so authoritative have been mac by John, unless he had distinctly indicate that it was he and not Christ who was speal ing. The subject was fully discussed son years ago and scholars so eminent as Alfor Lange and Stier then expressed their convi tion that the whole passage, from the begi ning of the tenth to the end of the twent first verse, was spoken by Christ.

Washington Reader. Will not THE CHRISTIA HERALD add still another to the good dee already done and strive to arouse the people the dreadful increase of profanity, and join the warfare against it? Cannot something done to lessen this great evil?

In many States there is a statute again public profanity, which if enforced would g far toward lessening the evil. Ascertain such a law exists in the District, and if so, yo probably would experience little difficulty organizing a society for its practical enforc ment.

Mrs. J. W. N., Goya, Miss. 1. To whom shall send in order to get the six copies of the Topek Capital, issued under Mr. Sheldon's editorshi 2. What is Mr. Sheldon's nationality, his ag and his denomination?

1. Send twenty-five cents to THE CHRISTIA HERALD and you will receive the entire s issues of The Capital, mailed. 2. Americar forty-three; Congregational.

Inquirer, Kewanee. Is it right for a Christia Church to hire one who makes no pretensio to Christianity to take charge of the singing the Sunday services and to sing solos, etc.?

This is a harsh view of the matter. Ce tainly, it is desirable that church member and especially those who have to bear a pron inent part in the services, should be genuin Christians. To put one who is an open an flagrant offender in a position of such prom nence, would be altogether wrong; but w should be extremely careful in judging othe lest we do them injustice.

S. J., Scranton, Pa. Who is generally supposed have been the companion of Cleopas in th memorable walk to Emmaus recorded i Luke 24?

There is no concensus of opinion on th subject. Mr. D. L. Moody suggested tha it might have been his wife, and his reaso for the suggestion was to say the least, naiv and interesting. The honored pilgrim is onl one of many nameless characters of the Bibl

M. P., Cuttingsville, Vt. Cotton cloth was, a far as we have knowledge, first made in India, 8 B. C. How early wool was woven into fabric, it impossible to say, but its use in this way is of grea antiquity, as evidenced by Biblical and profan history. Spinning and weaving are very ancien arts. Gen. 14: 23, thread is mentioned: Israe made Joseph "a coat of many colors:" Pharao arrayed him in "vestures of fine linen." Man first efforts in the direction of manufactured clot were doubtless matting hair of animals togethe into a sort of felt, and interweaving grasses into kind of grass cloth.

From a Palace to a Mission

How the Countess-Evangelist, Adeline Schimmelmann, Gave Up the World for Christ.....

THE COUNTESS AT SEA

COUNTESS Adeline Schimmelmann's second appearance before a New York audience was at Carnegie Hall under the auspices of the American Anti-Saloon League, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman presiding. Upon the platform and in the audience were such prominent advocates of the temperance cause as Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Mrs. Theodore Sutro, Mrs. Theodore B. Starr, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sheldon, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Mr. and Mrs. James Pearance, and others. An entirely different audience was this from that which had faced her the previous Sabbath at the Bowery Mission. In one instance, the homeless and destitute men who frequent our world-famous thoroughfare of sin and misfortune; in the other, the refined, cultivated and prosperous people of upper New York. With each class her ladyship was equally at ease; and truly, there seems a multiplication of reasons why in Divine Providence a Kaiserin's Lady of Honor should become, as has many another lady of distinction, a worker among the poor, and an exponent of their needs to people of wealth and position. No novel of the day has in it more of thrilling romance or seemingly improbable adventure than the life-story of the evangelist-Countess, the founder of the International Sailors' Mission.

Our illustrations (which have been supplied through the courtesy of the Countess, and some of which have never before appeared in print,) accentuate the wide contrasts that life has known: a lordly castle, a lowly cottage; a maiden in court dress wearing the coronet of a countess, an humble worker for the Master, serving out soup and coffee to hungry fishermen. The Countess was born, 1854, in the Castle of Ahrensburg, Holstein. Her father, a prominent Danish nobleman, owned estates in both Denmark and Germany; and many distinguished guests, among whom the Countess' memory recalls the great Bismarck himself, were entertained at Ahrensburg. When only three years old she appeared in court society, on the occasion of a dinner-party at Fredensburg, when beautiful Queen Caroline Amalie lifted the child to her knee upon hearing the little maid's expression of a preference to "kiss her cheek instead of her hand." She had French, German and English governesses, and early learned to speak several languages. "My first nurse, Chatinka,' she says, "I remember distinctly, and the vivid impression remains that she was a true Christian. With no playfellows but my brothers, I quickly became the wildest boy among them. To ride on my ponies, to climb the trees, to bathe, to fish, to row—these were my greatest pleasures. Thus passed the happy years of my youth. To them and to the reasonable discipline with which they were filled, I attribute the strength of body, clearness of mind and overflowing spirits which, in the Divine mercy, I have in so rich a measure enjoyed."

At eighteen she was presented at the Court of Berlin, and became a Lady of Honor to the Empress Augusta, "whom,' says the Countess, "I came to love as a mother; and I have to thank her influence in a very high degree for the life I am now leading." A typical day in her eighteen years of life as a court attachee, the Countess describes as follows:

Breakfast, 11 A.M. An hour or two later, donning full visiting dress, I ordered my carriage. It was my duty to pretend to return the calls made to me on behalf of the Empress. I took with me a bundle of hundreds of cards and drove hither and thither depositing them. This occupied several hours, which I spent in reclining lazily among the satin cushions of the carriage. Returning to the palace, I received visitors and perhaps held a private dinner party in my apartments. Perhaps in the evening, in full dress, I drove to the theatre in my gorgeous state-carriage, with glass sides, waving plumes, and stiff-back lackeys behind. After the play, we went, perhaps, to a grand ball and danced till nearly morning; or we sat for hours around the festal board at a state-dinner.

These worldly honors did not fill the heart of the "petted child of the court." Early in life, she had shown a strong religious leaning. At the old castle, her "most delightful treasure and plaything," she says, "was the great picture Bible of Schnorr of Carolsfield. I could lie on the floor for hours together, spreading its glorious pictures around me, and just living in the scenes they depicted." In her gay court life, the longing grew upon her for something higher and better; and her Imperial mistress encouraged this spirit. Then came the death of her beloved father, the pious old Count who had said to his child: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." She gave herself fully to Christ, and put in practise the command: "When thou makest a supper, call the poor and the maimed and the halt and the blind." The Empress sent her to visit the prisons and to make report of their condition. In this tour of inspection, a revelation of the world's wretchedness came upon her with force all the more crushing, in that her life had hitherto been so secure from such observation. About this time she sought seclusion and rest on the island of Rugen, a small, fashionable summer resort, not far distant from the Danish coast. Here, knowledge was forced upon her of the poverty-stricken condition of the thousands of fishermen inhabiting other near-by islands. She began to give her labor and her money to them, living in a little two-room hut, partaking of their coarse food, and ministering to their bodily and spiritual wants. She built coffee-houses to keep them away from the saloons, established a workshop for the unemployed, started free reading-rooms, and visited their homes, carrying sunshine, help and sympathy. To her relatives, her course seemed madness; and the Countess found herself kidnapped and committed to an insane asylum, from which she was liberated through intervention of friends, and by the proper authorities, who did not agree with her kinsmen's presumption that giving one's life and substance to the poor and needy constituted sufficient ground for the charge of insanity. The sensational case was a nine days' wonder, and the papers were full of it at the time.

SOME OF THE COUNTESS' JEWELS
These she sold to carry on her work

THE COUNTESS AMONG THE BALTIC FISHERMEN

In 1895, the Countess bought her yacht Duen (Dove), which now lies in the Erie Basin, Brooklyn. In this yacht, she, her two adopted sons and a crew of young sailors, all missionaries, have journeyed many miles, going from harbor to harbor; visiting ships of all nations; distributing Bibles and tracts; conducting Gospel meetings in many languages, aboard ship, on docks, and in lodging-houses and sailors' homes; and establishing coffee-houses and mission halls here and there. Last July, the Countess obeying, as she says, divine prompting, came to America: her yacht entered the St. Lawrence, and sailed up the river and through the great lakes, touching at various towns, where meetings were held in parks, churches and market-places. At Chicago, the Duen dropped her anchor, and was converted by its charitable owner into an eating-house for the poor and destitute applying to her for aid. About 50,000 people were fed at her expense. The Countess stated at Carnegie Hall and the Bowery Mission that her strength and her funds are for the present exhausted; but that she expects, in answer to prayer, restoration of health and replenishing of her purse so that she can carry on her work.

CAPT. C. NOLANDT
The Veteran Commander of the Gospel Yacht Duen

Her yacht, the Duen, like its mistress, is worn with much journeying. While the Countess rests, it is undergoing an overhauling, preparatory to going into commission again in the spring. Her commander, Captain C. Nolandt, is a fine type of the weather-beaten sailor. His voyages have taken him to almost every part of the globe. He was born at Rostock, Magdeburg, in 1839, went to sea at fifteen years of age, and has served much in German ships engaged in the American trade. His first acquaintance with Countess Schimmelmann was when, as captain of a little steamer, he carried her from one port to another on the Baltic. Up to that time he had been a rough-and-ready sailor, with little thought of spiritual things, but her gentle influence and example had a wonderful effect upon his life as it has had upon the lives of many others with whom she has come into contact. He has now been associated with her five years, has sailed with her across the ocean and up and down the great American lakes, and has taken an active part in all of her Gospel work during that time, assisting at the meetings held on the yacht in the ports of Lakes Erie, Michigan, Huron, and along the canals. He regards her most successful work as that in Hamburg, where her meetings were followed by many conversions.

Captain Nolandt is proud of his crew of eight able seamen, all of whom are men of Christian character, and capable of assisting in the work at meetings on board and ashore, being especially qualified to deal with seafaring men. All the crew are young men and under a godly captain and with the Christian Countess as leader, they form a band of capable and enthusiastic workers for souls.

During the last two months of her stay in New York, Countess Schimmelmann has recovered her health sufficiently to do some active service for the Master. She made a fairly complete tour of the missions and meeting-houses for sailors; went to the down-town boarding houses where the seamen put up when they are ashore, and sought to interest those who keep these places in the sailors' spiritual welfare. She also went to the prisons and talked of Christ to the prisoners. Large crowds have heard her repeatedly in Carnegie Hall, Cooper Union, and a number of churches, both in New York and Brooklyn. The programme of her engagements, when she left New York for Philadelphia Feb. 20, included an address in Mr. Wanamaker's church in that city, the holding of several meetings for the Sunday Breakfast Association; a journey to Sing Sing and a talk to the prisoners there on the morning of March 4, and on the evening of the same day a Gospel address in Brooklyn at the Academy of Music. According to her schedule, she goes next to Baltimore to attend a conference there. A trip to Canada, and Atlanta, Ga., will then occupy her until her return to New York in the latter part of April, when she will devote two months to work in this city and Brooklyn. Thus her whole life, day by day, is unselfishly devoted to Christian service, laboring without ceasing that she may win souls to the Kingdom.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

.. Bad Company ..

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Proverbs 13 : 20, ... A companion of fools shall be destroyed

"MAY it please the court," said a convicted criminal, when asked by the judge what he had to say why sentence of death should not be pronounced upon him, "May it please the Court, bad company has been my destruction; I received the blessing of good parents, and in return therefor promised to avoid all evil associates; had I kept my promise, I should have avoided this shame, and the burden of guilt, which like a vulture, threatens to drag me to justice for my many crimes. Although I once moved in high circles and was entertained by distinguished men, I am lost. Bad company did the work for me." Only one out of a thousand illustrations was that of the fact that "a companion of fools shall be destoyed." It is an invariable rule.

Here is a hospital with a hundred men down with the ship-fever. Here is a healthy man who goes into it. He does not so certainly catch the disease as a good man will catch moral distemper, if he consents to be shut up with the vicious and the abandoned. In the prisons of the olden time it was the custom to put the prisoners in a cell together, and I am sorry to say it is the custom still in some of our prisons; so that when the day of liberation comes, the men, instead of being reformed, are turned out brutes, not men, each one having learned the vices of all the rest.

We may, in our worldly occupation be obliged to talk to and commingle with bad people; but he who voluntarily chooses that kind of associations is carrying on a courtship with a Delilah which will shear the locks of his strength, and he will be tripped into perdition. Look over all the millions of the race, and you cannot show me a single instance where a man voluntarily associated with the bad for one year and maintained his integrity. Sin is catching; it is infectious; it is epidemic.

A young man wakes up in one of our great cities, knowing only the gentlemen of the firm into whose service he has entered. In the morning he enters the store, and all the clerks mark him, measure him, discuss him. The bad clerks of that establishment, the good clerks of that establishment, stand in some relation to him. The good clerks will wish him well, but they will wait for a formal introduction; and even after they have had the introduction they are very cautious as to whether they shall call him into their association before they know him very well.

But the bad young men in that establishment all gather around him; they patronize him, they offer to show him everything that there is in the city, on one condition—that he will pay the expenses; for it always happens so when a good young man and a bad young man go together to a place of evil entertainment—the good young man always has to pay the charges. Just at the time the ticket is to be paid for, or the champagne bill is to be settled, the bad young man will affect embarrassment and feel around in his pockets, and say, "Well, well, really I have forgotten my pocket-book."

In forty-eight hours after this innocent young man has entered the store, the bad young men will gather around him, slap him on the shoulder with familiarity, and if he is stupid in not being able to take certain allusions, will say: "Ah! my young friend, you will have to be broken in." And forthwith they go to work to "break him in."

O young man! let no fallen young man slap you on the shoulder familiarly. Turn around and give a withering glance that will make the wretch cower in your presence. There is no monstrosity of wickedness that can stand before the glance of purity and honor. God keeps the lightnings of heaven in his own scabbard, and no human arm may reach them; but God gives to every young man a lightning which he may use, and that is the lightning of an honest eye. Anybody that understands the temptations of our great cities knows the use of one sermon like this, in which I try to enforce the thought that "a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

And first, I charge you, avoid the sceptic. That is, the young man who puts his thumb in his vest, and swaggers about, scoffing at your old-fashioned religion; then taking out the Bible and turning over to some mysterious passage, and saying, "Explain that, my friend, explain that. I used to think just as you do; my father and mother used to think just as you do; but you can't scare me about the future; I used to believe in those things, but I've got over it." Yes; he has got over it, and you will get over it if you stay in his companionship much longer; for while he may not bring one argument against our holy Christianity, he will by scoffs and jeers and caricatures destroy your faith in that religion which was the comfort of your father in his declining years, and the pillow on which your old mother lay a-dying.

That brilliant young sceptic will after a while have to die, and his diamond will flash no splendor into the eye of death. His hair will lie uncombed on the pillow. Death will come up, and this sceptic will say to him, "I cannot die, I cannot die." Death will say, "You must die; you have but ten seconds more to live. Your soul—give it to me right away. Your soul!" "Oh no!" says the sceptic, "do not breathe that cold air into my face; you crowd me too hard; it is getting dark in the room; here—take my rings, and take all the pictures in the room, but let me off." "No," says Death, "your soul! your soul!" Then the dying sceptic begins to say, "O God!" Death says, "You declared there was no God." Then the dying sceptic says, "Pray for me;" and Death says, "It is too late to pray; you have only three seconds more to live, and I will count them off—one, two, three. Gone!" Where? Where? Carry him out and lay him down beside his old father and mother, who died under the delusions of the Christian religion, singing the songs of victory.

Again, avoid the idler. That is, those people who gather around the store, or the shop, or the factory, and try to seduce you away from your regular calling, and in your business hours try to seduce you away. There is nothing that would please them so well as to have you give up your employment and consort with them.

These idlers you will find standing around the engine-houses, or standing at noonday, or about noon, on the steps of some hotel or fashionable restaurant, giving the idea they have dined there. They have not dined there. They never dined there. They never will dine there. Before you invite a young man into your association ask him plainly: "What do you do for a living?" If he says "Nothing; I am a gentleman," look out for him. I care not how soft his hand, or how elegant his apparel, or how high-sounding his family name, his touch is death.

These people who have nothing to do will come around you in your busy hours, and they will ask you to ride with them to Chevy Chase or to Central Park, and they will tell you of some excursion that you must make, of some wine that you must drink, of some beautiful dancer that you must see. They will try to take you away from your regular work. Associate with these men, and first of all you will become ashamed of your apparel; then you will lose your place, then you will lose your respectability, then you will lose your soul.

Idleness is the next door to villainy. When the police go to find criminals, where do they go to find them? They find them among the idle—those who have nothing to do, or, having something to do, refuse to engage in their daily work. Some one came to good old Ashbel Green and asked him why he worked at eighty years of age when it was time for him to rest. "Oh," he replied, "I work to keep out of mischief." And no man can afford to be idle. I care not how strong his moral character, he cannot afford to be idle.

But you say, "A great many people are suffering from enforced idleness. During the hard times there were a great many people out of employment." I know it; but the times of dulness in business are the times when men ought to be thoroughly engaged in improving their minds and enlarging their hearts. The fortunes to be made twenty years from now will be made by the young men who in the times when business was dull cultivated their minds and improved their hearts. They will get the fortunes after a while, while those men who hang around their stores, never engaging in any useful occupation will be as poor then as they are now. It is absurd for a Christian man to say he has nothing to do.

I went into a store in New York where there were five Christian men, and they said they had nothing to do. The whole world lying in sin. Poverty to be comforted, sickness to be alleviated, a Bible in the back office, every opportunity of mental culture, spiritual culture; every inducement to work, yet a Christian man, sworn before high heaven to consecrate his whole life to usefulness, has nothing to do! If you have not any business for this world, my Christian friend, then you ought to be doing business for eternity.

People go to Florence and to Venice and to Rome to see one of the works of the great masters. I think I can show you the picture of one of the great masters: "I went by the field of the slothful and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and, lo, it was all grown over with thorns and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down. Then I saw, and considered it well. I looked upon it, and received instruction. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep: so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth; and thy want as an armed man." There is no more explosive passage in all the Bible than that. It first begins to hiss like the fuse of a cannon, and then bursts like a fifty-four pounder. The old proverb was true: "The devil tempts most men, but idlers tempt the devil!" Therefore seek something to do. If no worldly business offers, then, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, go out on Christian toil, and the Lord will bless you and the Lord will help you.

Again, I counsel you, avoid the pleasure-seeker—the man whose entire business it is to seek for recreation and amusement. I believe in the amusements of the world so far as they are innocent. I could not live without them. Any man of sanguine temperament must have recreation or die. And yet the amusements and recreations of life must administer to hard work; they are only preparative for the occupation to which God has called us.

God would not have given us the capacity to laugh if he did not sometimes intend us to indulge it. God hath hung in sky and set in wave and printed on grass many a roundelay. But all the music and the brightness of the natural world were merely intended to fit us for the earnest work of life. The thundercloud has edges exquisitely purpled, but it jars the mountain as it says, "I come down to water the fields." The flowers standing under the fence look gay and beautiful, but they say: "We stand here to refresh the husbandmen at the nooning." The brook frolics and sparkles and foams, but it says, "I go to baptize the moss; I go to slake the thirst of the bird; I play but I work."

Look out for the man who plays and never works. Look out for that man whose entire business it is to play ball or sail a yacht, or engage in any kind of merriment. These things are all beautiful and grand in their places, but when they become the chief work of life they become a man's destruction.

These mere pleasurists will come around you while you are engaged in your work and they will try to take you away. They have lost their place; why not you lose your place? Then you will be one with them. O my friends! before you go with these pleasure-seekers, these men whose entire life is fun and amusement and recreation, remember while after a man has lived a life of integrity and Christian consecration, kind to the poor and elevating to the world's condition, when he comes to die he has a glorious reminiscence lying on his death pillow, the mere pleasurist has nothing by way of review but a torn play-bill, a ticket for the race, an empty tankard, or the cast-out rinds of a carousal; and as in delirium of his awful death he clutches the goblet and presses it to his lips, the dregs falling on his tongue will begin to uncoil and hiss with the adders of an eternal poison.

Again: Beware of Sabbath-breakers. Tell me how a young man spends his Sabbath, and I will tell you what are his prospects in business, and I will tell you what are his prospects for the eternal world. God has thrust into our busy life a sacred day when we are to look after our souls. Is it exorbitant, after giving six days to the feeding and the clothing of these perishable bodies, that God should demand one day for the feeding and the clothing of the immortal soul? Our bodies are seven-day clocks, and they need to be wound up, and if they are not wound up they run down into the grave. No man can continuously break the Sabbath and keep his physical and mental health. Ask those aged men, and they will tell you they never knew men who continuously broke the Sabbath who did not fail either in mind, body or moral principle. Oh, keep the Lord's day. You may think it old-fogy advice, but I give it to you now: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." Beware young man of all Sabbath-breakers.

Again: I charge you beware of association with the dissipated. Go with them and you will in time adopt their habits. Who is that man fallen against the curb-stone, covered with bruises and beastliness? He was as bright-faced a lad as ever looked up from your nursery. His mother rocked him, prayed for him, fondled him, would not let the night air touch his cheek, and held him up and looked down into his loving eyes, and wondered for what high position he was being fitted. He entered life with bright hopes. The world beckoned him, friends cheered him, but the archers shot at him; vile men set traps for him, bad habits hooked fast to him with their grapples; his feet slipped on the way; and there he lies.

Oh! if I had some art by which I could break the charm of the tempter's bowl, and with mailed hand lift out the long serpent of eternal despair, and shake out its coils, and cast it down, and crush it to death!

Shake off the Sabbath-breaker. Oh! turn your back upon these men, shake off the sceptic. Shake off the idler. Shake off the pleasurist. You may do this work of ejection in politeness, but you may do it firmly. You are not, under any circumstances, to lose all the remembrance of the fact that you are a gentleman and must always act the gentleman. A young man said to a Christian Quaker, "Old chap, how did you get your money?"

"Well," said the Quaker, "I got it by dealing in an article in which thou mayest deal if thou wilt—civility."

Be courteous, be polite, but be firm. Say no as if you meant it. If you say "No" in a feeble way they will keep on with their imploration and their temptation, and after awhile you will stand in silence, and then you will say, after they have gone on a little longer, "Yes," and then you are lost.

Oh! turn your back upon the banquet of sin. I call you to a better feast to-day. The promises of God are the fruits. The harps of heaven are the music. The clusters of Eschol are pressed into the tankards. The sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty are the guests. While standing at the banquet to pour the wine, and divide the clusters, and command the music, and welcome the guests, is a daughter of God, on her brow the blossoms of Paradise, and in her cheek the flush of celestial summer. And her name is Religion. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

.. A Relief Ship for Starving India ..

Lord Curzon's Government will Pay the Charter, if Christian America will Provide a Cargo—A Golden Opportunity

LATE letters and cablegrams from our missionaries in India, represent the need of relief as so urgent and the condition of the sufferers as so appalling, that in order to save thousands who must otherwise perish, it has been decided to hurry forward substantial relief with all despatch. We invite every reader of this journal, and all who delight to serve the Master, to join with us in this movement to equip a Flying Relief Ship to carry a load of American corn to Bombay. This vessel, moving quickly—as a flying squadron moves ahead of the main body of the fleet—can reach Bombay in time to save thousands who would undoubtedly perish through famine, before aid could reach them through the regular channels. With this object in view, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a few days ago cabled to the British Government, announcing the readiness of Christian America to give of its abundant product to save lives in far-off India, and requesting that transportation be provided for the projected cargo. To this message, the British Government, after communicating with the Viceroy's Committee in India, sent the following reply:

"India Government deeply grateful for renewed American sympathy, and agrees to pay transport, provided the cargo is placed at the disposal of the Central Committee of Famine Relief."

The cargo of food to be conveyed by the Flying Relief Ship will be welcomed by the starving multitudes of India as a heaven-sent succor in their hour of sorest stress.

Haste is imperative, since human lives are at stake, and the cargo for the steamship—which should leave New York next month at the latest—should be gathered together with the utmost expedition. It is especially desirable that churches, Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and other religious organizations should act promptly at this urgent call, and forward contributions to be applied toward purchasing the cargo of corn for the Flying Relief Ship. What has already been accomplished through the missionaries, as distributors, will be multiplied a hundred-fold upon the arrival and distribution of this cargo, which will include food for the starving, medicines and delicacies for the sick, and a tender message of love and sympathy from God's children in this side of the globe to those in the other, who, sore-smitten by plague and famine, had almost lost faith in God and man. Their pitiful condition is not surprising. In many districts of the Western provinces of that seeming land, where the famine is felt the sorest, practically the entire population is starving. To the local sufferers in every township are now added thousands of refugees, who have come from other parts in search of food, seeing nothing but death from hunger in their own districts. Private and public charity in India are wholly inadequate and the contributions from all sources are nearly exausted. We should reach out the swift hand of help at once, and give according as the Lord hath prospered us as a nation and as individuals.

There is no one so poor as to be unable to send a bushel of corn, or its equivalent, to add to the cargo: and it should not be forgotten that a single bushel of American corn—which is highly spoken of by nearly all our missionaries as being the most acceptable food that could be sent to the sufferers—may be blessed to the saving of many lives. With good, sound nutritious corn in abundance at 30 cents a bushel here, and with millions dying for the lack of food in India, there need not be an instant of hesitation as to the clear and unmistakable duty of all to whom this appeal may come.

Four months have now passed since the famine in India was officially acknowledged by the Viceroy, Lord Curzon. Since that time the area affected has extended week by week and the number of sufferers has increased. Four months still remain until the harvest can be gathered and the pressure is relieved. We are now, therefore, in the middle of the straitened period and are anxiously looking forward to the struggle that must be made to save life. It becomes more terrible from day to day. On all the roads in Western India crowds of gaunt, hungry men are struggling along toward the relief camps, and in the rear are women scarcely able to walk, plodding along hoping to reach relief before their strength utterly fails. But the most pitiful sight of all is the children in the crowd. They cannot understand why they have to suffer; and their pleading faces, turned in mute agony to any white person they meet, are sad enough to bring tears to the eyes of the most obdurate person. One dollar placed in the hands of a missionary would enable him to give a meal to twenty of the poor little sufferers. Mrs. Hume writes that at least fifty of them surrounded her when she went out the day before writing, all begging her for just one handful of grain. Another missionary tells of witnessing a struggle outside a grain store where a wagon was being unloaded and the poor creatures were down on their hands and knees carefully picking up every grain that fell into the dirt. It was a pitiable spectacle.

Rev. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, to whom one thousand dollars of the sum contributed by our readers was sent by cable, writes: "Last week I acknowledged receipt from you of one thousand dollars and told you how timely was the remittance; I now write you how it was used. Our plans had been made with much thought and prayer in anticipation of the arrival of help from America. Nineteen missionaries who are working in the Deccan were all gladly prepared to assist in its distribution. One consideration has been how to administer this gift from Christians in America so as to make the distressed people learn from it the love of Christ, as well as to get relief for their bodies. The number is so great that we can reach comparatively few, but we have made the money go as far as we could. We used fifty rupees in setting people to work digging a well. Seven hundred and fifty rupees were spent in feeding a large number of starving children. The balance was used in similar ways in the districts of Satara, Kolgar, Vadala, etc. You will see from the itemized account enclosed how wide a field the money has reached and how many it has relieved. Those who have given through you have strengthened the missionaries almost as much as the poor people, for it is an awful strain on us to witness so much suffering, which we had not the funds to relieve. We are all most grateful to your readers and we ask you to thank them for us."

Rev. H. G. Bissell, to whom Mr. Hume gave some of the money to use in his district wrote, just as he was setting out on his tour of relief: "I wish to send a line of hearty thanks to you for making it possible for me to help these poor creatures. It is most opportune, for I know how many sick and aged and children there are who cannot go to the relief works and are utterly destitute. The children especially suffer severely. Their mothers are so near starvation themselves that they can give them no nourishment. It will be a source of great pleasure to relieve them, and how many lives it will save no one can tell. The people cannot at first understand why people in far-off America should send them help, but I am careful to explain the motive that these gifts express and they learn more of what our divine religion really is than they could learn from preaching. We are looking for a great in-gathering of souls as the result of this beneficence. Please tell your readers that we can use all the money they can send, and that every dollar will be spent in the most careful way and with a conscientious desire to make it tell in the relief of suffering and in the promotion of Christ's cause in this land."

FEEDING THE STARVING PEOPLE AT THE AMERICAN MISSION AT JHANSI

From Pandita Ramabai comes a grateful message of thanks. She writes: "Thank you so very much for sending me the one thousand dollars. Your readers can never know how many hearts they have gladdened among the people of God in this land by sending this help. It enables them to show those who know him not, how loving a Saviour he is, when his people will do so much to please him. It is a terrible affliction that is all around us. The Lord has called me to take up the work of relief, and for three months I have been doing the little that has been in my power. Now that the dear friends in America have sent me this money I can do so much more. God has given me over seventy young widows from Gujarat and Rajputana. I did not know how to provide for them, but I took them in, believing that as God had sent them he would provide, and now he has done so through your readers. Thank them for all they have done for me, and tell them that the blessing of our dear Lord will surely be with them. Especially for this new gift so terribly needed may he bless them. We want, oh, so much! to feed these poor starving thousands."

A cable message has also come from the Methodist Episcopal missionaries, to whom three thousand dollars was sent through Bishop Thoburn. They say: "Remittance gratefully disbursed. Further help urgently desired." They are in the worst part of the famine district and have to bear sights which make the heart ache.

Rev. E. Fairbank, of Wadala, who has visited the relief camp near his station, writes: "Three years ago at the end of the famine there was less wretchedness and starvation than I saw here to-day at the beginning of the famine. The misery is terrible. But still worse is the fearful emaciation. Living skeletons are on every side. The village kulkarani tells me that the children die soon after they reach the camp, being too far gone to recover. They might have lived had help reached them earlier. Last night a man died here who had traveled a long distance without proper nourishment, and had eaten absolutely nothing during the last three days of his journey.

"This famine is undoubtedly more severe in these parts than that of '76 or that of '96. One of the worst features is the lack of water. Rivers, usually flowing full at this time, are dry beds of sand. Wells, that have never before failed in the memory of any one living, have not a drop of water in them. The well that waters our garden and has never failed since my father came here almost forty-five years ago, is dry this year."

Our readers will rejoice as they read these expressions of gratitude that they have been able to cheer the hearts of these consecrated men and women to whom the appeals of the hungry are made. But more help is urgently needed. It is evident that all the money sent has been expended; and with the utmost care and economy it has only relieved the suffering temporarily. Hundreds are dying for want of a meal. The need is urgent, for the missionaries are surrounded by the hungry crowds. Gifts now will help them and will save others from perishing. Every dollar given in the name of Christ means help of the best kind. There is no deduction for expenses. The missionaries spend it in food or in wages for labor on works of public utility. In the presence of such appalling calamity as now exists we can but ask the question of the Apostle: "Whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

A Corn-laden Relief Ship for Starving India

"India Government deeply grateful for renewed American sympathy, and agrees to pay transport, provided cargo is placed at disposal of Central Committee Famine Relief."

This means that Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, and his Government will pay the vessel's charter, and Christian America will supply its cargo. Contributions in aid of the corn cargo, to be conveyed in the Flying Relief Ship to Bombay, will be received and acknowledged by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Fireside Talks About Jesus

Jesus at Matthew's Feast

Social to Save

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 18th. MARK 2:13-22

UNCLE Will: "'Social to save,' the motto of the Endeavorers' social committee, is the very essence of this lesson about Jesus eating with publicans and sinners and teaching the blind teachers of that time, by act and word, how to fulfil their mission in uplifting men. Despite abounding political wrongs, which were represented by the publican tax robbers, and personal vice, which was represented by multitudinous sinners, Jesus was the Man of joy, the Bridegroom gladly leading the church into the bridal of a new life. Here is a lesson for those reformers who, like the Pharisees, forget to 'keep sweet' while combatting evils, who lose heart and hope, and so lose their cause as well. Unlike Roman Catholic monks and Protestant mystics, Jesus did not go apart from sinners, but to them and with them, putting the salt with the meat where it was needed. It was in this spirit, after preaching to the eager multitude on the seashore, that he went forth for equally important personal work and said to Levi, the publican, sitting at the city toll gate, 'Follow me.'"

Jesus seeks the sinful "From what I hear," said Selah Brown, "an oriental farmer would think publicans of all men past praying for. To-day, as of old, publicans in Palestine are authorized by the Turkish government to take a tenth, but allowed to extort a fifth instead. Tradesmen can sometimes partly hide their property, but the farmer is their helpless prey. The publican puts a huge stamp on the farmer's grain while it is on the public threshing ground, the only place where he can thresh it, and the farmer cannot thereafter remove it without the publican's permission. That permission is withheld until the farmer, worn out with postponements, exclaims, 'Oh, take a fifth and let me sell my grain.' In the times of Christ an additional odium attached to publicans because this tax robbing of the Jews was done by those who were Jews themselves, mean enough to be the thumbscrews of the oppressors of their race if only they could fill their own pockets."

"I fear," said Sanders, "that American farmers are hardly less sceptical as to the possibility of converting that same kind of Jews in our cities, who not infrequently make our farmers their prey. Most of us have some class, or some one at least, that we think too mean for Christ to save."

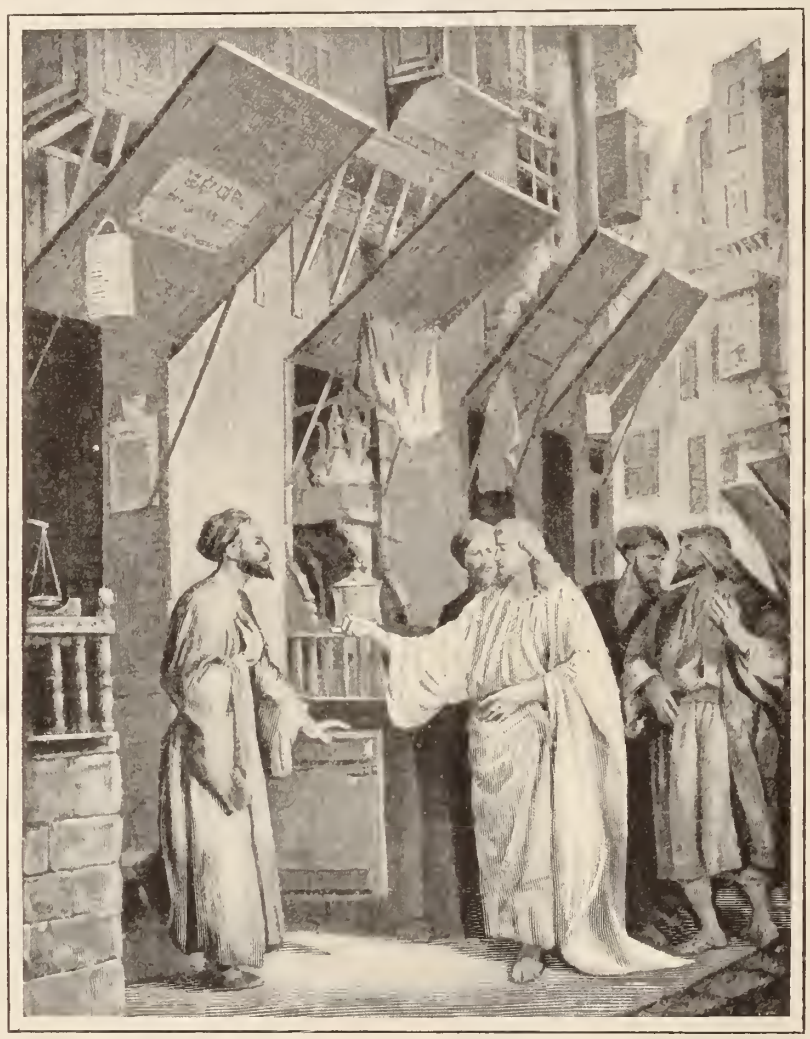
Leaving all to follow Christ "How that feeling is rebuked," said Mr. Isaacs, "by the change wrought in Levi, who became Matthew, a new name, meaning 'the gift of God.' The thoroughness of his conversion and consecration puts many of us to shame. He forsook all and followed Christ. That is something to be pondered by the man who pretends to follow Christ, but will not give up anything that involves financial risk or loss. How strange it sounded to read of that recently converted grocer, who thereupon burned his whole stock of tobacco.

"Finney was kneeling with a new convert and leading him in specific self-surrender. He repeated after the revivalist, 'I will serve God in my home,' 'I will work for God in the church.' But when he was asked to repeat, 'I will serve God in my business,' he hesitated, for he was in the liquor business. The only way to serve God in his business he found was to quit it. Many a church member is selling corrupting literature, less solicitous whether boys and girls should be lost than whether a few cents a week shall be lost. Many a young lady selling cigars or serving wine as a waitress needs this lesson of Levi, who dared to trust in God and renounce a bad business."

"That reminds me," said Uncle Will, "of a child struggling to get its hand out of a vase. After its long and vain efforts the mother said, 'Open your fist and you can get it out.' 'Oh,' said the child, 'I can't do that, for if I do I shall drop the penny.' Many a one will have to drop some penny it is grasping to save not hand but heart. A ship at sea coming on a foundered vessel loaded with emigrants threw over its own cargo in order to save the emigrants. Many a man needs to sacrifice his business or his wealth that he may save himself and others. In the words of Hudson Taylor, 'We cannot crown Christ Lord at all unless we crown him Lord of all.'"

"Matthew turned square about," said Selah Brown, "and leaving his boodling politics followed Jesus, which reminds me of a story told of a traveler on a Massachusetts county road, who asked a man whom he met how far it was to Taunton. 'Well, neighbor,' was the quaint reply, 'in the way you are headed now its right on to 25,000 miles; but if you'll turn square about and go t'other way, it'll be about six mile.' Many a man who thinks he is on the way to heaven will need to turn square about in conduct and character if he is ever to get there."

"You speak," said Tom, "as if Matthew must have been a dishonest publican. But surely there is no sin in tax collecting in itself. Ruskin thinks Matthew must have been an honest publican or Jesus would not have called him, a strange inference to make from a story in which Jesus says, 'He came to call not the righteous but sinners.' Nevertheless, is it not conceivable that there might be a Christian publican, that is, one who was a true Christian and yet did not forsake the business?"



"FOLLOW ME. AND HE AROSE AND FOLLOWED HIM"

"It is conceivable," said Uncle Will, "just as it is conceivable that a druggist might keep open all day on the Sabbath and not break any law of God or man; or that one might open a livery that day and provide only for cases of necessity and mercy. Matthew may have left the business only as John left fishing. But the case at least suggests that we should avoid not only an essentially sinful business, but also one full of temptations. And the same law applies to pleasures. In any case we are to forsake whatever is sinful at whatever cost, whether in business or politics or pleasure, and follow Christ, which means that we will adopt for our whole lives the motto that Dr. Sheldon is this week applying in a daily newspaper office in Topeka, 'What would Jesus do?'"

Mrs. Isaacs: "What a helper of Christ this unpromising publican became, whom the Pharisees thought not worth saving! It makes one think of how the diamond treasures of South Africa were discovered by a visitor about to throw back at a playful boy a pebble which the latter had thrown at him. A glint of light caught his eye and what he would have thrown away proved a diamond and a promise of many more. What the Pharisees threw away Jesus made into saints. Matthew was a case of business talents consecrated to higher uses. His Gospel is not only the Jews' Gospel but the business man's Gospel. How he adds the miracles of Christ together in one place, and the teachings in another, like sums in addition, to prove that such divine power and wisdom must belong to the Messiah! Matthew's Gospel is a converted tax collector's record of God's reckonings with the human race in rewards and punishments. Of all the Bible this is the book of judgments."

Saving Men by Social Means "And yet," said Mrs. Uncle Will, "Matthew, like his Master, ate with publicans and sinners that he might save them through their social instincts. The feast was to his own trade, no doubt, and the sinners and Pharisees alike came unbidden, for opposite reasons, in the freedom of oriental manners. Matthew knew the value of social forces. Cain built the first city when there were neither wars nor factions—the two usual explanations of the development of cities. That first city was a pure outgrowth of man's social instinct, always strongest in the Cainites. The way in is the way out, and so we should use the social agencies largely to reach the Cainites that prefer vice and poverty in the city to virtue and comfort elsewhere. The 'social settlement,' the 'institutional church,' the 'friendly visitor,' the 'church sociable' are all true successors of that feast at Matthew's house. I join in most that is said against church suppers as a substitute for consecrated giving but we are only repeating the love feasts of the New Testament when rich and poor in the church eat together as a family once a fort night, as our church used to do in Haverhill And the free breakfasts for the poor on Sabbath mornings in many cities are Matthew's feast repeated. In one of these in Dublin, so degraded were those who came that the Christian leader who preached the Word of Life when hunger had been satisfied, found it necessary to take a bath before he could go to church. Oh, if we were only as sensitive to uncleanness of the soul—aye, and as eager to be cleansed!"

ATTITUDE OF GUESTS AT AN ORIENTAL FEAST

Selah Brown: "The Pharisees come into the story to illustrate how not to do it. How many publicans and sinners had they converted by scorning and avoiding them? With keen satire Jesus reminds them that, while pretending to be soul doctors, they avoid the sick and seek only those who need no physician.

Religion not a Fast, but a Feast "It just suits me," said cheery Selah Brown that Christ should have been at this feast on the very day when the lifeless Pharisees and John's disciples were fasting. What a religion of forms and rules those Pharisees had! It saddened them like a heavy load. Most of our prayer meetings are too solemn, and especially do we forget at the Lord's table looking into ourselves, instead of looking unto Jesus that it was in New Testament times — a Eucharist — that is, a Thanksgiving feast. 'How shall the children of the bride chamber know when the bridegroom is with them?' If we are having a true 'communion' with the 'real presence' of Christ how can we fail to rejoice!"

"The ground of our peace," said Mrs. Uncle Will, "is found in the cross, to which Christ's mystic reference to the Bridegroom being taken away pointed, though the crucifixion was nearly two years away. One of our blessings is that we know nothing of to-morrow's crosses. Christ, through his whole life, saw the cross as its culmination, not counting it a sorrow so much as a victory to come. Because that cross hides our sins, the only adequate ground of sorrow, we have peace."

A New Spirit and New Methods "New wine in new wineskins," said Mr. Sanders, "is Christ's picture of the new life expressed in the new methods which he brought. Nearly every great truth of the New Testament is as old as the Old Testament, in whose earliest pages the Divine One is pictured as Father, Lamb, Shepherd, King, Saviour, Bridegroom. But into these old truths, which had withered into formalism, Christ put new life, and provided for their extension the swift-footed apostleship in place of the confined priesthood. As the seed must burst the old seed husk and rise into its new expression in the tree, so the story of God's love to man must throw off dead Judaism and expand into living Christianity, which is not a new, finished house, but a new, ever-growing tree of life, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations."

Mrs. Uncle Will: "Jesus used a homely but effective illustration to show that what he proposed was not to patch up Judaism, but rather to introduce a new life in a new dress. If a piece of new, unshrunk cloth is sewed into the hole of an old garment, it will only tear the hole larger when it does shrink at last. It is just as true in individual conversion that Christ comes not to patch up our old life with a better habit here and there, but to give us a new spirit, which will express itself in new forms, in purer politics, loftier enjoyments."

ORIENTAL CARRYING A SKIN BOTTLE

A Sunday with Pastor Sheldon

Characteristic Services in the Little Topeka Church — A Graphic Pen-Picture of the Preacher-Editor of the Daily Christian Newspaper

(From our Special Correspondent)

TOPEKA, Kan., Feb. 26.—On my arrival here I was accorded a hearty welcome as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative by Gen. Hudson and the staff of The Capital. I attended the Sunday morning services at Mr. Sheldon's church yesterday, and there received a cordial greeting from some of the principal members of his congregation. Afterward I had the pleasure of spending an hour with the now famous Topeka pastor, whose experiment on the lines of practical Christian daily journalism is attracting the attention of the entire country. He is in many respects a remarkable man, being exceptionally modest and in no sense one who cares for self-glorification before the public. He has thus far resisted all inducements by interviewers and photographers, and it is evidently a part of his fixed plan to sink his own personality so far as possible in the great work he has undertaken to accomplish.

It must not be imagined, however, that there is any secret about the unique enterprise, or that a veil of mystery has been purposely thrown about the Christian daily newspaper which Mr. Sheldon will begin to issue on the 13th inst. On the contrary, the pastor-editor has invited most heartily the co-operation of the whole Christian community. I have received the assurance that the freedom of every department of The Capital will be gladly granted me as the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in order that its great army of readers throughout the world may learn all about the experiment at every stage of its progress. They may, therefore, expect to find in these dispatches a full and unbiased presentation of the story of Pastor Sheldon's editorial trials and triumphs, from the moment he assumes the editorial chair until the novel experiment is concluded, and he turns over The Capital to its owner, Mr. Popenoe and its regular conductors, through whose courtesy and enterprise he was granted this great opportunity.

In view of the anticipated widespread demand for The Capital during Mr. Sheldon's editorship, it is proposed to print part of the edition in Topeka and the balance in Chicago, with the possibility that necessity may make it advisable to print supplementary editions also in New York and London. Thousands of subscriptions are coming in every day.

The Sheldon church, which is situated on the outskirts of Topeka, is a rather small edifice. Instrumental music is furnished by a small parlor organ, and the singing is led by an aged man, who wields a baton. In several places on the walls of the church and Sunday School room, the words "What would Jesus do?" are stenciled, and stand prominently before the visitor's eyes. Pastor Sheldon preaches from notes. I found the little church packed, there being at least five hundred persons present, including State senators, politicians, the president of the Topeka college, and a considerable sprinkling of negroes. The pastor opened the responsive reading with the third and fourth chapters of Acts. The Lord's prayer was chanted, then came the hymn, "On God, the Rock of Ages," sung by the congregation; then a simple prayer for the guidance of all, that they might live as Jesus would have them do, from the President of the nation down to the humblest citizen. Another hymn, "When Morning Gilds the Skies," was sung. Mr. Sheldon then read a single notice—that of the Thursday night prayer meeting, this being the only public meeting at which he ever mentions his coming newspaper experiment. Then followed a prayer for help, strength and light. Next the offering with liberal contributions.

Pastor Sheldon took the text for his sermon from Acts 4: 12: "And in none other is there salvation." The sermon was a simple plain talk, as if to a Bible class. I am forwarding you by this mail the notes in the pastor's own handwriting, so that you may publish them in full, if desired. After the sermon, came another hymn, "God Loved the World of Sinners Lost;" then a short prayer that all present who had not yet come into the kingdom, might be brought in. The last hymn, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," was followed by the benediction, after which the congregation speedily dispersed.

Mr. Sheldon's delivery showed no attempt at dramatic effect. He frequently repeats phrases and expressions for the sake of emphasis. He summed up all the essentials and non-essentials of salvation. Non-essentials that do not count are race, rank, riches, church membership and the assent to certain dogmas, none of which however, are actually necessary to our salvation. The essentials are faith in God, repentance, humility, the new birth, and the daily living and doing as Jesus would do. Let us carry salvation to all who need. "There is no such thing as secular life," said the pastor. "All life is life into which we are to put our Christianity." He should doubt his own salvation if he did not love the multitude. Good works alone will not save us, but we do good because we are saved.

Pastor Sheldon's Sunday routine is interesting. He rose at seven, partook of a simple breakfast, and then had home prayers and Bible reading with his family, including his wife and two-year-old baby and also his father and mother, who live in another part of the town, but visit him on Sundays. Then came half an hour's preparation for pulpit work. Sunday School, followed by a short Bible class lesson, was next in order, and then the regular morning service, which I have already described. Dinner over, the first half of the afternoon was spent in house-to-house visits in the negro quarter of the town, and during this outing he looked in for a few moments at the negro chapel. The remainder of the afternoon was devoted to the funeral of a white parishioner and a church committee meeting. Next, supper, after which came the only evening service at the church, which was of the nature of a People's Christian Endeavor meeting. At this service Mr. Sheldon gave a short, characteristic talk on humility, and this was by all means the most interesting meeting of the day. The singing was led by a young man and the hymns played by a young woman at the piano, accompanied by young men with violin, flute and cornet. This fairly describes a typical Sheldon Sunday.

Pastor Sheldon's nature is a difficult one to analyze. To many he may appear cold and unsympathetic and lacking in personal magnetism, but those who know him best and who are with him frequently, enabling them to see every phase and revelation of character, know that such a conclusion would do him an injustice. I have been told that many who meet him require weeks to decide for themselves wherein lies his greatness or his strength. His extreme modesty, his indifference to publicity, his guardedness in speech, all give an impression at the outset which is apt to be reversed on longer acquaintance. In conversation with me he expressed genuine appreciation of the co-operation and sympathy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, adding that he much prefers that the complete story of his experiment should be printed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD rather than in any daily publication. It is impossible to question his sincerity. He said he was delighted to meet and talk with me as a friend, but desired that he should not be quoted in the first person save on specially stipulated points, as anything beyond this savors of egotism. He denies absolutely that he has given out any signed statements concerning his work for publication in the daily press, and he authorized me further to quote him as saying that any signed statements purporting to outline the policy upon which The Capital will be conducted under his control are not genuine.

Especially he denies that he has changed his mind with regard to the publication of a Sunday edition. He says, "I will positively not issue a Sunday edition. An extra edition will be dated, issued and delivered on Saturday night, and the office will be closed before midnight until Monday." The policy of the paper will be set forth on its editorial page and not before. His first issue, outlining the policy, will not essentially differ from that outlined in the seventeenth chapter of In His Steps.

Just as I close my dispatch, I learn that Mr. Sheldon is confident the experiment will result in his obtaining one million dollars as an endowment for a permanent Christian daily paper. The sum named by Edward Norman, in the thirteenth chapter of In His Steps, in discussing a similar project, was only $500,000.

Bishop Vincent, of Topeka, has called Mr. Sheldon a "practical idealist," and his life bears out the criticism. Just now he is applying his practical idealism to the inhabitants of Tennesseetown, a suburb of Topeka populated by negroes. These negroes settled there years ago during a great migration from the South. Our photographs show some phases of this work, which will be described in a future issue.

As the tremendous temporary increase of The Capital subscription list will unquestionably interfere with prompt service, unless specially facilitated, we have concluded to send to The Capital six printed mailing lists, containing the carefully printed names and full addresses of members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD family who subscribe for the six Sheldon issues. To secure this advantage the names of all subscribers for the Sheldon issues (commencing March 13), should be sent, together with twenty-five cents in cash, to reach us not later than Saturday morning, March 10th.

ELDER WESSEL wuz took completely back I could see by Arvilly's eloquence, and I wuz myself. The sharp-toothed harrow of grief had turned up new furrows in her soul, in which strange plants growed. And before Elder Wessel could speak she went on a-thinkin' back about sunthin' he'd said.

"Indulgences to sin! If I granted licenses for all kinds of sin for money, as our nation duz, I wouldn't talk about Papal indulgences. See how wimmen are used—embruted, insulted, ground beneath the heel of lust and ruin by these same license laws."

"But, Sister Arvilly," sez he, "I was reading only this morning a sermon upon how much our civilization had to do in lifting women into the high place they occupy to-day."

"High place!" sez Arvilly, and I fairly trembled in my felt shoes to hear her axent. "Wimmen occupy a dretful high place. I can tell you jest the place she occupies. You have been told of it often enough; you ort to know it, but don't seem to. A woman occupies the same bench with lunatics, idiots and criminals, only hern is enough sight harder under legal licenses and taxation laws."

"But," sez the Elder, "the courtesy with which women are treated, the politeness, the deference—"

"If you wuz kicked out of your meetin' house, Elder Wessel, would it make any difference to you whether the shue you wuz kicked with wuz patent leather or cow hide? The important thing to you would be that you wuz layin' on the ground outside, and the door locked behind you."

Sez Elder Wessel, "That is a strong metafor, Sister Arvilly. I had never looked at it in that light before."

"I presume so," sez she. "The very reason why there are so many cryin' abuses to-day is because good men spend their strength in writin' eloquent sermons aginst sin, and lettin' it alone, instead of grapplin' with it at the ballot box. Our Lord took a whip and scourged the money changers out of the temple. And that is what ministers ort to do, and have got to do, if the world is saved from its sins—scourge the money changers who sell purity and honor, true religion and goodness for money.

"Satan don't care how much ministers talk about temperance and goodness and morality in the pulpit to a lot of wimmen and children that the congregations are made up of mostly, or how many essays are writ about it, tied with blue ribbin. But when ministers and church members take hold on it as Ernest White has and attacks it at the ballot box, and defends and reinforces the right and left flank with all the spiritual and material and legal forces he can muster, why then Satan feels his throne tremble under him and he shakes in his shues."

But before Elder Wessel could frame a reply Josiah come in with the news that the steamer had approached and brung mail to the passengers. And we all hurried up to see what we had got.

"THE SHORE LOOKED DRETFUL LOW AND FLAT"

CHAPTER XIV.
On a Foreign Shore

WELL, the steamer wuz passin' away like ships in the night, but I found that I had several letters from home. The children wuz gettin' well. Philury and Ury well and doin' well. And one letter wuz from Cousin John Richard, that blessed creeter! who, it will be remembered, went to Africa as a missionary to help the colony of Freedmen to a knowledge of the true freedom in Christ Jesus. Only two idees that blessed creeter ever seemed to have; first, what his duty wuz, and second, to do it. His letter run as follows:

"Dear Cousin: Here in the far off tropics where I thought to live and die with the people I have loved and given my life to help, the Lord has wonderfully blessed our labors. The Colony is prospering as I never expected to see it. The people are beginning to see that a true republic can only exist by governing one's own self, that in the hands of each individual is the destiny of the nation. We are a peaceful people, greatly helped under the Lord by the fact that not a saloon blackens the pure air of Victor.

"How can the crazed brain of a drunken man help a nation only to weaken and destroy? How can children born under the curse of drink be otherwise than a burden and curse to the public weal? How can a righteous ruler handle this menace to freedom and purity save to stamp it beneath his feet? As we have no saloons, so we have no almshouses or prisons, the few poor and wrongdoers being cared for by private individuals, remunerated by public tax.

"So greatly has the Lord prospered this people that I felt that I was needed elsewhere more than here. I have felt that America instead of Africa needed the help of missionaries and teachers of the Most High. Tidings have reached me of the sad, sad state of the Philippines.

"THE STEAMER HAD BRUNG THE MAIL"

A Gloomy Picture

"Into these islands, inhabited, as has been said, by people half devil, half child, has been introduced the worst crime of America, the drink evil, the worst demon outside the bottomless pit. A Christian civilization, a Christian ruler, sending whole regiments of bright young boys so far from all the deterring and controlling influences of home and home life, the light of happy homes, the idols of fond hearts, sent to face the dreadful climate, the savage warfare; to colonize the graveyards in the sodden earth; to be thrown into the worst evils of war; to face danger and death and with all this provided by the government that should protect them, with this dreadful temptation to ensnare their boyish wills and lead them into captivity

"I feel that God is calling me to go to the Philippines and help these poor boy with the wild blood of youth surging i their veins. So I sail to-morrow wit three of my native converts, good Chris tians, willing to die if need be for the faith."

This letter had been written more'n month, so long had it been coming to m and I wuz tickled enough to think tha when we got to the Philippine we should see Cousin John Richard. And jest as soon as read it I went to Mis Gray's stateroom; she wu abed and cryin', but sh let me in when she foun who it wuz, and I se gladly: "You needn worry any more abou your sick bo bein' alone i Manila; our cou in, John Richa Allen, has gon there and three the noble youn men he has trai ed to help th sick and sinfu they are gone a chaplains. H will find out you boy, and if an body can lead hi to the Great She herd, the gree pastures and sti waters he ca and he will be him what th most devoted p would be to him, and ma, too."

She had been cryin' hard, but her fac looked some brighter. You know how is when you're settin' in deep water, is some comfort when it stops rainin' o you. She wuz in trouble enough an way, but it wuz a great relief and comfo to know that her boy wouldn't have to d without some one to speak words of con fort. I had believed that there wuz cha lains there all the time.

Josiah said when I told him about there wuzn't much chance to find tha boy amongst so many thousand.

But I sez, "Don't you dast to say tha before the Widder Gray. The Lord good enough and powerful enough to lea Cousin John Richard right to that poo lonesome, dyin' boy's bedside."

Up the Pasig River

The shore of Manila looked dretf low and flat as we come up to it some a old Shelmadine's land lays along the lak shore. So you'd think that if it raine hard and raised the water a inch it woul overflow it. And the houses looke dretful low and squatty mebby it wuz o account of earthquakes they built 'em s Josiah thought it wuz so they coul shingle 'em standin' on the ground. inclined to the earthquakes.

Our boat wuz small enough to go ove the surf and up the Pasig river. Th water didn't look very clean, and on wuz floatin' what looked like little cab bage heads. Josiah thought they wu and sez he real excited:

"Thank fortin if they have cabbage to throw away here I shall be likely t git a good biled dinner, and mebby biled puddin' with lemon sass."

But they wuzn't cabbages, they wu some kind of a water plant that growe right there in the water. As we saile along some queer lookin' boats, lookin some like corn houses standin' on enc bulged out towards us from the shor They said they wuz cargo lighters to ou load ships, and mebby they wuz. An one peculiarity I see that I despised. Th natives all seemed to wear their shirt ver their pantaloons, hangin' loose, and ome on 'em didn't have on any panta-ons, jest the shirt, and some not even at, just a sash or so tied round about m.

I despised the sight and sez to Josiah: They might do as much as Adam did nyway; they might wear some leaves ound 'em, there is plenty of fig trees ere I spoze."

And he sez: "I have been thinkin' that is a crackin' good idee to wear the hirt over the pantaloons; it would be ool and look all right after we got used o it; the bottom of the shirt could be uffled or trimmed with tattin or red raid, and they would look as dressy agin s I've always wore 'em."

I looked a dagger at him out of my ight eye and sez: "What won't you take into your head to do next, Josiah Al-en?"

Meeting the Natives

But our attention wuz drawed off by Arvilly, who approached us. She looked kornfully at the costoom of the natives, nd I hearn her say to herself: "Not nuch chance to canvass here." But even s she spoke her eye fell hopefully on the pposite shore, like a good book agent canning the earth and heavens for a pos-ible subscriber.

Miss Meechim, who had come on deck vith Dorothy and Robert, looked benig-antly at the natives and sez: "The poor e shall always have with you," and she ut her hand in the little bag that she lways wore at her side and said: "I won-ler if I have got a copy of that blessed ract with me, 'The Naked Sinner Clothed nd in His Right Mind.'"

But Robert sez to her: "They wouldn't hank you for clothes, Aunt Albina; you vill have to wait until we reach New York; some of the naked there would be gladly covered up from the snow and storms."

"Oh, don't compare our own blessed and with this heathen clime."

"But," sez Robert. "The warm breezes here bring only joy and comfort to that sinner's naked limbs, and the sin of ignorance may be forgiven. But the shivering sinners, crouching on the cold stone door-steps, hearing dimly through their benumbed senses prayers and thanks-givings to the Most High for mercies they have no part in, why that is quite a different matter."

Aronette wuz standing a little ways apart, talking with a young man. He wuz payin' her compliments, I knew, for there wuz a pink flush on her pretty face, and his eyes had admiration in them. I didn't like his looks at all; he looked dissipated and kinder mean, and I thought I would warn her aginst him when I got a good chance. Lucia Wessel, too, wuz holding her young charge by the hand, but her attention wuz all drawed off by another young chap that I'd seen with her a number of times, and I didn't like his looks, he had the same sort of a dissipated look that the other young man had, but I see by the expression of Lucia's innocent eyes that she didn't share in my opinion; she looked as if she wuz fairly wropped up in him. I wondered what Elder Wessel would have said if he could have seen that look. But he wuz in blissful ignorance. He thought her bosom wuz composed of a equal mixture of snow and crystal, through which he could read every thought and emotion as soon as they wuz engraved on it. He thought that there was no characters written there as yet by any manly hand save his own writ in characters of fatherly and daughterly love. He wuz holdin' forth to Arvilly, and she with her nose turned up as fur as nater would let it go, wuz listenin' because he wouldn't let her git away. I thought by her expression he wuz praisin' the license laws, for on no other subject wuz he so eloquent, and on no other did Arvilly's nose turn up to such a hite.

Dorothy and Tommy wondered what those strange trees were that grew on the shore in front, and Robert Strong hastened to their side to help them to such information as he had on the subject. And he had knowledge on almost every subject under the heavens, so it seemed to me.

Josiah's Revolt

Well, anon or a little after, we found ourselves on shore and I wuz glad to feel terry firmy under my feet once more. Lots of times on board ship the terry wuz so fur from the firmy that the solid land felt good under the soles of our shoes. Yes, indeed! And though for some time tables and chairs, and even beds and bureaus had a way of advancin' up towards us and then retreatin' away from us over and over, yet as I say terry wuz considerable more firmy than the deck had been.

Well, it wuzn't long before we found ourselves at a comfortable hotel, not too comfortable, but decently so; and in the fulness of time we wuz seated at the table partaking of food which, though it didn't taste like my good Jonesville vittles, still I could eat and be thankful for. Josiah whispered to me:

"Onions and garlicks and peppers; I never could bear any on 'em, and here I be filled up with 'em; there hain't a single dish on this table but what's full of 'em. Oh Samantha!" sez he pitifully, "if I could only eat one of your good dinnerses or supperses agin it seems as if I would be willin' to die."

And I whispered back to him to be calm. Sez I, "Do be reasonable; it ain't logic or religion to expect to be to home and travelin' abroad at the same time."

He see it wuzn't and subsided with a low groan and begun to nibble agin' on his food, but his looks wuz mournful, and if I could I would have put on a apron willin'ly and gone down into the kitchen and cooked him a good square meal, but I knew it wouldn't be thought on, so I kep' calm.

Well, our bed wuz kinder queer. It wuz quite noble lookin', four high posts with lace curtains looped up and mosquito nettin' danglin' down, and instead of springs a woven cane mattress stretched out lookin' some like our cane seat chairs. How to git under that canopy and not let in a swarm of mosquitoes wuz what we didn't know, but we did finally creep under and lay down. It wuz like layin' on the barn floor, the cane mattress didn't yield a mite, and Josiah's low groans mingled with my sithes for quite a spell. Tommy wuz fast asleep in his little bed and so didn't sense anything. Well, the tegus night passed away, happily I spoze for the attentive mosquitos who shared the canopy with us, and mebby liked to sample foreign acquaintances, but tegus for us, and we wuz glad when it wuz time to git up.

The first meal of the day wuz brought to our room; chocolate not over good, some bread and some eggs, almost raw, wuz what it consisted of. Josiah, who wanted some lamb chops, baked potatoes and coffee, wuz mad as a hen. "Heavens and earth!" sez he, "why I never sucked eggs when a boy; have I got to come to it in my old age? Raw eggs and chocklate you could cut with a knife. A few years of such food will leave you a widder, Samantha."

"Well," sez I, "do let's make the best of it: when you're in Rome do as the Romans do." "I shan't suck eggs, for no Romans or for no Philippine." "Eat 'em with your spoon," sez I, "as you'd ort to."

"Or with my knife," sez he. "Did you see them officers last night to the table eatin' sass with a knife? I should thought they'd cut their mouths open."

"Well, it is their way here, Josiah. Let's keep up and look forrerd to goin' home; that's the best fruit of travelin' abroad anyway, unless it is seein' Tommy so well and hearty."

Josiah looked at his rosy face and he didn't complain another word. He jest worships Thomas Josiah. Well, after we eat this meal we went out walkin'. Josiah and I and Tommy, and I spoze Carabi went along too, though we didn't see him. But then what two folks ever did see each other? Why I never see Josiah, and Josiah never see me, not the real us.

Well, it wuz a strange, strange seen that wuz spread out before us; the place looked more'n half asleep, and as if it had been nappin' for some time; the low odd lookin' houses looked too as if they wuz in a sort of a dream or stupor. The American flag waved out here and there with a kind of a lazy bewildered floppin, as if it wuz wonderin' how under the sun it come to be there ten thousand milds from Washington, D. C., and it wuz wonderin' what on earth it floated out there in the first place for. But come to look at it clost you could see a kind of a determined and sot look in the stars and stripes that seemed to say, "Well, now I am here I hain't goin' to be driv out by no yeller grounded flags whatsumever."

Native Customs and Costumes

Some of the carriages that we met wuz queer lookin', rough wooden two-wheeled carts, that looked as if they'd been made by hand that mornin'. Josiah said that he could go out into the woods with Ury and cut down a tree and make a better lookin' wagon in half an hour, but I don't spoze he could. Some on 'em wuz drawed by a buffalo, which filled Josiah with new idees about drivin' one of our cows in the democrat.

Sez he: "Samantha, it would be real uneek to take you to meetin' with old Line back or Brindle, and if the minister got dry in meetin', and you know ministers do git awful dry sometimes, I could just go out and milk a tumbler full and pass it round to him."

But I drawed his attention off; I couldn't brook the idee of ridin' after a cow and havin' it bellerin' round the meetin' house. The native wimmen we met wuz some on 'em dressed American style, and some on 'em dressed in their own picturesque native costoom. It wuz sometimes quite pretty, and one not calculated to pinch the waist in. A thin waist, with immense flowing sleeves and embroidered chemise showing through the waist, a large handkerchief folded about the neck with ends crossed, a gay skirt with a train and a square of black cloth drawn tight round the body from waist to knees. Stockings are not worn very much, and the slippers are not much more than soles with little strips of leather going over the foot, and no heels. Anon we would meet some Chinamen, with eyes set in on a bias, and their hair hanging in two long tails down their backs; lots of them we see, then a priest would move slowly along, then a Spanish senora, then a sailor, then perhaps a native dressed partly in European costoom lookin' like a fright. The street cars are little things drawed by one horse, and the streets are badly paved when they're paved at all.

There wuz some handsome houses in the residence portion of the city, but aside from the Cathedral there are few public buildings worth seeing. But one thing they have here always beautiful, and that is the luxuriant tropical vegetation, beautiful blossoming trees and shrubs, and the multitude of flowers, tall palms, bamboo, ebony, log-wood, mangoes, oranges, lemons, bread fruit, custard apples, and forty or fifty varieties of bananas, from little ones, not much more than a mouthful, to them eighteen or twenty inches long. Josiah enjoyed his walk, finding many things to emulate when he got back to Jonesville. Among 'em wuz the Chinamen's hair; he thought that it wuz a dressy way to comb a man's hair, and he wondered dreamily how his would look if he let it grow out and braid it. But he said that if he did, he should wear red ribbons on it, or baby blue. But I knew there wuz no danger of his hair ever stringin' down his back, for I could, if danger pressed too near, cut it off durin' his sleep, and would, too, even if it led to words.

A FLOWER IN THE WINDOW

OUTSIDE is a wild nor' wester,
The wind that bringeth the snow.
But my window is bright with a rosy light,
And my little room is aglow;
For the flower I've watched all winter
Has just begun to blow.

In a blaze of vivid scarlet,
Its petals rival the flame
That leaps to birth in a burst of mirth,
And shines in the chimney's frame.
My flower has just such color,
And its tinted leaves are the same.

So small a thing gives pleasure,
The world is dreary to-day;
There are cares to fret, there is pain, and yet
Light falls on the upward way,
And the flower I've watched all winter,
Has brought me a vision of May.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The Grandmother's Lesson

ALL over the world, wherever you find her, the grandmother is the chum of the child. Not merely the friend and instructor and confidante, but the comrade and the chum; a person to run to for goodies when one is hungry, for comfort when one is discouraged and for shelter when one is threatened. Grandmother always takes the child's part, and not to the detriment of the child, but to its advantage.

Over in Holland, where there are some beautiful old-fashioned interiors, like this in the picture, one may see the tiled chimney, the crane on which the kettle may hang, and the spotless cleanliness which cannot tolerate a single speck of dust, or soil of any sort. The cat, a family friend and familiar, sleeps on a chair if he chooses, and drowsily purrs in his complete contentment. Little Wilhelmina, named for the gracious young queen, comes in every day to see grandmother, in a home bright and cheery as this, and the hour for her knitting-lesson is the happiest in her happy day. Her little chubby fingers are clumsy yet, but the work is interesting, and she will soon learn to be as deft and as quick and clever about it as grandmother herself, and she can knit with her eyes shut, or knit in the firelight, or talk and never look at her needles. When youth has gone, and friends have grown fewer than once, and you have time on your hands, knitting is a very pleasant source of occupation. The years may come when Wilhelmina will enjoy — in sweet reverie—the remembered childish time when she sat at her grandmother's feet and learned this art of feminine skill.

GRANDMA AND HER PUPIL

Chaperones

In the old days when Madame Mere and I were girls, we got along quite creditably without chaperones; but in these times, no party of young people caring about good form, can afford to omit the cheery matron who acts in that capacity. This lady may be herself youthful, but she must be married. A married lady of twenty may chaperone a girl of thirty. If unmarried, the chaperon must be a frankly middle-aged spinister over forty, and of some dignity of mien and bearing. A father or a bachelor uncle may officiate as a chaperon to his daughter and her friends, and is generally very popular and successful in that role. Should a young lady go to Europe accompanied by a paid chaperon selected by her mother, the chaperon will carry the purse, make all arrangements en route and pay all bills.

Home Study

About the home study of children we are all aware that there are two opinions. There is no pleasanter sight than the household group gathered under the evening lamp, and occupied with books and slates. When much assistance is needed or exacted from parents, there is apt to be friction, for it must be admitted that few of us, who left school twenty or thirty years ago, are familiar with modern pedagogical methods. What we did know in arithmetic we have forgotten, for it is one thing to be able to pay one's bills and keep one's accounts, and quite another thing to solve fearful and wonderful conundrums about sheep jumping over fences, and cheeses sold in the market and eggs transmuted into silk frocks, and lands and houses changing hands in fractional currency. When it comes to grammar, we parsed in Pope's Essay on Man and Milton's Paradise Lost, but our children diagram sentences in a mystical fashion most puzzling to the beholder, and talk learnedly of adjuncts and other things, and have never a helpful rule like a milestone to mark their path. The old methods have gone out, and we would have to go to school ourselves to learn the new ones. I think it should be insisted upon by parents, that children come home from school armed with the necessary information, so that they may know how to do their next day's work. That is one great duty of the teacher: to fix principles on the minds of the scholars, to exact attention and bring out of each child such powers as he or she may possess. On the other hand, the parent should see that lessons are conscientiously prepared, and that exercises are written out neatly and legibly, also that no small detail is neglected.

When Not to Find Fault

Mothers, may I tell you when not to find fault? Please let me do so.

First, when Teddy falls down and tears a great hole in the knee of his stocking, a hole hard to mend, and to your eyes needless, do not scold. Boys, if well and hearty, will meet with accidents, and tear their clothing. Mend the rent and make the best of it, especially if Teddy tells you all about it. Second, when Lucy lets a dish fall, and you hear the unmistakable crash of breaking china, wait for an explanation before you rush into the kitchen in angry excitement. Dishes slippery with soap-suds drop out of grown-up hands sometimes. I have heard daughters say, when mother broke a cup or platter, "Well, I'm glad I did not do that." It is far better to lose the most prized of our possessions, than for an instant to let go of our tempers. Third, when the teacher sends home the child's report, and it is not a flattering one, its debit side footing up to a higher extent than its credit, look as grave as you like, but find no fault until you have made investigations. In home life, the constant finding of fault is the frost that nips happiness too often in the bud.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—WINNIE. A gentleman meeting you by accident in a public conveyance has no right to pay your fare, unless he is a near relative.

—EMILY MARY. Your cousin is too near you in blood to become your fiance. First cousins would better not marry. But you may continue to be friends.

—W. P. T. Surely you do not read your Bible. If you were familiar with it, you would know that a forgiving temper is enjoined upon us by our Lord, both by precept and example. Jesus bade us forgive our brother's offending us until seventy times seven. Of his own enemies he said on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

—ROSE AND PERRY. If your mother insists on your dressing alike, you cannot help yourselves. Twins, for some reason, do dress exactly alike as a rule, so that they are very puzzling when their resemblance is marked. Persuade your mother to let you dress as you choose. Tell her your Aunt Patience says that girls ought to have a voice about their dress.

—MAUDE. Your age and that of your lover strike me as rather young for matrimony. Wait two years at least, until you are twenty and John twenty-two, particularly as your parents insist upon it. A daughter of eighteen may find many things to occupy her at home for two years longer. Meanwhile John may be saving up his earnings, so that you can have a good start.

—ANXIOUS ONE. Why not join an adult Bible class, and enter for yourself on a regular course of Bible study? You would thus be better prepared for teaching than you now are. No Sunday School teacher should talk a half hour at a time. The art of questioning and bringing out answers is the necessary one, and that can only be acquired by very careful study and much familiarity with the Word of God. I am deeply sorry that you are not happy in your Christian life, but that fact should not keep you from undertaking Christian duty. Do not think about yourself, but pray, read the Bible and keep busy and happiness will come.

THE ETERNAL GOODNESS

I KNOW not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise;
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

And if my heart and flesh are weak
To bear an untried pain,
The bruised reed he will not break
But strengthen and sustain.

No offering of my own I have,
Nor works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gifts he gave,
And plead his love for love.

And so beside the silent sea,
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where his islands lift
Their funded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.—WHITTI

What It Is

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is regular stock, not old nor antiquated, but brought right up to date with the story of the panish-American War, the Annexation f the Hawaiian Islands, together with aborate articles on Cuba, Porto Rico, he Philippines, the Gold Fields of Alas- a and the Klondike. The World-Wide ncyclopedia is a Universal Educator, eating of every subject, great or small, ithin the range of human knowledge. is a great compendium of Geography, istory, Science, Biography, Art and iterature, and is specifically designed to pply in readily accessible shape all the luable information contained in the cy- opedic literature of the age.

The Scholar, the Student, the Profes- onal Man, the Business Man, the echanic, the mother, the wife, the house- eeper, will all find it a ready storehouse f world-wide knowledge, a treasury of cts, a mine of information.

The World Wide Encyclopedia answers very question however difficult or ab- ruse. A digest of all knowledge from he earliest times is contained within its ,000 pages, and no person, however ntutored, provided he can read, need ck for full information on any subject ithin the scope of human knowledge hen once he is the possessor of this reat work of universal interest.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia contains 96 accurate and artistically colored Maps showing every Country in the World, with a separate map for every State in the Union, revised to date.

We are glad of this renewed oppor- nity which enables us to offer a boon ke this to the millions of commendably mbitious men and women, who are liter- lly hungering and thirsting for knowl- dge, to whom we may now open up this easure house of useful and accurate nformation, and bid them revel in its ches to their heart's content.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is very andsomely and durably bound in modern lk-finished cloth with genuine gold amp. The twelve large octavo volumes, ggregating nearly 10,000 large pages, ake an imposing array, attractive hough to ornament the largest and cost- est library in the world. No other en- yclopedia can make a better exhibit on he book shelves, and the ownership of his great work, a complete library in it- elf, ranks its possessor among the intel ctually progressive men of the day.

Work and Study

harpen the wits and strengthen the uscles of body and mind to meet the pportunity when it comes. Luck is sel- om a great factor in life. The towering enius who can disregard ordinary rules nd carve out his own fortunes by mere orce of personality is only one of hun- reds of thousands; he may appear but nce in a century.

The man who stops a runaway horse n the street, gaining credit and, perhaps, dvancement, has to have something more than the opportunity. He has to have the quickness of eye and hand, the courage and strength that come only with training. The falling of an apple at his feet revealed to Sir Isaac Newton in a flash the great principle of gravitation, which revolutionized science; but he had been preparing himself unconsciously for that moment by years of study of the laws of matter. Apples had fallen at the feet of other men before Newton, but they spoke no such ringing lesson, because the other men had not the training to hear it. Sir Samuel Brown conceived the idea of the suspension bridge from seeing a spider's web swinging in the breeze, but he had been a student of engineering and was then devoting himself to the study of bridge building. He was READY!

The World-Wide Encyclopedia has THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Imprint, which is a guaranty of the excellence and reliability of the work. We know it thoroughly and recommend it unhesitatingly. It is regarded as standard in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Editorial rooms.

Self-made Men

Some of the most successful leaders in every profession and every industry have been what are called "self-made men," because they had no advantages of early training and no one to give them a start in life. Henry Wilson, who became vice-president of the United States, was a poor boy whose parents apprenticed him to a farmer when he was ten years old. And yet, in spite of the hard work of the farm, Henry Wilson found time before he was twenty-one to read a thousand books and lay the foundation of the ripe learning that gave him power and prominence in public affairs.

The young man who decides to purchase the World-Wide Encyclopedia and Gazetteer need not fear that after years of study he must shun comparison with the graduates of schools and universities, with those whose means and leisure may have enabled them to employ expensive tutors. He who possesses a copy of that great work, and utilizes it for careful and intelligent study, need fear no comparison with the product of expensive university training. He will have levied tribute on the brightest minds of the age and of all ages. The concentrated learning of the centuries will be placed at his disposal—the ripest thoughts of all philosophers, the tenets of all theologies, the principles of every science, the rules of every profession, and the practical details of every industry. The world will be his curriculum, and its brightest and best thinkers will be his instructors. The rise and fall of nations, the triumphs of statecraft and diplomacy, the influence on action and thought of great discoveries in science, will all be laid bare to his delighted view. The growth of the arts, the latest improvements in handicrafts, the principles of law, of medicine, of commerce, and of agriculture will be unfolded in their due and proper order before him. The wealth of the world will be his, from which to pluck the jewels he admires the most to set in his own crown of knowledge.

A Home University

It will not be amiss to emphasize here the great dual advantages of the study of the World-Wide Encyclopedia and Gazetteer. First, the study can be prosecuted at the home, or even at the workshop, without the aid of expensive teachers or apparatus; second, the self-culture which the scholar acquires by studying for himself, digging out for himself the great truths of nature, of science, of production and of commerce, is the best culture of all. What a man learns in that way sticks to him. He does not forget it like lessons learned by rote at school. Let the student not forget that the highest and most profitable learning is the knowledge of ourselves.

* * * *

The Home University

is open, then, and all are welcome. There is no bar of age, sex or condition. Man is never too young nor too old to learn. Dr. Priestly was 40 years old when his attention was directed to the peculiar action of gases escaping from a beer vat, and he began the studies which resulted in his important discoveries in chemistry. Socrates learned to play musical instruments in his old age, and Cato was eighty when he studied the Greek language. Izaak Walton was ninety when he wrote his immortal work, The Complete Angler, and thousands of other men have done their best work late in life. Genius sometimes blossoms late in life, and no man should let his years discourage him from learning.

Choice of a Profession

If you have not made up your mind as to the vocation of life you wish to pursue, a study of some of the subjects mentioned under "General Home Studies" will help to form your choice, or to correct a choice unwisely made.

In connection with those studies, a perusal of the lives of men who have won fame in different walks of life, who have made the world richer by their writings and discoveries, will be found of fascinating interest. They, too, had their troubles to bear, their disappointments to meet, their obstacles to overcome, and the courage with which they overcame them is one of the most instructive lessons in life.

It may be wise for the young student to study first the department of biography, for in the life of some chemist, architect, engineer, lawyer, poet, painter or physician he may find an impulse stimulating him irresistibly to follow the same path in life.

Many of the hundreds of biographies contained in the World-Wide Encyclopedia and Gazetteer are character studies of the strongest kind which no young man can read without being deeply impressed by their lessons. A good character is as valuable a possession as great learning. To mention some biographies that will splendidly illustrate desirable elements of character, we unhesitatingly recommend the following:

Character Studies

For lessons of diligence, application and perseverance, read the lives of Benjamin Franklin, Wellington, Faraday, Garfield, Charles Knight, Cobden, Hugh Miller, Newton, Scott, Hume, Buffon, Daguerre, Pare, Herschel, Gainsborough and Grant.

To learn of gallant struggles against poverty, sickness and disaster, we advise you to read the lives of Palissy, Hugh Miller, Galileo, Elihu Burritt, Carlyle, Bunyan, Tasso, Arkwright, Jacquard, Sir Humphrey Davy, Faraday, Stephenson, Ary Scheffer, Franklin and Andrew Johnson.

For examples of energy, promptitude and hardihood, look into the biographies of Napoleon, Peter the Great, Saladin, Murat, Sheridan, Blaine, Ney, Boulton, Richelieu, Juarez, John Brown, Wellington, H. M. Stanley, Clive, Fr. Xavier, Nelson, Cromwell, Andrew Jackson and R. E. Lee.

For the manly qualities of patience and fortitude in reverses, peruse the lives of Columbus, Hampden, Dante, Raleigh, Trenck, Kossuth, Sir R. Peel, Tocqueville, Watt, Bottgher, J. Hunter, Audubon, Layard, Addison, Harvey, Henry Wilson, C. Lorraine, Flaxman, West and Pugin.

Pleasant instances of cheerfulness and equanimity of temper may be found in the lives of Goldsmith, Ben Jonson, Sidney Smith, Lord Palmerston and Abraham Lincoln.

Lessons of integrity and uprightness of principle are shown in the careers of Diogenes, Newton, Burke, Dr. Arnold, Scott, Sir T. More, W. Chambers, Howard, Handel, Loyola, Horner, Bergh, Emmett, Thierry, Canning, Wilberforce and Stonewall Jackson.

Method, precision and painstaking—Nicolas Poussin, Angelo, Cuvier, Titian, Napier, Wordsworth, Brougham, Macaulay, Wellington, Pope, W. Irving, Cecil and Disraeli.

And for the supreme lessons of purity of life and nobility of motive, examine the lives of Washington, Wilberforce, Greeley, Lafayette, Garrison, Whittier, and other illustrious personages of our own and foreign lands.

Some we have here named might be catalogued, indeed, as types of every excellence that should adorn human character. Such are our own Washington and Benjamin Franklin.

The Men and Women of To-Morrow

Boys and girls, you who have life and the world before you, do not let the moments fly idly by. Life seems long, but there is much to accomplish. Youth is the golden age for work and for study as well as for play, and in after years each wasted hour may cause you unavailing regret.

Whatever you know, there is much more to learn; whatever your condition, you may better it. If you are poor and can afford little money and less time for study, you are no worse off than were thousands of the wisest and wealthiest men of the day who sprang from poor beginnings. Edison studied telegraphy while a newsboy, and electricity when a telegraph operator. Lincoln and Grant and Garfield were poor boys, and your condition is incomparatively better than was theirs, because in the World-Wide Encyclopedia and Gazetteer you have an unrivaled textbook, a collection of the wisdom of the ages ready at your hand, while they had to trust to scattered and meagre sources of information.

But they, and others like them. though, had industry and a determination to succeed, which are qualities far more to be desired than genius. Bring such qualities with you to the study of the World-Wide Encyclopedia and Gazetteer and you cannot fail to win your way triumphantly in the battle of life.

Medical Information

Medicine and surgery are staffs on which men lean to an increasing extent. The expert in this dual profession, or in either branch, will always be sure of a bountiful measure of success. There is in the World-Wide Encyclopedia a copious supply of information on all medical subjects, the principal articles having been written by the profoundest medical scholars; and even the professional man with years of experience will find in them a vast amount of helpful knowledge. To the student of medicine the following World-Wide Encyclopedia articles will be simply invaluable:

The War in South Africa

NO one can read the description of the struggle at Paardeberg without feeling increased horror at war of all kinds. Gen. Cronje was obliged to halt at that place in his flight from Magersfontein, his cattle, which were dragging his guns and his provisions, being utterly exhausted. Gen. Kitchener lost no time in pushing forward his troops on all sides f the Boer general's position, so that n a few hours he was completely surounded. There appears to have been ome dissension in the Boer camp, for a nessenger was sent to the British which lainly intimated that Cronje was ready o surrender, but when General Kitchener ent toward the laager to receive Cronje's ubmission, he was met by another mesenger who announced that the Boer genral had resolved to fight to the death. Thereupon a renewal of the bombardment vas ordered and the fire of fifty guns was oncentrated on a space not more than mile square. The carnage at first must ave been dreadful, until the Boers succeeded in digging trenches and availing hemselves of the cover afforded by the ocks in the bed of the river. The British eneral, learning that there were women nd children in the Boer ıager, sent word that they ight come out, and promsed to convey them to any lace of safety that he night designate. He also ffered surgical assistance o the wounded Boers, but Cronje curtly rejected both f the humane offers. His osition, however, was obiously untenable and very day added to the useless sacrifice of life. On February 27, Cronje sent word that he would surender unconditionally, asking only that the women nd children in his camp e given safe conduct. With this request Lord Roberts promptly complied. nd Cronje and his officers ntered the British lines. The Boer commander was kindly received by Lord Roberts. The women and children, who had been led o expect that they would e butchered, were astonished at being so generously treated. A numerous British force was sent into the Boer camp to attend to the wounded Boers and to bury their dead, which were lying festering in the sun. The living were very hungry and the British commissariat was taxed to provide sufficient food for them. The fighting has been severe in the East and on both sides instances of heroism have occurred. One of these is pictured in an illustration on this page. It is that on Chaplain Hill of the British army, who was seen kneeling by a dying man in the midst of a hail of bullets. As he read the prayers for the dying in the ear of the wounded man, an officer remonstrated with him. "Lie down," he said, "you have no business to risk your life in that way." The chaplain replied: "This is my place and I am doing my special business," and went calmly on with his prayer. A score of men were killed near him, but the chaplain was not hit. Such heroism shows how great are the men engaged on both sides in this awful war, and makes it all the more deplorable that so many of them are killed. Peace-loving Christians cry with the prince of old:

Shall the sword devour for ever? Knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? (II. Samuel 2:26).

CROSSING THE SOUTH AFRICAN VELDT BY WAGON TRAIN

A Homesick Boy

Application has been made to charitable societies in San Francisco for assistance in sending a boy to New York. He had been sent there by the Gerry Society of New York about a month ago at his own request, but would not remain, and begged that he might be sent back. He said he could easily earn his own living in New York and could not bear to be away from the city. The boy has had a strange history. The first thing known about him was that he had lived from infancy until his tenth year, with a lady in San Francisco, who was much attached to him. One day about six years ago a physician called upon the lady and told her that he was willing to adopt the boy, having been an intimate friend of the boy's father. She consented and the boy came with the physician to New York. He was sent to school and was treated with great kindness. But he quarreled with his foster father and wanted to go back to the lady with whom his early years had been passed. He was sent, and the lady was rejoiced to receive him. She had made a will leaving all she had to him, and had for the past six years economized in every way to make his inheritance larger. The boy says she is living in squalid poverty, is eccentric, and is disinclined to give him the comforts of home. The lady is heartbroken at his wishing to leave her and declares that she has toiled and saved for years to enrich her adopted son who now spurns her. It would be well if she could now overcome her monomania and use some of the money she has saved to comfort her declining years. The boy for whom she has made so many sacrifices is evidently not worthy of them. Everyone must be convinced of that fact; yet how few there are who realize what their position would be if God acted so toward them! After all his kindness and the sacrifice he made in giving up his Son to die for the human race, how few, comparatively, are grateful to him and love him.

He came unto his own and his own received him not (John 1:11).

A Modern Macbeth

An astonishing confession was made a few days ago by a prisoner in the penitentiary at Reading, Pa. He is serving a sentence for threatening to set fire to a house. For some days he has been in a depressed condition, which has been observed by the warden and the prisoners with whom the man worked. His face grew haggard and his eyes had a wild, terrified look. The man seemed so near dementia that the warden took him into his private room and questioned him as to the matter that was troubling him. He maintained an obstinate silence at first, but finally said that he was haunted by the phantom of a man whom he killed six years ago. Wherever he went about the prison the phantom followed him and when he was shut up in his cell the phantom entered with him and remained, silently accusing him through the long hours of the night. Under pressure he related the circumstances of the murder and described the place in which the dead body of his victim had been concealed. An inquiry has been made and it was found that a dead body with injuries such as the prisoner described had been discovered by the police about six years ago in the place mentioned, but as no clue had been obtained to the perpetrators of the crime, it had remained a mystery. The misery the prisoner endured must have been extreme. Though the phantom was a product of his own accusing conscience, it was doubtless as real to him as if it had actually existed. The fact that a guilty mind is capable of so torturing its possessor, ought to be a warning against sin of all kinds. Even men who do not believe in a material hell must see that we have within us capacities for suffering so intense, that the words of Scripture are no exaggerations:

The smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever and they have no rest day nor night (Rev. 14:11).

BRITISH CHAPLAIN COMFORTING A DYING SOLDIER

The Christian Herald in the Arctic

A letter received last week from Lower Lebarge, N. W. T., tells the following interesting incident: "In my trip over the ice this winter from Dawson to the coast we cut down a dead tree to make a fire. In the hollow of the tree we found a squirrels' nest made from an old copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The fact that a nest miles and miles away from any human being should have been made of a paper published on the other side of the United States is surely unique. I thought you might be interested in knowing how extended your circulation is, as it reaches even the squirrels of the Klondike. Hoping that you may have a still larger circulation, I remain yours truly, Ralph W. Mayer." We knew from our mailing list that we had subscribers in the Klondike, but until reading our correspondent's letter we were not aware that the squirrels found a use for the paper. It was probably an old copy, from which, we trust, some family had derived spiritual comfort before it went to give physical comfort to the squirrels. We are thankful to know, from the letters sent to this office by our readers, that many of them have gained from its perusal that peace with God, which gives to their higher natures that rest and solace that the lower natures of the animals get from a soft nest. Like the Psalmist who compared his delight in the altars of God's house to the rest of a bird in its nest, the spiritual man is satisfied in the truth.

Yea the sparrow hath found a house, and the swallow a nest for herself where she may lay her young even thine altars, O Lord of hosts, my King and my God (Ps. 84:3).

BRIEF NOTES

The Baptist Young People's Union has decided to hold its next international convention at Cincinnati. The date is July 12–15.

Rev. H. M. Wharton has lately conducted a most successful revival at Rockford, Ill., under the auspices of the local churches. Many conversions are reported.

A generous friend of Young Men's Christian Associations has offered to erect a building at a cost of $45,000 if other friends will subscribe a maintenance fund of $25,000.

A remarkable fact, showing how widespread was Mr. Moody's influence, is that a Moody memorial meeting was held at Tokio, Japan, soon after the news of his death was received, and was largely attended.

Evangelist E. P. Hammond's meetings at Charleston, S. C., have been wonderfully blessed. At the conclusion of two weeks' work among the whites he held a series of meetings among the colored people.

Mite boxes for use in Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, etc., in taking up collections for the relief of the starving people in India, will be furnished Free on application to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

The New York Christian Home for Intemperate Men, at Madison avenue and Eighty-sixth street, has had one of the most successful years in its history. The manager, Rev. G. S. Avery, reports that in no previous year has the home received so large a number of needy men, asking for help to overcome the liquor habit.

Rev. E. P. Telford, writing from Brattleboro, Vt., says that the meetings there have opened hopefully. The last two weeks in Boston the crowds were larger than ever and the blessing of God was signally manifested. Mr. Telford's next engagement is at Peabody, Mass., whence he goes to Somerville, Mass., and afterwards to Cincinnati and Toledo, Ohio.

.. The Neglected Continent ..

Mr. Olsson About to Return to South America — His Plan of Missionary Work

NATIVE INDIA RUBBER WORKERS ON THE BENI RIVER, BOLIVIA

REV. EMILO OLSSON, the well-known South American missionary and explorer, who has been making a protracted visit to this country, is about to return to his field of labor in the "Neglected Continent." Our readers, to whom he has already told the story of his journeys and labors, will be interested to hear something further about the work he proposes to inaugurate.

This plan is practical and well-defined. To labor successfully among the Indians of the forest it is necessary to be acquainted with their dialects and languages, which are very numerous; Mr. Olsson expects to establish in Buenos Ayres, or its vicinity, a school of interpreters, where the study of these languages can be conducted and where native missionaries can learn English and thereby be enabled to render God's word into the tongues of their own people and thus impart it to them; another part of his plan is a training school for Indian children, where they may be educated both in Christianity and in forms of useful industry.

"South America," says Mr. Olsson, "has a just claim to be called the 'Neglected Continent.' Think of New York or London with only one preacher to every 200,000 souls! which is about the average in South America. I have journeyed 4,000 miles through the interior without meeting a single Protestant missionary." To some of the strange, half-civilized peoples Mr. Olsson preached through an interpreter; there were others who could understand when he spoke in Spanish, which is the common language of the continent. In a steamer upon which he was traveling inland to explore the great region of the Rio de la Plata he counted representatives of twelve different tribes. "I will talk to those people," he thought, "and they will carry the message to their tribes." He asked the captain's permission to preach; the answer was: "Oh, yes; you can have the ship." Nearly everybody on board came to the meeting and many were interested.

On one occasion, Mr. Olsson was traveling in a caravan, escorted by Gauchos, who are treacherous and quarrelsome; at night, when they laid down, they put their revolvers under them, ready to jump up and fight one another at a moment's notice. Mr. Olsson had no revolver, but he had plenty of Bibles, and placed one under his head. They looked at him in wonder, and next day wanted to know what it was that he had used for his pillow and that had given him such a sense of security; the quietness of his slumbers had impressed them. Thus they became interested in his Bibles, and when he talked to them of the "Great Spirit," they were glad to listen.

Mr. Olsson feels peculiar concern for the hopeless and benighted inhabitants of the great india-rubber territory. Slavery is carried on in connection with the India rubber trade. The Indians transport the product in canoes on dangerous rivers, and in shooting the treacherous rapids many poor creatures have lost their lives.

Mr. Olsson has just issued an interesting summary of his work, which may be had of the publisher, M. E. Munson, Bible House, New York City, postpaid for fifty cents. Any of our readers who desire to help in his work can forward contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

NEW HOME RUPTURE CURE

Remarkable Method that Heals Any Rupture Without Pain or Danger

No Operation or Detention From Work —Is Cheap, Safe and Sure.

Dr. W. S. Rice has backed up with convincing facts his statement that rupture can be cured at the patients' home without pain, danger operation or detention from work. He has invented a cheap and reliable method that has met with marvelous success and thousands of people ruptured for years have been permanently cured. It cured R. M. Wilsie, of Brandon, Wis., who had been ruptured 20 years. Mrs. M. E. Smith, Rockingham, Vt., was badly ruptured and cured herself by Dr. Rice's method. Wm. Bigford, Bishop Mills, Ont., tried various trusses with no success and finally cured himself by the Rice plan. Jacob Lindner, Drums, Pa., owes his cure to Dr. Rice. G. Nilson, Sogn, Minn., has a double rupture and calls Dr. Rice's method a God-send.

Several thousand cases are reported cured by this remarkable method and as it is very low in price, easily used, adapted to either sex, adults or children, every ruptured person should at once investigate it. Write to Dr. W. S. Rice, 392-D, Main St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a full description, so you can cure yourself in a few weeks, long before the heavy work of the springtime begins. Do not fail to write to-day and if you know of others afflicted, send their names for this wonderfully valuable information. They will appreciate your kindness.

A FEW PLAIN FACTS

On the Curability of Consumption, Asthma a Bronchitis

BY DR. ROBERT HUNTER.

I have made the lungs a specialty for n ly fifty years, and know by experience t consumption is curable in all stages. By I do not mean that it is curable in every c for in some the patient's constitution is bad and broken down that no healing po is left in the body. But treated in its ea stages, fully 95 per cent. recover under a septic medicated air inhalations.

But the mere act of inhaling some fragr nostrum is not what I mean by inhalat treatment. The remedies must be adapte the disease and condition of each patient. T physician must have thorough knowledge medicines, be able to detect the differ forms of lung disease and have experience the action of inhaled remedies on the lu or he cannot apply it with success.

Consumption, to have the same chance cure as other diseases, must be treated in early stage, before serious injury has b done to the lung structures. Almost ev case is seen in this stage by the patient's fa ily physician, and, if he knew the remedies use, their strength, and how to apply them the lungs, there would be few deaths by c sumption.

But what possible chance has anyone flicted with consumption under the care of p sicians who never cured a case in their wh professional career, who confess that th have no curative treatment of their own, a no confidence in anything they can do for disease? What moral right have they treat consumption at all, or to permit th patients to believe they are striving to c them, when all they are doing is but a wret ed system of palliation of symptoms?

Here is the real cause of this widespre mortality of consumption. People die it because general physicians do not know proper treatment and are wholly incom tent to cope with it. Before they can do they must be retaught the principles of m ical science which govern the treatment of local diseases, and, acting under them, m discover, as I did, the remedies, which, wh locally applied to the lungs, will kill th germs and heal the ravages they have ma in that organ.

I have given to the world a positive c for consumption in my Antiseptic Medica Air Treatment, when applied before mor lesions have taken place. It is a treatm which places Consumption in the list of c able maladies and renders their cure certain other serious local diseases. By it heali and germicidal remedies are brought i direct contact with the internal surfaces the nose, throat, larynx, air tubes and cells the lungs. It soothes the mucous lining the breathing organs, arrests irritation a prevents inflammation, while the antisept destroy the germ life on which the disease pends.

A few cases are as good as a thousand t I might refer to; write to any of them. personal letter from them may be the mea of saving your life.

TESTIMONIALS.

Mr. A. L. Peer, 179 Washington street, Newa N. J., says: "I had 27 hemorrhages and lost pounds in weight; I was cured by Dr. Hunte treatment."

Mrs. Edward Raynor, 174 Bank street, Newa N. J., says: "I had the worst symptoms of c sumption, fever, night sweats, hemorrhages, gr shortness of breath and loss of flesh, and I owe recovery to Dr. Hunter's treatment."

BE NEAR ME

O THOU whose perfect love
Casteth out fear,
Be near me when my sky
Is bright and clear.

Be near me when the world
Seems hard and cold;
When friends forsake, and foes
Grow strong and bold.

Be near me when I pass
Through death's dark vale,
For then the arm of flesh
Will surely fail.

Be thou my strength, my stay,
While life shall last;
My shield and hiding place
Till storms are past.

Dorcas' Work Multiplied

he Remarkable History of America's Pioneer Women's Benevolent Society—Founded by a Quakeress

PHILADELPHIA lays claim to the oldest woman's benevolent organization in the country. It was founded one hundred and four years ago by twenty-three young women of prominent Quaker families and is still a ourishing organization. It is called "The emale Society for the Relief and Em- oyment of the Poor." Employment is ven during the winter months in knitting, ending and sewing to more than a hun- ed women. The product of their labor disposed of at a store attached to the ome of the club. Membership in the or- nization is inherited through the eldest aughter passing in direct line from the ounders. The business is conducted by committee of thirteen, and the officers e two clerks and a treasurer.

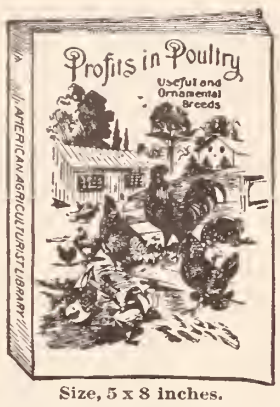
The history of this pioneer club is ex- edingly interesting. A number of cul- ured young women who had been associ- ed in a social way, organized in 1795, rough the exertions of Anne Parrish, the ociety to relieve the terrible distress oc- asioned by the ravages of yellow fever in hiladelphia. At the first meeting of the Friendly Circle," as it was then called, eld in the room of Rose Lory, in Videll's lley, back of Chestnut street, on Novem- er 9, 1795, there were twenty-three pres- nt. Thousands of families were relieved nd assisted by the untiring efforts of this ody of young women. In 1811 the name Female Society of Philadelphia for the elief and Employment of the Poor," was dopted. The society was incorporated 1815. A house of industry was estab- shed where work was prepared for the nployment of the poor and wages paid em for their labors. This house, known s the "Home for Spinners," was on Arch reet above Second, and continued there ntil fifty years ago, when it was removed o No. 112 North Seventh street, and gain to Seventh and Race streets. Dur- g the winter months, from eighty to one undred women are employed there five ays in the week. They do coarse and ne sewing, and quilt silk afghans and otton comfortables. Part of this work is old in the store attached to the house: he rest is made to order for outside cus- omers. A hot dinner is provided for the omen, for their children who come from chool, and their infants, who are cared or in the nursery. Each woman receives pair of shoes during the winter. If sick, ey are visited; and in case of a disabil- y, they receive a small weekly sum.

The Bible is read aloud daily to the orkers. In this busy hive of eighty or inety women, each plying her needle, ome sew unbleached garments; others re quilters bending over the frames, volving intricate patterns on bordered lk afghans filled with wool; and some ery aged women can only sew carpet- gs. Recently a Saving Fund was intro- uced, of which the women avail them- lves, saving from five to fifty cents eekly from their scanty wages, upon hich the bank pays interest.

The present officers of this historic in- titution are: Caroline N. Rhoads, clerk; annah P. Morris, assistant clerk; mma Cadbury, treasurer. Acting ommittee: Mary Randolph, Martha P. Villiams, Elizabeth W. Perot, Alice ennock, Margaret H. Jones, Isabella . Pennock, Susanna W. Lippincott, artha L. Willits, Rebecca C. Reeve, ary Webster and Mary H. Biddle.

"THE BEST POULTRY BOOK ON THE MARKET."

PROFITS IN POULTRY



Size, 5 x 8 inches.

Contains 352 Pages, 154 Illustrations, Illuminated Cover, and 18 Color Plates of Leading Breeds.

By JAMES RANKIN, P. H. JACOBS, T. M. FERRIS, BURR KNAPP, W. H. RUDD, and others. Edited by the Poultry Editor American Agriculturist.

This new, revised and enlarged edition of what has always been recognized as the standard work on poultry, is nearly one-third larger than any previous edition, and has been fully brought up to the requirements of the present day. The ways and means by which eggs or poultry can be grown at a profit are discussed in great detail.

The chapter on artificial incubation alone is worth many times the price of the book to anyone engaged in poultry raising as a business. Care of chicks, diseases and their treatment, feeding and care for eggs, or for meat, building coops and houses, caponizing, marketing, warfare against pests, raising waterfowl and ornamental poultry, are described at length. The reference matter and tables are a special feature of the book. Experience of breeders and poultry farmers has been drawn upon freely, resulting in that breadth of view which can be obtained only by comparison of successful methods in actual practice.

FREE to Every Reader of THIS JOURNAL. This great work was never before sold for less than $1, but we have printed an enormous edition (paper covers), and will send it to every subscriber to the weekly American Agriculturist for three months, on receipt of only 35 cents postpaid, provided you mention where you saw this ad. This offer is to new subscribers only. Everybody knows the sterling merit of this great agricultural weekly (formerly monthly). Its poultry department alone is worth the year's subscription price. It is now published in three editions. You get the western edition (Orange Judd Farmer of Chicago) if you live in the west; the American Agriculturist edition if you live in the middle or southern states, and the eastern edition (The New England Homestead of Springfield), if you live in N. E. or the Provinces.

Send 35 cents in silver or stamps; the book will follow in a few days, and for three months the edition of the American Agriculturist circulating in your own state, containing the markets and special local features characteristic of your section. This offer is not good unless you mention the paper in which you saw this advertisement.

MONEY-IN-POULTRY CONTEST. A colossal scheme inaugurated by the American Agriculturist to increase the profit and lessen the work of poultry culture. The prize list is headed by $500 in gold contributed by American Agriculturist, as a starter. Other contributions will probably swell the list to hundreds of prizes exceeding $5000 in value. Full particulars free to every one who sends us 35 cents for American Agriculturist three months and the color plate book "Profits in Poultry"—$1.75 worth for only 35 cents. Your money back if not satisfied. We were established in 1842. You can depend upon us.

Address orders to either of our offices, but to avoid delay, send to the one nearest you.

This is the sworn statement of a man who was cured:

"My lower limbs seemed to be dying—losing all sense of outward feeling. The most excruciating pains made me almost wild with misery and I could not stand alone. I tried electricity with no avail. Several physicians gave me treatment which was not effective. One day I read of a man who had Locomotor Ataxia, and cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I procured a half dozen boxes, and took them before I was convinced a cure was possible, and finally used one box a week. My pains gradually disappeared, color came to my flesh, I could walk, run and jump, and actually dispensed with a cane." JOEL SHOMAKER,
Editor Farmer and Dairyman,
North Yakima, Wash.

NEOSHA, MO.

Dear Editor:—Miss Marietta Holly is unquestionably the humorist and satirist of America. She is a dauntless champion of right and an intrepid denouncer of wrong. Possessing eminent literary ability, high mental culture, and being literally covered with the laurels of fame; yet, in her works there is a total absence of pedantry, pomposity or effort after effect. She commands our admiration by the artistic and exhaustive manner in which she handles her theme; fascinates us by being so irresistibly true, so perfectly natural, so absolutely funny, that our hearts are melted with human sympathy and we are convulsed with laughter; her wit flowing as spontaneously as the gurgling merriment from the lips of childhood. Her pen is a double-edged sword, tempered by the beauties of her devout Christian character. A literary feast of the highest order awaits us in "Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife." We welcome "Samantha" with delight, with Christian love and Christian fellowship, to the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A Fugitive's Prayer

Among the prisoners captured by the Boers in an attack on an armored train recently was Mr. Winston Churchill, a son of the late Lord Randolph Churchill and a descendant of the famous Duke of Marlborough, who in Queen Anne's reign won the great victory of Blenheim. Mr. Winston Churchill has gone to South Africa as the correspondent of a London daily journal. When the Boers fired into the train, Mr. Churchill, with a few other athletic young men, made his escape: but when he reached a place of safety his heart smote him for leaving his wounded companions, and he returned to help them. He was taken prisoner and was sent with the other prisoners to a place of confinement. After remaining a few days he determined to make his escape. The Boer sentries never pursued an escaping prisoner, but, being picked marksmen, they shot the fleeing man down: but Mr. Churchill thought he might avoid that fate in the darkness, so one night he climbed the stockade around the open space in which the prisoners were confined and hid among the trees, finally reaching Durban in safety. In describing his escape, he says: "While I was hiding among the trees I prayed to that Higher Power which interferes more often than we are prone to admit. I prayed long and earnestly for help and guidance. My prayer, as it seems to me, was swiftly and wonderfully answered."

He Preaches Without Pay

A Faithful Trenton Pastor who, Like Mr. Gillespie, has no "Commercial Contract"

THE case of Rev. Mr. Gillespie, the Western clergyman who recently resigned from a wealthy and prosperous pastorate, in order that he might "serve Christ without pay" in the evangelical field, has attracted extensive notice. In Trenton, N. J., there is a pastor whose experience is similar in some respects to that of Mr. Gillespie. Rev. S. K. Grady preaches the Gospel without "commercial contract" to people who are too poor to make such a contract. He says: "As regards the freedom to preach the Gospel to the poor, our cases seem to be alike. My work is for the most part among those who are extremely poor, and to some extent among the criminal classes, as I hold a weekly service in our county jail, and my great object in writing this letter is to ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to pray for me, and ask that many prisoners and others to whom I carry God's message of mercy and of love may be saved by grace here, and brought to the enjoyment of eternal glory hereafter."

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years

HOLMES & IDE, DEPARTMENT H, TROY, N. Y.

AFTER 30 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
I HAVE THE BEST Brain
and

on earth for all weakened conditions, regardless of cause. It is a liquid remedy, which is of special value in cases of weak and irregular action of the heart, neurasthenia, sick and nervous headache, nervous indigestion, many forms of dyspepsia, St. Vitus' dance, vertigo, dizziness, rush of blood to the head from change of life, spasmodic twitching of the nerves of the face or any part of the body, insomnia, hysteria, paralysis, locomotor-ataxia, and all complications which may be caused by abuses which produce a weakened condition of the system. It is also invaluable in the treatment of the debility incident to old age, mental strain and overwork, and all forms of mental and nervous disease.

Voluntary Testimony Like the Following Is Received Daily:

My daughter, when about seven years of age, began to suffer with nervous spells. We called them fainting spells, as we disliked to have it said she had fits or epilepsy. After trying most everything we heard of, and consulting several physicians, and finding no relief, I was advised to try DR. A. S. JOHNSON'S BRAIN and NERVE TONIC, which we did, with happy results. She has had no spells since ten years of age. She is now eighteen, and in perfect health.
MRS. JULIA CUMMINGS.

It is with pleasure that I can testify to the value of DR. JOHNSON'S BRAIN and NERVE TONIC treatment for nervous disorders. I feel that I would not be doing my duty to the medical profession and the public at large did I not make known the value of this wonderful remedy. During my many years of experience as a professional nurse, I have found it to be one of the best, if not the best, medicine I could use as a remedy for nervous and debilitated conditions. It acts directly upon the nerve tissues, and thus its restorative effects are quickly manifested. DR. JOHNSON'S BRAIN and NERVE TONIC has been a blessing to many of my patients as well as myself.
SARAH PALMER, Professional Nurse.

While the claims for the Tonic may seem strongly put, its valuable properties are in no way overstated. It should be distinctly understood, however, that it is not a factory preparation, is not of the "cure-all" variety, and has nothing of quackery, humbug, or the brazen fraud of widely advertised panaceas in its composition. It is simply a superior prescription for the cure of nervous complaints, which has been used and improved during upwards of thirty years' private practice by Dr. Johnson, and one which has proven so universally untailing that he feels that it should be given a wider field of usefulness.

Interested persons may write Dr. Johnson with the same confidence that would be given their own family physician. His standing in the community where his life-work has been done can easily be ascertained by writing any bank or business house in Battle Creek. The Doctor will send a full month's treatment to any address on receipt of $1.00. Address all letters of inquiry, or orders plainly, A. S. Johnson, M.D., Battle Creek, Mich.

FRIED ONIONS

Indirectly Caused the Death of the World's Greatest General

It is a matter of history that Napoleon was a gourmand, an inordinate lover of the good things of the table, and history further records that his favorite dish was fried onions; his death from cancer of stomach, it is claimed also, was probably caused from his excessive indulgence of this fondness for the odorous vegetable.

The onion is undoubtedly a wholesome article of food, in fact has many medicinal qualities of value, but it would be difficult to find a more indigestible article than fried onions, and to many people they are simply poison, but the onion does not stand alone in this respect. Any article of food that is not thoroughly digested becomes a source of disease and discomfort, whether it be fried onions or beef steak.

The reason why any wholesome food is not promptly digested is because the stomach lacks some important element of digestion; some stomachs lack peptone, others are deficient in gastric juice, still others lack Hydro chloric acid.

The one thing necessary to do in any case of poor digestion is to supply those elements of digestion which the stomach lacks, and nothing does this so thoroughly and safely as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Dr. Richardson, in writing a thesis on treatment of dyspepsia and indigestion, closes his remarks by saying, "for those suffering from acid dyspepsia, shown by sour, watery risings, or for flatulent dyspepsia shown by gas on stomach, causing heart trouble and difficult breathing, as well as for all other forms of stomach trouble, the safest treatment is to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal. I advise them because they contain no harmful drugs, but are composed of valuable digestives, which act promptly upon the food eaten. I never knew a case of indigestion or even chronic dyspepsia which Stuart's Tablets would not reach."

Cheap cathartic medicines claiming to cure dyspepsia and indigestion can have no effect whatever in actively digesting the food and to call any cathartic medicine a cure for indigestion is a misnomer.

Every druggist in the United States and Canada sells Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and they are not only the safest and most successful but the most scientific of any treatment for indigestion and stomach troubles.

WHY
Can we Save You Money on a vehicle, harness, fly net or saddle?

Because we have no agents.

Can we really do it? We say yes. Can we prove it without cost to you? We can. How? We will ship you a harness, saddle, or vehicle, without you sending a single cent, and let you look it over at your freight house and if you don't find we have given you the biggest bargain you ever saw or heard of, return the goods to us at our expense. We give with each vehicle a 2-year iron-clad guarantee, protecting you from poor material and workmanship. Our vehicle catalogue describes the largest line of buggies, road wagons, phaetons, surries, spring wagons and carts, harness, fly nets and saddles ever shown in one book. It's free. Send for it.

For the Best

WHY sin has such a hold upon the soul
We may not know;
Enough for us that he who made the whole
Has willed it so.
But sweet faith whispers to us we must wait,
And in the end
It will be seen, when we have passed the gate,
Who is our Friend.

We cannot tell why sorrow's shadows fall
Upon our way;
Why friends depart whom we would fain recall
To light and day;
Why pass from time, companion kindred hearts
We love so well;
Why earthly joy so suddenly departs
We cannot tell.

But this we know from reason's precious touch—
Mere human sight—
That He, the Being who has done so much,
Must still do right.
No matter what agnosticism says,
Our souls may rest
Through all vicissitudes on this rock-base:
'Tis for the best.

Prevailing Prayer

A reader (Mrs. A. O. K.), sends this spiritual experience, which many will read with appreciation:

Some months ago among your "questions and answers," I read of a daughter watching by the bedside of her mother, who seemed near death's door. It occurred to the daughter that she might ask God to bring back her mother, to restore her to health. The prayer was answered in the restoration. At the time I read this, I myself was in a very weak state; not able to do for myself. I resorted to prayer; making this promise, that if God would restore me my health and strength, I would write and send this testimony to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. God has heard and answered me, and so I write this.

WASHINGTON

Three-day Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

Few short journeys are as interesting as a trip to Washington, the Nation's Capital; and such a trip can be made most satisfactorily by participating in the three-day personally-conducted tours of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Besides the advantages secured in rates, the absolute freedom from care, and the general comfort and convenience afforded, an extended experience and familiarity with the city enable the Tourist Agents of this company to visit the various points of interest with the least confusion and delay, and at the most opportune moments, thereby insuring an economy of time not otherwise attainable.

The next tour of the season leaves Thursday, March 15. Round-trip rate, covering railroad transportation for the round trip, meals en route, transfer of passenger and ordinary baggage to hotel, hotel accommodations, and guides, services of experienced tourist agent and chaperon, in short, every item of necessary expense, $14.50 from New York, $13.50 from Trenton, and $11.50 from Philadelphia, with proportionate rates from other points. These rates cover accommodations for two days at the Arlington, Normandie, Riggs, or Ebbitt House. For accommodations at Willard's, Regent, Metropolitan, or National Hotel, $2.50 less. Side trips to Mount Vernon, Richmond, Old Point Comfort, and Norfolk at greatly reduced rates.

All tickets good for ten days, with special hotel rates after expiration of hotel coupons.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents; Tourist Agent, 1106 Broadway, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; or address Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

THE LOOM OF TIME

MAN'S life is laid in the loom of time
To a pattern he does not see,"
While the weaver works and the shuttles fly
Till the dawn of eternity.
Some shuttles are filled with silver thread,
And some with threads of gold;
While often but the darker hue,
Is all that they may hold.

But the weaver watches with skilful eye
Each shuttle fly to and fro,
And sees the pattern so deftly wrought
As the loom moves sure and slow.
God surely planned the pattern—
Each thread, the dark and fair
Is chosen by his master skill
And placed in the web with care.

He only knows its beauty;
And guides the shuttles which hold
The threads so unattractive,
As well as the threads of gold.
Not till each loom is silent
And the shuttles cease to fly,
Shall God unroll the pattern
And explain the reason why
The dark threads were as needful
In the weaver's skilful hand,
As the threads of gold and silver,
For the pattern which he planned.

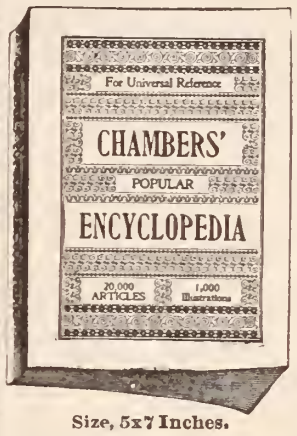
700 Pages—20,000 Articles—1000 Illustrations



Size, 5x7 Inches.

Chambers' Popular Encyclopedia contains 700 pages, 7x5 inches, and 1,000 illustrations. The statements are precise and accurate and the 20,000 articles embody such information as nine out of ten persons have occasion to use in talking and writing. For ordinary usage, the work which we offer FREE is as practical as a $20 Encyclopedia. It covers all the divisions and sub-divisions of Agriculture,	Geology,	Mythology,

Architecture,	History,	Natural History,
Astronomy,	Horticulture,	Painting,
Biology,	Law,	Philosophy,
Botany,	Literature,	Physiology,

DAYLIGHT ALL NIGHT!

"Acetylene makes all other lights throw a shadow"

Cheaper and Brighter than any other Light!

MAKE IT YOURSELF!

Anybody can make acetylene gas—it can be made and used in any kind of building. It gives the brightest and best light in existence, except the sun.

It is made by slacking a cheap lime—one pound of which costs 4½ cents and yields a 24 candle power light for nine hours. It is, in fact, artificial sunlight and will make oil, gas, and even electric lamps throw a shadow. It is the only artificial light by which you can make a perfect photograph and distinguish shades of color at night. It is the cheapest, safest, the best, the most convenient light made for home, church, store and all other lighting purposes everywhere. The ideal light for your summer or country cottage—in place of kerosence, etc.

"Ye Must be Born Again"

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for March 18. John 3:1-15

SECULAR history, as well as our own experience, confirms the truth of Christ's statement that a man must be born again before he can enter the kingdom of God. The best associations and enterprises that have ever been organized have proved that human faults and frailties can mar the highest and purest ideals. If men could enter the kingdom without being born again it would soon lose its character. There would be jealousies, and envyings, and quareling, and it would no longer be the kingdom of God. Even our churches, with all the care that is taken to restrict the membership to those who have been born again, are often torn by dissension and their usefulness is often curtailed by disputes and enmities among the members. There is no government on earth, no association, political, social or commercial, which is free from the friction resulting from human ambitions and self-seeking. Before we can have perfection in association and such a condition of purity and peace as we expect in the kingdom of God, there must be a change in the nature of its members, so thorough and radical that it can best be characterized as a new birth. The man who enters must have begun "all over again" with new principles, new motives and new aims.

There is good reason for believing that Nicodemus was not so puzzled by Christ's statement as he professed to be. Edersheim. Godet and other scholars say that the Jews of Christ's time were perfectly familiar with the phrase. When an outsider wanted to become a Jew, he had to undergo several rites and ceremonies, one of which was baptism. At the conclusion of them he was informed that he had become a son of Abraham, he had been born again, and so completely was he a new man, so thoroughly had he broken with his former life, that his relatives were no longer related to him. The surprise Nicodemus really felt, was probably at hearing that a Jew needed the transformation. He could understand a new birth originating in forms and ceremonies, but did not know what Christ meant by that deeper change that even a Jew needed. His question showed this. Christ had to explain to him that mere outward rites did not avail. The flesh remained what it had been before; the change that was needed was one of spirit. It was as if a mother vexed that her child should love to play in the gutter, should take the child and wash him, cleansing him from the filth that covered him and should dress him in clean and costly clothes and think that she had done all that was necessary. It would be useless so long as the child liked to be in the dirt and delighted to play in the mud. What the child needed would be to have his mother's dislike of dirt, and a sincere wish to keep out of it.

A man who is fit to enter the kingdom of God need not necessarily be clean. He may have about him the defilement of sin, may be wicked and have propensities to evil that he is unable to control. But the one essential thing before he can enter, or even see, the kingdom, is a desire to be clean, a belief that Christ can cleanse him. He cannot effect the new birth himself. Everyone knows how futile are the efforts to change his nature. The drunkard knows that he cannot resist his craving, but the craving can be taken away. The new birth is a new beginning. So, men who are wicked may be born again. "The wind bloweth where it listeth," but it strikes the craft on which the sails are put up. We have to put up the sails, that is, to do our part in catching the wind and we do not do that when we desire to stay where we are. When we realize the evil that is in us, when we desire to be quit of it and ask Christ's help, he takes us in hand and the change in our nature begins. The love of sin ceases to draw us into evil because the new nature that comes from God antagonizes it and finally extirpates it. When that divine nature is imparted the man is born again and begins the life which shall never end.

Chronic Rheumatism

Articular and muscular rheumatism and all uric acid troubles are caused by defective action of the kidneys and digestive organs; the kidneys not properly removing the waste products Uric acid and chalky deposits then accumulate in the muscles and around the joints, causing the excruciating pains pecular to these diseases. The only way to cure rheumatism is to rid the system of this poisonous acid.

Tartarlithine

regulates the action of the kidneys, dissolves and removes the uric acid and chalky deposits, and reduces inflammation. It does not upset the stomach, and can be taken by the most delicate. It is a true cure for rheumatism for which it is prescribed by many leading physicians.

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post free by mail.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Maori Peculiarities*

THE Maoris, after their conversion, were very religious; morning and evening devotion were no more daily omitted than breakfast or supper. No more quarrels or ill treatment of each other were heard. The Sabbath was respected. In almost every village was a meeting-house. Earnest chiefs carried the Gospel to their old enemies. Peace and blessing ruled the home. In 1843, a prayer-meeting was held in a cave in Retorua, where chiefs used to lie in wait for travelers, whom they killed and afterwards ate. They built modern houses like the Europeans. They raised cattle, bought plows and raised wheat. Tea and sugar were added to their larder. They exchanged their dog-skin garments for European clothes, but still used their blankets. The Europeans traveled unarmed through the colony, and the natives showed them great hospitality. Knowing their fondness for blankets, the missionaries used to give them some. One day an old man, who had several given to him, came again. The missionary told him he had no more for him. Then he said, "All right, no more blankets, no more hallelujahs."

The missionaries taught the Maoris to keep the Sabbath holy, and to do no work thereon. They followed their instructions even to the letter. In the war of 1863, between the colony and the Maoris, they would not fight on Sunday, and were more than surprised to find that the English fought them on Sundays as well as on week days. On the dead body of a Maori general in battle was found the order of the day. It began with a prayer and ended with the text: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." When the Waikato tribe heard that the army of General Cameron was scarce of food and in a starving condition, they got several canoes together and loaded them with potatoes, goats and milk, and sent them to feed their enemies.

One day some sailors from a trading vessel went ashore and found themselves presented with food prepared by some Maori women. The men who had been working in the field came home. There was loud talking, and as the sailors could not understand them, they thought they had just decided to kill and eat them, but shortly one after the other of the Maoris went aside and opened his bag, and took out a book, and gave out a hymn and all of them sang together and then prayed. The sailors knew that their lives were preserved.

The following is a specimen of a sermon by Hone Heke, a native preacher: "A Pharisee is like a bag tied half way down. The bag is open at the top, but anything put into it won't reach the bottom. So it is with the Pharisee. When he prays, he opens wide his mouth, but keeps his heart close shut. He asks with his lips for things which his heart cares not for. Besides, he always talks for effect, for even if God were to grant him the things he asked for, it would be only a waste of good gifts, for they could never get to the bottom; his pride, like the string that is tied around the bag, preventing them. They would therefore do him no good, as they would reach no farther than his throat."

When a chief's daughter marries, the Maoris go to the wedding in wagons or on horseback with provisions for a feast of several days. After marriage, if the husband allows anything to happen to his wife, all her relatives come and take everything from him. I once attended a Maori wedding, and was hospitably entertained with the guests at a sumptuous table. I was conducting special Gospel meetings in the neighborhood during the week, and on Sunday I was pleased to notice some of the Maoris, present at the wedding, in the congregation. At funerals they also carry food, and sticks of wood with slits cut in them in which bank notes are put. This money is divided among the mourners and spent afterwards.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. These questions are printed Four weeks in advance so as to afford all our readers an opportunity to answer them.
2. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.
3. Answers must be received at this office two weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.
4. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.
5. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.
6. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.
7. Write only on one side of the sheet and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.
8. Address all communications intended for this department, EDITOR THE MAIL BAG, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

These Questions Will be Answered April 11

1. What have been the chief beneficial results of the Christian Endeavor movement?
2. Why do we find women in larger attendance upon the Sunday and week-night services of our churches than men?
3. On what ground did Sunday take the place of the Sabbath among Christians?
4. How should an amateur prepare for the delivery of an address on some social or literary question?
5. When Christ was born the heavenly host sang "On earth peace, good will to men." This would indicate that Christ's mission was one of peace. What, then, did the Saviour mean when he said, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay, but rather division"?
6. How far is faith a matter of the head and how far of the heart; or is it a matter of the one, independent of the other?
7. On what ground does the Protestant church reject the Apocrypha as a portion of the canon of Scripture?
8. What is the nearest approach among human inventions to perpetual motion?
9. What number of words are there in the English language, what is the number used in literature, and what number in ordinary conversation in every-day life?
10. Is municipal ownership of trolleys desirable and would it be likely to benefit the community owning the same, by increased public improvements or reduction of taxation?

Questions of the Week

1. How far may a Christian church lend itself to the promotion of amusement, and is it right to use a church edifice for purposes of entertainment?

The business of the Church of Christ is not the promotion of amusements. The use of places of congregational worship for entertainments is unwise, among other reasons, because such use offends many good people. It is possible that certain rooms in a church edfice might be used as reading rooms and possibly for purposes of reasonable entertainment, as an offset to the saloon. By such means un converted and indifferent persons might be brought under Christian influence. The possession of rooms suitable for social intercourse among the members has proved beneficial to many churches. R. S. WOODWARD.

2. Who is the author of the following lines, and in what poem do they occur?

"Damned be whoe'er with sin doth play,
Though it hath been but playing;
In bitter earnestness will he atonement make."

The quotation is variously attributed to Shakespeare, Beaumont and Fletcher, and Young. The exact wording does not appear to be traceable. S. C. CLEMENT.

3. What is the meaning and origin of the term "Godwin's oath"?

In the year 1052, during the Easter festival, Earl Godwin, the strong supporter of Edward the Confessor, noticed that a cup-bearer stumbled in approaching him, and would have fallen, had not his other foot assisted him. Godwin immediately exclaimed: "Thus brother helps brother!" "Yes," said the king; "had Alfred lived he might have helped me." Godwin understood this as an insinuation that he had killed the king's brother and replied to the king: "I know you suspect me of your brother's murder; but may God who is just and true, not permit this morsel of bread to pass my lips and enter my throat without choking me, if your brother suffered death or violence by me or my counsel." In the attempt to swallow the bread Godwin choked, and died immediately. Godwin's oath, therefore, means a voluntary oath that may condemn, instead of vindicate.

4. Was Peter a converted man when he betrayed Christ? If so, why the language of Luke 22: 32?

He was converted, but no more infallible than Christians of the present day. The revised version of Luke 22: 32, seems a little plainer than the authorized. "But I made supplication for thee that thy faith fail not: and do thou when once thou hast turned again, stablish thy brethren."

BERTHA A. CAMERON.

5. What are the comparative drink bills of Great Britain, France, Germany and Russia?

Russia heads the list. Her drink bill is estimated at $154,500,000; Germany, $135,000,000; France, $130,000,000; Great Britain, $90,000,000. H. M. JACKSON.

6. What city now existing has the record of greatest antiquity?

The eastern coast of the Sea in Palestine must have been settled first by the Canaanites. Sidon was the first-born of Canaan (son of Ham), and the border of the Canaanites was from Sidon to Gaza, even unto Lasha, which takes in the territory wherein Hebron, first known as the city of Arba, is built. The highlands on the east side of the Jordan were occupied by some of the descendants of Shem. Josephus says Uz, grandson of Shem, built Damascus. Many things point to building of towns west of the Jordan first, so Hebron seems to take first place in point of time; but Hebron was partially destroyed, and re-built by Caleb, under Joshua. It seems to have gone into decay and to have been re-built after the captivity. Damascus forms the one grand exception among the great cities of the East in not losing its importance. Its uninterrupted continuance may entitle it to be considered the answer to the question.

7. Had Mary, the mother of Jesus, any other children, so far as the Bible informs us?

We may infer that she had from (1) Matt. 1: 18, 24, 25, speaking as if Joseph and Mary lived the natural life of husband and wife; (2) "Her firstborn son," Luke and Matt.; (3) "Brethren" and "brother" of the Lord, Mark 6: 3; Matt. 13: 55; Gal. 1: 19. This rendering of the original Greek is far more exigently correct than the translation "cousin" that some give to it; (4). If Mary had younger children to look after, Luke 2: 41–52 is more readily understood. Such learned Bible students as Stier, De Wette, Wieseler, Neander, Lechler, Bleek, Meyer, Huther, Alford, Schaff, Farrar, Major, Weiss and others accept this theory. Neither Scripture nor early tradition support the "perpetual virginity" of Mary.

G. E. KRAUTH.

8. If a stone mason who is a Christian is asked to build a wall, and he knows that the building is to be a billiard hall and saloon, is he in duty bound as a Christian to refuse to build said wall?

The matter is one for the individual Christian conscience to decide. A man may grow and sell corn, not asking questions for conscience's sake as to its use, who yet might refuse to grow corn to meet a brewer's demand for it. The mason who would refuse to work on a saloon is entitled to be classed with the landowner who refuses to sell his land for saloon purposes, and who may thereby be compelled to take a lower price for it. If a Christian mason should ask the question before us, his attention might well be called to the words of St. Paul in Rom. 14: 23. L. S. YOUNG.

9. Can a person be truly converted to God and not enjoy reading God's Word?

There are some very good Christians who are unable to read at all, but an intelligent Christian who can read, and yet who does not enjoy reading God's word, must either be in a very low spiritual condition or unable to read with that appreciation of mind and heart that alone can make the reading of God's word enjoyable and profitable. Depressed physical condition often interferes with the enjoyment, even of a good Christian in reading the Bible. Moreover, there are portions of the Bible that are not readily intelligible to the mass of Christians, and which without explanation may serve only to mystify and bewilder.

MARY E. COOPER.

10. Which is the longest railroad in the world?

The trans-Siberian Railroad, connecting Russia in Europe with the eastern coast of Asia, is the longest railroad in the world, it being about 9,000 miles in length. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company controls by ownership and by lease 9,070 miles of railroad track. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe corporation owns over 4,713 miles, and controls enough more by lease to make a total of 7,414 miles. The great Canadian railroad is 2,925 miles long. C. A. GEORGE.

Mite-Boxes, for use in Sunday Schools, churches, classes, etc., in taking up contributions for the starving people of India, will be sent FREE upon application to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

M. W., Silver Lake, Ind. It is reported around here that the Pope claims we are in the twentieth century. Is it true?

No. The Pope is an educated man. As special services are held during the last week of a year, so the Pope calls for special services during all this year, not because it is the first of a new century, but the last of an old one.

W. R., Springfield, Mo. 1. An International Monetary Conference was held in Paris from June 17 to July 9, 1867. What government took the lead in bringing about this Conference? 2. What nations were represented and by whom?

1. The Conference was held upon the invitation of the French Government; the time chosen being that of the Universal Exposition. 2. Bavaria, Denmark, England, France, Greece, Italy, The Netherlands, Austria, Portugal, Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Spain, Turkey and the United States. The United States was represented by Mr. Samuel B. Ruggles, our Commissioner to the Exposition; Great Britain by Mr. Thomas Graham, Director of the Royal Mint; each of the European countries had a financial expert upon its board. Marquis de Monstier opened the Conference; Jerome Napoleon, Prince-president of the Conference, closed it. The principal object was to consider, and, if possible, formulate some plan for the unification of coinage of all nations.

Henry E. W., Fulton, N. Y. What are the seven wonders of the world, and are they generally accepted as such by all nations, and why should they conclude with the seventh wonder, when the whole world is so richly endowed with wonders unceasing?

The seven ancient wonders of the world were: 1, the Pyramids of Egypt; 2, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon; 3, the Tomb of Mausolos; 4, the Temple of Diana at Ephesus; 5, the Colossus of Rhodes; 6, the Statue of Zeus (Jupiter), by Phidias; 7, the Pharos of Egypt, or else the Palace of Cyrus, cemented with gold.

Mrs. J. R. G., Gray's Landing, Pa. What has been the approximate increase in population in the United States since 1898?

This can only be arrived at by comparing the ratio of increase in previous decades. From 1860 to 1870 the rate was 22.63; 1870 to 1880, 30.68; 1880 to 1890, 24.86. Assuming that the rate from 1890 to 1900 has been 25, which is probable, the increase during the whole decade will have been about 15,650,000. The latter part of the decade—the two closing years—would probably represent an approximate increase of 3,000,000. These figures are merely speculative and the result may show much larger totals.

M. A. Y., Blaine, Me. 1. Is President McKinley's father living? 2. What is his occupation or profession? We wish to learn something about the father of our President.

1. The President's father, William McKinley, died November, 1892, during his son's first term as Governor of Ohio. 2. He was an iron manufacturer or furnace man, as was his father before him; was a devout Methodist, a man of strong common sense, intelligence, probity and force of character; industrious, temperate, frugal, successful, respected and esteemed wherever known. He was born in Pine township, Mercer county, Pa., and was about eighty-five at the time of his death.

J. M. A., Ennis, Texas. 1. Whose son was Cyrus? 2. Where was he educated? 3. Name some of his generals. 4. What were his orders to his army before entering Babylon, and what the circumstances connected with the fall of that city?

1. Herodotus says he was the son of Cambyses (a Persian prince) and Moudane, daughter of the Median king, Astyages. In a cuneiform inscription on a brick from Sekereh, Cyrus calls himself "the son of Cambyses, the powerful king." 2. According to Xenophon, he received the simple and hardy education of a Persian youth up to the age of twelve, when he went to the luxurious court of his grandfather, Astyages. 3. Gobryas, Chrysantus, Hytospes, Artobazus, Andamyus, Datanias, Artuchas, Modatos, Rambacas, Tigranes and Alceunus. 4. After laying siege to the city, he waited without its impregnable walls until the occasion of an annual festival. Upon that night he had the Euphrates drained by means of trenches and by cutting down the embankment between it and the great lake. His army, divided into two sections—one where the river entered, the other where it flowed from the city—marched on the dry bed of the river, met at the palace and entered, where Daniel had just interpreted the handwriting on the wall.

H. S. No. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not publish an edition in German, although the sermons of Dr. Talmage are translated into that language and others in publication abroad.

W. W. L., Littleton, N. H. I wish you would tell me, if you can, when and where cards were invented.

Playing cards are believed to be of very ancient origin. The Chinese dictionary asserted that dotted cards were invented during the reign of Seun-ho (1120 A.D.) for the amusement of his numerous wives. Cards were apparently unknown in Europe until the end of the fourteenth century. This entry occurs in the accounts of the treasurer of Charles VI. of France in 1393: "Given to Jacquemin Gringonneaur, painter, for three packs of cards gilt and colored, and variously ornamented for the amusement of the king, fifty-six sols of Paris." It happened that this entry occurred in the year preceding that in which the king lost his reason, and the story goes that they were invented for the mad king.

S. J. Blum, Rochester. The subject of intemperance in our new colonies is very fully treated in "Aunt Samantha's Journey round the World."

V. C. W. Will you not give your readers your ideas about using "Xmas" for "Christmas?" Is it right?

The Chrisman or monogram of Christ, is composed of the first two letters of the Greek Christos. The first of these letters, in form "X," is the equivalent of the English "Ch." The monogram doubtless came into gradual use as a convenient abbreviation for the full name; and the second letter came in the same way to be omitted. Perhaps the similarity of the letter's form to the form of the cross, and the fact that it lent itself readily to decorative effect in the ancient art of illuminating MSS. and missals, were influential in popularizing the abbreviation.

Mrs. P. McA., Xenia. What is the history of Mary, the Saviour's mother, after the crucifixion, and where can it be found?

She dwelt in the house of John the Evangelist. It is thought that he took her with him to Ephesus, and there is a letter of the town council of that city which intimates that in the fifth century it was generally believed that she was buried there. The cathedral church of Ephesus was dedicated to her. Others assert, however, that she died and was buried in Jerusalem, in her sepulchre at Gethsemane. Epiphanius, who wrote in the fourth century, declares that nothing definite is known as to her decease.

Mrs. L. H., Hillman, Ont., Can. Is it right for Christians to play dance music at church entertainments?

A player who knowingly made such a selection would certainly be open to the charge of irreverence. It would be wholly out of place.

Reader, Leominster, Mass. 1. Who was Josephus and when and where did he live? Can his statements be relied upon? 2. Is there any secular record of the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ?

1. A distinguished Jewish historian, born at Jerusalem, A.D. 37. His writings, though declared by some critics to abound in "historical inaccuracies, distortion of facts and Oriental love of exaggeration," are still in the main regarded as reliable and as casting a flood of light on Jewish history and customs. 2. Many secular writers and historians, among them the younger Pliny, Porphyry, Tacitus, Spartian, Suetonius, Lucian, Marcus Antonius, and others, mention in their writings the Christian religion and its founder. Porphyry, though an enemy of Christianity, recorded his esteem of Jesus as "a most wise and pious man, approved by the gods and taken up into heaven for his distinguished virtues." Spartian declares that the Emperor Alexander Severus thought so highly of Christ "that he would have admitted him into the number of his deities and have built a temple for him, had not his Pagan subjects vigorously opposed it." The Acta Pilati, or official memoirs of Pilate's administration, which were transmitted to Rome, according to custom, contained an account of all the leading events in Christ's later earthly career, including, doubtless, the crucifixion. Tacitus says "he was put to death under Pontius Pilate, who was Procurator of Judea in the reign of Tiberius." The Jews, in their earliest writings, referred to him ignominiously as "the man who was crucified," and his followers as "the servants of the crucified person," and Lucian employs a similar term.

Potts Camp, Miss. It is decidedly not wrong for a Christian to insure himself against loss by the possible destruction of his house by fire or lightning. The wrong lies in not doing so. Yet, no doubt, some Christians have what they claim is a conscientious scruple against such insurance.

J. W. B., Staunton, Va. If impossible to abolish an evil wholly, it would be sound sense and good Christianity to support any measure that would restrict it as far as possible. Whether this would be the result of State, county, or city dispensaries, we are unable to say.

C. A. P., Suffield, Conn. The proposed partitioning of China is not essential to the interests of civilization. Were China to open her ports to commerce and grant free intercourse throughout her empire and freedom of action to missionaries and teachers, the desired result would soon be reached.

My Chair-Ride Through Korea

ROSETTA S. HALL WRITES OF A SEVEN WEEKS' JOURNEY, ITS PERILS AND ITS GRATIFYING RESULTS

OUR MISSIONARY TRAVELING IN DAI-HAN

ONE year ago I took my first really overland trip into the country. Since then I have taken two more—having spent nearly seven weeks in country work during the year. Aside from the encouragement to the native Christians visited, and the help to the sick and heathen met, this country traveling is certainly an experience worth while to the missionary. Chemulpo is twenty-seven miles from Seoul. I bargained with two chair-coolies and secured a couple for the usual price, each thirty cash per ten li and rice (about five cents every three miles and ten cents per day for food). I also had one man to carry our luggage. I was accompanied only by Susan, my native helper, who took turns with me riding in the chair.

We were ready to start by sunrise, but we were not out long before I noticed we had one very poor chair-coolie. Before we reached our inn for lunch he gave out. But after dinner he concluded to go on. It was already 2 P. M., so we decided to only try to make thirty li to the next inn and stay there all night. A series of troubles with both followed, but we finally reached the inn. A snow-storm came on and we were glad enough for shelter.

My first night in a Korean inn, I will spare you the description of. I might have gotten some sleep if it had not been for the donkeys, oxen and horses just outside the thin paper door. One of the lodgers in the men's room took it into his head to read aloud in the native sing-song style until after midnight. At 3 A. M. the noise of scrubbing rice kettles and other preparations for breakfast interfered with further sleep.

At our journey's end we were warmly received. They gave us the best room. As Koreans sit and sleep upon the floor, of course there were neither bed or chairs. As in most native homes, there was not a bit of glass, windows and doors being of paper. The only light at night was a twisted rag in a bowl of castor oil. This was the home of a well-to-do family. In a short time they brought us our dinner, which was so sumptuous that Susan said it was like "going to the mother-in-law's house," or in other words a "wedding feast." Our hostess served nice chicken soup, boiled rice, poached eggs, broiled chicken, peeled chestnuts and confections. They served two regular meals a day, one at 10 A. M., the other at 4 P. M. Koreans have no ovens, so have no kind of baked food.

Our hostess was led to Jesus through Mr. O., who was one of the first fruits of Dr. Hall's work in Pyong Yang. Encouraged and instructed by visits from missionaries, and herself now and then visiting the church in Pyong Yang, she has become a shining light for Jesus in her neighborhood.

This home was in a very small neighborhood, but many people came to see us. We had from 25 to 30 every morning and evening regularly to prayers. We sold 26 Gospels and Epistles, and could have sold more if we had taken them with us. One day we went to another house, 10 miles away, and taught a large room full of people and distributed tracts.

On Sunday we had our room packed to its utmost capacity. After a hymn and prayer they listened most attentively to Christ's Sermon on the Mount. At this Sunday service eight women and five men decided they wanted to be Christians, and gave in their names. They seemed much in earnest: they know the Apostle's Creed and are familiar with the catechism, and most of the women can read the Gospels for themselves, which is quite remarkable as the women are so illiterate in this province.

On my next trip, I decided to avoid using chair-coolies as far as possible, and travel by water. We left Pyong Yang in a native rowboat, at noon, one day in March. Our destination was Sam Wha Eup, a large country village where Kim Chang Sikey is stationed. Mr. Kim himself came to escort us. We hired the boat to go to the point on the river nearest to Mr. Kim's for 700 P. Y. cash (about 75 cents gold for thirty miles). But we couldn't make this distance in one day. Arriving finally at Mr. Kim's we found the ordinary home of the better class Korean, three mud-walled rooms with paper windows, low ceilings and doorways. We held our meetings in Mr. Kim's largest room, eight by sixteen. We had thirty to thirty-five women morning and evening and also visited several other houses and a couple of neighboring villages.

Our special service on Sunday seemed like a revival service at home. Nineteen women and a thirteen-year-old girl gave in their names as seekers. They all seem in earnest, but are so ignorant: only a few read. They will need much patient teaching.

After six days at Sam Wha Eup we went on thirteen miles to Nampo—the open port of this province. It has all sprung up in a couple of years. Only one European, the Chief of Customs, lives here, but there are many Japanese and Chinese. We stopped in the Korean part of town. "Mine host" had only one room, but it was quite a good-sized one, and when we went to bed, the men of the household kindly sought other quarters.

In this trip I treated seventy-seven patients, then my drugs gave out; we also sold out all our Gospels and catechisms.

COUNTRY WOMEN OF KOREA

Pray earnestly for the growing country work in this province: it needs much more visiting. We must have more missionaries."

Porto Rico's Waifs

Progress of Our Sunday School Recently Opened at Puerto de Tierra

REV. JAMES JAMIESON, in charge of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School work in Porto Rico, writes very interestingly and encouragingly concerning the new school lately established at Puerto de Tierra. He says:

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School in Puerto de Tierra is now fully established, is being well attended and is under good, efficient management. The outlook is very encouraging, indeed. On Sunday last we had an attendance of eighty-five children, and had we larger accommodations, I believe that this number could easily be doubled. In fact, there is ample room in the district for another school, but at present it is next to impossible to hire a suitable building for such work.

"The territory over which the influence of our school extends is nearly a mile long and about 800 yards wide, having the harbor of San Juan on one side and the Atlantic Ocean on the other. This is the first invasion of this section of San Juan by Protestants—the first actual attempt to extend the blessings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to these poor, benighted people. True, there is a place of worship in the district, styling itself Haec est domus dei et porta coeli (this is the house of God and the gate of heaven), but so far as the moral and spiritual regeneration of the people are concerned, it has done absolutely nothing. Doubtless a vigorous campaign against our work here will be begun at once; but we are fully prepared for all opposition that may come.

"At present the scholars are divided into four classes, three Spanish and one English—the majority of the pupils are Porto Ricans, who, of course, speak Spanish—those who speak English are from the British West Indies and from the island of St. Thomas. There are five teachers, viz.: the Rev. Erwin, Mrs. Erwin, who is very efficient worker; Miss Stephen, Mr. Jarvis, who is doing excellent work in the way of preaching and encouraging the children to come to school, and myself.

"I am sending by this mail some photographs, one of which represents a group of children and adults, that cannot fail to give your readers a good idea of the general character of the inhabitants of Puerto de Tierra."

All Love Samantha

SILVER CLIFF, COLO.

Dear "Christian Herald":

I love Samantha's story, too,
As well as the lady of Kalamazoo.
And, like others who have known her worth,
I am following her around the earth.
For she's the solid shining silver of humanity's rough ore;
She's a star that beams above us out of reach.
She's a lasting, love-lit lighthouse that illumes this sin-cursed shore,
She's a precious pearl the tide leaves on the beach.

MRS. L. F. J.

Now this is for your private ear,
I wouldn't have Samantha hear.
She's changed, I think, a lot, in looks Since first she had her picture took.

Josiah, too, has changed as well,
I didn't know him for a spell.
He used to have a hooked nose,
And wore such funny looking clothes.

I like Samantha, she's all right,
Her sword-point thrusts are keen and bright,
That she completely fills the bill,
Is partly due to artist's skill.

Oswego. — S. L. RANDALL.

"Nicholas Warbash," a reader in China Grove, N. C., sends some felicitous rhymes on the reunion of Josiah and Samantha, from which we take this verse:

Samantha, we are growing old,
Another journey soon must take
To lands whose beauties are untold;
That voyage we may have to make
Ere we return to Jonesville, dear,
But Jordan's waves we do not fear.

A Quaint Notice

A quaint entry in an old church book is quoted by The Advance. The church clerk wrote: "This year, in the providence of God, Mr. and Mrs. —— were removed to London. This church did not suffer by their removal." It was well that the church did not suffer, but how was it that it did not? If the two members had been active in church work, or had been useful in any way, their departure would have been a loss. The entry is significant.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

Despotism of the Needle

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Ecclesiastes 4: 1, ... Behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter

EVERY long ago the needle was busy. It was considered honorable for women to toil in olden times. Alexander the Great stood in his palace showing garments made by his own mother. The finest tapestries at Bayeux were made by the queen of William the Conqueror. Augustus the Emperor, would not wear any garments except those that were fashioned by some member of his royal family. So let the toiler everywhere be respected!

The needle has slain more than the sword. When the sewing-machine was invented some thought that invention would alleviate woman's toil and put an end to the despotism of the needle. But no; while the sewing-machine has been a great blessing to well-to-do families in many cases, it has added to the stab of the needle the crush of the wheel, and multitudes of women, notwithstanding the reinforcement of the sewing-machine, can only make, work hard as they will, between two dollars and three dollars a week.

The greatest blessing that could have happened to our first parents was being turned out of Eden after they had done wrong. Adam and Eve, in their perfect state, might have got along without work, or only such slight employment as a perfect garden with no weeds in it demanded. But as soon as they had sinned, the best thing for them was to be turned out where they would have to work. We know what a withering thing it is for a man to have nothing to do. Of the thousand prosperous and honorable men that you know, nine hundred and ninety-nine had to work vigorously at the beginning. But I am now to tell you that industry is just as important for a woman's safety and happiness. The most unhappy women in our communities to-day are those who have no engagements to call them up in the morning; who, once having risen and breakfasted, lounge through the dull forenoon in slippers down at the heel and with dishevelled hair, reading the last novel, and who, having dragged through a wretched forenoon and taken their afternoon sleep, and having passed an hour and a half at their toilet, pick up their card-case and go out to make calls, and who pass their evenings waiting for somebody to come in and break up the monotony. Arabella Stuart never was imprisoned in so dark a dungeon as that.

There is no happiness in an idle woman. It may be with hand, it may be with brain, it may be with foot; but work she must, or be wretched forever. The little girls of our families must be started with that idea. The curse of American society is that our young women are taught that the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, tenth, fiftieth, thousandth thing in their life is to get somebody to take care of them. Instead of that, the first lesson should be how under God they may take care of themselves. You say you have a fortune to leave them. O, man and woman, have you not learned that, like vultures, like hawks, like eagles, riches have wings and fly away? Though you should be successful in leaving a competency behind you, the trickery of executors may swamp it in a night? Have you nothing better than money to leave your children? If you have not, but send your daughters into the world with empty brain and unskilled hand, you are guilty of assassination, homicide, infanticide.

There are women toiling in our cities for two or three dollars a week who were the daughters of merchant princes. These suffering ones now would be glad to have the crumbs that once fell from their father's table. That worn-out, broken shoe that she wears is the lineal descendant of the twelve dollar gaiter in which her mother walked; and that torn and faded calico had ancestry of magnificent brocade that swept Pennsylvania avenue and Broadway clean, without any expense to the street commissioners. Though you live in an elegant residence and fare sumptuously every day, let your daughters feel it is a disgrace for them not to know how to work. I denounce the idea prevalent in society that, though our young women may embroider slippers and crochet and make mats for lamps to stand on without disgrace, the idea of doing anything for a livelihood is dishonorable. It is a shame for a young woman belonging to a large family to be inefficient, when her father toils his life away for her support. It is a shame for a daughter to be idle, while her mother toils at the wash-tub. It is as honorable to sweep house, make beds or trim hats as it is to twist a watch-chain.

Idleness ruins the health, and very soon nature says: "This man has refused to pay his rent, out with him!" Society is to be reconstructed on the subject of woman's toil. A vast majority of those who would have woman industrious shut her up to a few kinds of work. My judgment in this matter is that a woman has a right to do anything she can do well. There should be no department of merchandise, mechanism, art, or science barred against her. If Miss Hosmer has genius for sculpture, give her a chisel. If Rosa Bonheur has a fondness for delineating animals, let her make "The Horse Fair." If Miss Mitchell will study astronomy, let her mount the starry ladder. If Lydia will be a merchant, let her sell purple. If Lucretia Mott will preach the Gospel, let her thrill with her womanly eloquence the Quaker meeting-house.

It is said, if woman is given such opportunities, she will occupy places that might be taken by men. I say, If she have more skill and adaptedness for any position than a man has, let her have it! She has as much right to her bread, to her apparel, and to her home, as men have. But it is said that her nature is so delicate that she is unfitted for exhausting toil. I ask in the name of all past history what toil on earth is more severe, exhausting, and tremendous than that toil of the needle to which for ages she has been subjected? The battering-ram, the sword, the carbine, the battle-ax, have made no such havoc as the needle. I would that these living sepulchres in which women have for ages been buried might be opened, and that some resurrection trumpet might bring up these living corpses to the fresh air and sunlight.

Go with me and I will show you a woman who by hardest toil supports her children, her drunken husband, her old father and mother, pays her house rent, always has wholesome food on her table, and when she can get some neighbor on the Sabbath to come in and take care of her family, appears in church with hat and cloak that are far from indicating the toil to which she is subjected. Such a woman as that has body and soul enough to fit her for any position. She could stand beside the majority of your salesmen and dispose of more goods. She could go into your wheelwright shops and beat one half of your workmen at making carriages. We talk about women as though we had resigned to her all the light work, and ourselves had shouldered the heavier. But the day of judgment, which will reveal the sufferings of the stake and inquisition, will marshall before the throne of God and the hierarchs of heaven the martyrs of wash-tub and needle. Now, I say if there be any preference in occupation, let woman have it. God knows her trials are the severest. By her acuter sensitiveness to misfortune, by her hour of anguish, I demand that no one hedge up her pathway to a livelihood. Oh! the meanness, the despicability of men who begrudge a woman the right to work anywhere in any honorable calling!

I go still further and say that woman should have equal compensation with men. By what principle of justice is it that women in many of our cities get only two-thirds as much pay as men, and in many cases only half? Here is the gigantic injustice—that for work equally well, if not better done, woman receives far less compensation than man. Start with the National Government. Women clerks in Washington get nine hundred dollars for doing that for which men receive eighteen hundred dollars. The wheel of oppression is rolling over the necks of thousands of women who are at this moment in despair about what they are to do. Many of the largest mercantile establishments of our cities are accessory to these abominations, and from their large establishments there are scores of souls being pitched off into death, and their employers know it. Is there a God? Will there be a judgment? I tell you, if God rises up to redress woman's wrongs, many of our large establishments will be swallowed up quicker than a South American earthquake ever took down a city. God will catch these oppressors between the two mill-stones of his wrath and grind them to powder.

Why is it that a female principal in a school gets only eight hundred and twenty-five dollars for doing work for which a male principal gets sixteen hundred and fifty dollars? I hear from all this land the wail of womanhood. Man has nothing to answer to that wail but flatteries. He says she is an angel. She is not. She knows she is not. She is a human being who gets hungry when she has no food, and cold when she has no fire. Give her no more flatteries: give her justice! Oh the thousands of sewing girls! Across the sunlight comes their death groan. It is not such a cry as comes from those who are suddenly hurled out of life, but a slow, grinding, horrible wasting away. Gather them before you and look into their faces, pinched, ghastly, hunger-struck! Look at their fingers, needle-pricked and blood tipped! See that premature stoop in the shoulders! Hear that dry, hacking, merciless cough! At a large meeting of these women held in Philadelphia, grand speeches were delivered, but a needle-woman took the stand, threw aside her faded shawl, and with her shriveled arm hurled a very thunderbolt of eloquence, speaking out the horrors of her own experience.

Stand at the corner of a street in some great city at six or seven o'clock in the morning as the women go to work. Many of them had no breakfast except the crumbs that were left over from the night before or the crumbs they chew on their way through the street. Here they come! The working girls of the cities. These engaged in bead-work, these in flower-making, in millinery, in paper-box making; but, most overworked of all and least compensated, the sewing-women. Why do they not take the city cars on their way up? They cannot afford the five cents. If, concluding to deny herself something else, she gets into the car, give her a seat.

Years ago, one Sabbath night in the vestibule of our church, after service, a woman fell in convulsions. The doctor said she needed medicine not so much as something to eat. As she began to revive, in her delirium she said, gaspingly: "Eight cents! Eight cents! I wish I could get it done; I am so tired. I wish I could get some sleep, but I must get it done. Eight cents! Eight cents!" We found afterward that she was making garments for eight cents a piece, and that she could make but three of them in a day. Hear it! Three times eight are twenty-four. Hear it, men and women who have comfortable homes! Some of the worst villains of our cities are the employers of these women. They beat them down to the last penny and try to cheat them out of that. The woman must deposit a dollar or two before she gets the garments to work on. When the work is done it is sharply inspected, the most insignificant flaws picked out, and the wages refused and sometimes the dollar deposited not given back. The Women's Protective Union reports a case where one of the poor souls, finding a place where she could get more wages resolved to change employers and went to get her pay for work done. The employer said: "I hear you are going to leave me?" "Yes," she said, "and I have come to get what you owe me." He made no answer. She said: "Are you not going to pay me?" "Yes," he said, "I will pay you," and he kicked her down-stairs.

Oh, that Women's Protective Union! The blessings of heaven be on it for the merciful and divine work it is doing in the defense of toiling womanhood. What tragedies of suffering are presented to them day by day! A paragraph from their report: "Can you make Mr. Jones pay me? He owes me for three weeks at $2.50 a week, and I can't get anything, and my child is very sick." The speaker, a young woman lately widowed, burst into a flood of tears as she spoke. She was bidden to come again the next afternoon and repeat her story to the attorney at his usual weekly hearing of frauds and impositions. Means were found by which Mr. Jones was induced to pay the $7.50."

Another paragraph from their report: "A fortnight had passed, when she modestly hinted a desire to know how much her services were worth. 'Oh, my dear,' he replied, 'you are getting to be one of the most valuable hands in the trade; you will always get the very best price. Ten dollars a week you will be able to earn very easily.' And the girl's fingers flew on with her work at a marvelous rate. The picture of $10 a week had almost turned her head. A few nights later, while crossing the ferry, she overheard the name of her employer in the conversation of girls who stood near: 'What, John Snipes? Why, he don't pay. Look out for him every time. He'll keep you on trial, as he calls it, for weeks, and then he'll let you go and get some other fool!' And thus Jane Smith gained her warning against the swindler. But the Union held him in the toils of the law until he paid the worth of each of those days of 'trial.'"

How are these evils to be eradicated? Some say: "Give woman the ballot." What effect such ballot might have on other questions I am not here to discuss; but what would be the effect of female suffrage on women's wages? I do not believe that woman will ever get justice by woman's ballot. Indeed, women oppress women as much as men do. Do not women, as much as men, beat down to the lowest figure the woman who sews for them? Are not women as sharp as men on washerwomen and milliners and mantua-makers? If a woman asks a dollar for her work, does not her female employer ask her if she will not take ninety cents? You say, "Only ten cents difference." But that is sometimes the difference between heaven and hell. Women often have less commiseration for women than men. If a woman steps aside from the path of rectitude, man may forgive—woman never! Woman will never get justice done her from woman's ballot. Neither will she get it from man's ballot. How then? God will rise up for her. God has more resources than we know of. The flaming sword that hung at Eden's gate when woman was driven out will cleave with its terrible edge her oppressors.

But there is something for women to do. Let young people prepare to excel in spheres of work, and they will be able after awhile to get larger wages. Unskilled and incompetent labor must take what is given; skilled and competent labor will eventually make its own standard. Admitting that the law of supply and demand regulates these things, I contend that the demand for skilled labor is very great and the supply very small. Start with the idea that work is honorable and that you can do some one thing better than anybody else. Resolve that, God helping, you will take care of yourself. If you are after awhile called into another relation you will be all the better qualified for it by your spirit of self-reliance, or if you are called to stay as you are, you can be happy and self-supporting.

Poets are fond of talking about man as an oak and woman the vine that climbs it; but I have seen many a tree fall that not only went down itself but took all the vines with it. I can tell you of something stronger than an oak for an ivy to climb on, and that is the throne of the great Jehovah. Single or affianced, that woman is strong who leans on God and does her best. Many of you will go single-handed through life, and you will have to choose between two characters Young woman, I am sure you will turn your back upon the useless, giggling, irresponsible nonentity which society ignominiously acknowledges to be a woman, and ask God to make you an humble, active, earnest Christian. What will become of that womanly disciple of the world? She is more thoughtful of the attitude she strikes upon the carpet than how she will look in the Judgment: more worried about her freckles than her sins; more interested in her apparel than in her redemption. The dying actress whose life had been vicious said: "The scene closes—draw the curtain." Generally the tragedy comes first and the farce afterward; but in her life it was first the farce of a useless life and then the tragedy of a wretched eternity.

Compare the life and death of such a one with that of some Christian aunt that was once a blessing to your household. I do not know that she was ever asked to give her hand in marriage. She lived single, that untrammelled she might be everybody's blessing. Whenever the sick were to be visited or the poor to be provided with bread she went with a blessing. She could pray or sing "Rock of Ages" for any sick pauper who asked her. As she got older there were days when she was a little sharp, but for the most part auntie was a sunbeam—just the one for Christmas Eve. She knew better than any one else how to fix things. Her every prayer, as God heard it, was full of everybody who had trouble. The brightest things in all the house dropped from her fingers. She had peculiar notions, but the grandest notion she ever had was to make you happy. When she died you all gathered lovingly about her; and as you carried her out to rest, the Sunday School class almost covered her coffin with japonicas; and the poor people stood at the end of the alley, with their aprons to their eyes, sobbing bitterly, and the man of the world said, with Solomon, "Her price was above rubies;" and Jesus, as unto the maiden in Judea, commanded, "I say unto thee, arise!"

Relieving India's Starving People

CONTRIBUTIONS POURING IN FOR THE CARGO OF OUR FLYING RELIEF SHIP—MISSIONARIES APPEALING FOR HELP

OUR readers will be glad to learn that the committee of missionaries of all denominations in India, who so loyally worked together in 1897 to secure the fair distribution of the funds contributed through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has been re-organized. As the famine is now most severe in the western provinces, one or two names of missionaries laboring in that region have been substituted for those whose fields lie in the east.

Bishop J. M. Thoburn, who served as chairman of the committee of 1897, writes us that the news of coming help, which Dr. Klopsch cabled to him in advance of the remittance of ten thousand dollars, was received just as the Central Conference was assembling in Calcutta. "The announcement," the Bishop says, "caused great joy among our people, especially those from western India. The outlook is very gloomy indeed. I cannot tell you how grateful our people felt when they heard that your readers were again intervening in behalf of our starving poor. Why God suffers this calamity to come so soon again upon a country already so afflicted, no one can tell, but assuredly the pious American people, who do not become weary in their welldoing, are entitled to special praise and will undoubtedly receive a special reward. You can depend absolutely upon the Committee of missionaries. With the experience of the last famine to guide us, we can do still better this time. God bless you in your good work."

Unhappily, Bishop Thoburn's health has so broken down that by the advice of physicians he will leave India for a period of absolute rest. He has labored so energetically to hold conferences in various parts of the vast country, and in visiting the widely scattered missions and preaching everywhere, that his strength has failed and he is unable to undertake further service. In the meantime, his friendand helper, Rev. J. E. Robinson, the editor of The Indian Witness, has kindly undertaken to represent him in the work of famine relief, and Rev. E. S. Hume, the American Board's missionary in Bombay, who was secretary of the committee of 1897, has, at Bishop Thoburn's request, consented to serve in the same capacity again. Mr. Hume's knowledge of the country and his whole-souled sympathy with the people are well known. We shall, therefore, have full confidence that the funds intrusted to the committee will be judiciously and economically used.

From every quarter contributions are now pouring in for the purchase of a cargo of corn for our Flying Relief Ship. As announced last week, the steamer will be chartered at the expense of the India government, and the cargo, which will be carried to Bombay as the gift of Christian America to starving India, will doubtless be the means, under Divine blessing, of saving thousands of lives. Dispatches from Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, and the official head of the relief movement, represent the situation as exceedingly urgent. He cables that the outlook is very gloomy. Fully 4,300,000 natives are on the relief lists, but as over 40,000,000 are affected, the extent of the suffering may be imagined. The need of haste in raising and forwarding the cargo is apparent to all.

Rev. R. Winsor of Sirur in the Poona district, who has been in this country on furlough after a long period of service, called at the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last week just as he was sailing for his field of labor in India. He heartily approved of the project of sending a shipload of grain to the starving people. He said, "I was one of the missionaries who received part of the grain sent by your readers in 1897. I had five hundred bags with which we were able to feed more than three thousand persons. I never saw in my whole life people so devoutly and sincerely thankful for a gift. Some sceptical persons had said the Hindoos would not know how to prepare it, would not know what to do with it, would not eat it, anyway; but if you could have seen them as I saw them, eagerly devouring it and coming begging for more, you would have had no doubt of its being acceptable. Send corn by all means. It will save thousands of lives and it may be of indirect service in addition; for the grain dealers will have to reduce their prices when a whole shipload of good sound American corn is in the hands of the relief committee for distribution."

DEVOTEES OF FAMINE-STRICKEN INDIA ASSEMBLE AT KUMBAKONUM TO PROPITIATE THE GOD SIVA

This photograph, secured for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Mr. Benjamin Aitken, of Calcutta, India, shows a vast assemblage of the natives, which took place recently in Southern India. Notice had been sent by the native astrologers to all parts of the afflicted land, that on a certain day the moon would be at the full in the tenth mansion, which would be a propitious time for invoking the aid of the heathen god, by making a pilgrimage to his temple, and after the performance of certain rites, bathing in the sacred river. The people, groaning under the double affliction of famine and plague, needed no second invitation. Knowing their need of supernatural help, and ignorant of the true Source of relief, they wearily dragged themselves to the appointed place, from distant towns. After worshiping in the temple, they gathered on the river bank, waiting for the loud sounding of drums and trumpets which told them the exact moment of the moon coming to the full. They then plunged into the water, and without drying themselves, began their weary journey back to their desolate homes, supported by the vain hope that Siva would interpose to save them from the horrors of the famine.

Christ's Ministry Reviewed

The Time Relations
By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 25th. MARK 10:45

"HAVING reached the middle of Christ's ministry, let us review, as from a central mountain, the whole of it," said Uncle Will to the Cross Roads farmers, gathered as usual on Sabbath evening in his big kitchen for home department study, "in step with the great Sabbath School army studying the life of Christ all round the world. Mrs. Uncle Will has brought out of her art treasures

"NO ROOM FOR THEM IN THE INN" copies of great paintings that will recall the great events in the life of Christ, from his birth in a stable to his dinner with publicans and sinners in Matthew's house.

Mrs. Uncle Will also brought a chart which pictured Christ's life and every life, as at first an empty circle, a plan of God to be fulfilled, that is filled full of light and life. "Now," she said, "I take off the manila paper which covers the circle and show you underneath Christ's finished life in the completeness, of which a full circle is the symbol. To be a Christian is to fill our smaller circles of life with similar manifestations of love to God and love to man, each fulfilling God's special plan for him, so that he can say at last, 'I have finished the work that thou gavest me to do.'"

The chart needed but little explanation. Its circle was divided into four parts, three of which were of equal size, representing the three full years of Christ's ministry. The smaller section represented the fragment of the fourth year, from January to April. Not everything that Christ did was fully recorded, but the principal events were noted in the sections representing the respective years.

"In using this chart," said Mrs. Uncle Will, "to drill boys and girls, I have found it well to have them copy it with colored pencils, red for the first year, blue for the second, green for the third and brown for the fourth. The difference in color helps to impress on their minds the difference in time.

Christ's Superiority to His Times "Neglect of the time relation of words or deeds of Christ may lead to serious misrepresentation of his whole ministry. Because the Sermon on the Mount is found near the beginning of the New Testament as printed, even preachers have often represented it as the keynote and epitome of Christianity. When this mostly humanitarian sermon is set in its chronological place, we see preceding it, 'Behold the Lamb,' 'Ye must be born again.' 'Worship in spirit.' The fourth cornerstone in Christ's teachings is the Golden Rule of this mountain teaching. Christ's order is vital—atonement, regeneration, worship, humanitarianism."

"Speaking of time relations," said Mr. Isaacs, "I feel perhaps more deeply than any other but a Hebrew Christian could, how utterly impossible it is to account for Christ as the product of his times, as biographers often succeed in proving other great leaders to be.

"THEY WENT AND TOLD JESUS"

themselves. It is therefore an important part of Christ studies to consider the sort of helpers he selected; good specimens of the 'plain people,' on whom Lincoln so much relied; whose common sense and open-heartedness made them better material for world leaders than the learned triflers of the Hebrew schools.

Christ's Relation to Places Uncle Will: "We have spoken of Christ's life at large in its relation to times and persons. I have asked Tom, by aid of the blackboard, to show the places that he visited, his journeys—especially in the first half of his ministry."

Tom Brown: "The journey line should begin with heaven—if only we could map it—and proceed thence to Bethlehem, then to Jerusalem, where he was carried for circumcision; back to Bethlehem, then to Egypt, back to Nazareth, years later to Jerusalem, back to Nazareth, thence to the baptism, near Bethabara; thence to the wilderness of temptation west of the Dead Sea, thence to the shores of Galilee near Capernaum, where he called his first disciples; thence to Cana, for his first miracle; on to Jerusalem, where he cleansed the temple and talked with Nicodemus; then through northern Judea and Samaria, where he paused to rest and preach; back to Galilee, to Cana, where he heals the nobleman's son; then to Nazareth, where he was rejected; back to Capernaum, for many miracles; then through eastern Galilee and back to Capernaum, where the paralytic was healed and the feast at Matthew's house occurred.

Chief Contents of the Gospels Uncle Will: "Now we are ready to see how the Gospels are made up, viewed as a whole. In a consolidation of the four Gospels with all duplications omitted, I find by measure that about one-tenth of the space is devoted to Christ's birth and boyhood, one-seventh to miracles, one-sixth to warnings, more than one-fifth to the week of the cross. Manifestly that was the chief end of Christ's coming."

CHRIST THE CONSOLER

Mrs. Sanders: "I have a little book giving the words of Jesus separated from all else in his story. I find all his words weigh but seven ounces in the scales, but in fact they outweigh all other words in the world. Every word of his should be where Mary kept them. By memorizing one verse at each meal we could make all his words a part of our very selves in a year."

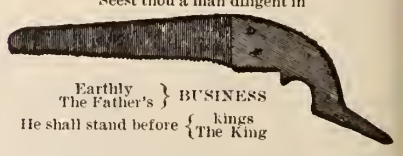
What does Christ's life teach us? Uncle Will: "And at the same time we could put them into our understanding and our living, which brings me to the most important part of our study of Christ's life at large, namely, what does it teach each of us of doctrine and duty; his birth, for instance?"

Mrs. Brown: "That reminds me of a story:

"THEY UNCOVERED THE ROOF"

Annie had a new little brother. She was glad to see him. One day she took his tiny little hands in hers, and looked lovingly into his face, and said, 'Oh, baby, ain't you glad you're born?' Baby did not know anything about it then, but if he lives to be a good man, he will be glad that he was born, and others will be glad, too, as thousands are glad Jesus was born.'"

Tom Brown: "May I give on my blackboard what I think is the teaching for us boys from the boyhood of Jesus? Here it is:



Uncle Will: "The baptism and temptation of Jesus suggest that we, too, shall meet temptation successfully if first baptized with the Spirit. And I have something here from B. F. Jacobs on two big signs, showing what those first disciples lost and what they gained in becoming fishers of men.

WHAT THEY LEFT:	WHAT THEY BECAME:
ZEBEDEE, SONS & CO. DEALERS IN FISH	"SONS OF THUNDER" "THE BELOVED DISCIPLE" PETER, THE ROCK ANDREW, THE APOSTLE

"We talk of 'giving up' things to become Christians. It is as if a pauper should mourn about giving up his rags when he becomes heir to a fortune."

"For the Nicodemus lesson I have a Moody story," said Ruth Sanders. "During the American war there was a man in one of the boatloads of wounded from the field who was in a kind of stupor. He was entirely unknown. A little stimulant was poured down his throat, and Mr. Moody called him by different names, but could get no response. At last, at the name 'William,' the man unclosed his eyes and looked up. Some more stimulant was given, when he revived. He was asked if he was a Christian. Though replying in the negtive, he yet manifested great anxiety upon the subject. 'But I am so great a sinner that I can't be a Christian.' Mr. Moody told him he would read what Christ said about that; so, turning to St. John's third chapter, he read: 'As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

Mrs. Uncle Will: "One of the deepest teachings of the woman of Samaria story is Christ's distinctive doctrine—the sacred individuality of every human soul. He was the first to make it felt that every human being, even the woman, the child, the lowliest, is a son or daughter of God, and so a brother or sister of every human being, to be loved and helped, not hated or harmed."

Uncle Will: "Christ rejected at Nazareth, despite his wonderful words; and at Capernaum, despite his wonderful works, including the healing of the paralytic, reminds us that if we are rejecting him we are sinning against the yet greater light of nineteen centuries of his world-transforming miracles; sinning against one who, not in Matthew's feast alone, but in all the subsequent ages of the world's history has shown himself ready to uplift the sinful and despised."

MR. DELL KEIZER,
THE BUSINESS MANAGER OF "THE CAPITAL"

GEN. HUDSON, EDITOR-IN-CHIEF,
WHOSE CHAIR PASTOR SHELDON NOW OCCUPIES

MR. POPENOE,
PRINCIPAL OWNER OF "THE CAPITAL"

PASTOR SHELDON IS NOW AN EDITOR

His Great Experiment of Producing a Christian Daily Newspaper Fairly Begun

(From Our Special Correspondent)

PASTOR SHELDON'S great experiment is at last begun. He is now installed as editor of The Topeka Capital and has entered upon the practical work of issuing a daily Christian newspaper. At this writing all the staff and other employees of The Capital building are working with almost superhuman energy, under the pastor-editor's direction, all straining every nerve to meet the unexampled demand from every State of the Union for copies of the newspaper, whose platform motto is, "What would Jesus do?"

For weeks in advance the busiest employees have been those in the mail and subscription departments. From January 24 to February 1, the new subscriptions came in 1,000 a day. Then, until February 10, came 2,000 daily. Lately they came at the rate of 3,000 a day. On days when the foreign mail arrives the number is doubled. On the last day of February the foreign mail alone brought 5,000 subscriptions—$2,000 being in cash. The American subscriptions come from every State, the largest number from Illinois, and from every country in Europe, the largest number from England. The Sheldon edition will start with 150,000 paid subscriptions, and as the circulation through the news companies will amount to as many more, the total issue will reach 300,000 daily, for the entire six days. The Post-master-general is sending six extra mail clerks to Topeka to handle the edition in the post-office here.

Mr. Sheldon, for weeks in advance of the first issue, gave half of every day to getting ready for the duties of editor-in-chief. He realized that the eyes of the entire religious and journalistic world were upon him, and he was not entirely free from a natural nervousness. He now occupies the office, the desk and the chair formerly filled by the editor of The Capital, Gen. J. K. Hudson. During Editor Sheldon's week, General Hudson will act as associate editor.

Great Thinkers on His Staff

The private editorial office is handsome and spacious, having five windows on the second floor of The Capital building. The building itself is of graystone, two stories high.

In the working force of the paper, either editorial, reportorial, business office or press rooms, no radical changes will be made. Mr. Sheldon's editorial staff will be increased but not by local writers, the extra help coming from great thinkers in different parts of the country. He himself will write the leader, daily, and sign it. Many of the news stories will also be signed by the reporters who write them. The general plan and policy of the paper, according to Mr. Sheldon's own statement, will not differ materially from the policy he has outlined in his book, In His Steps. He is extremely reticent, however, and prefers to be judged by his work rather than by his words.

"Journalism," he says, "is an inspiration for a right ambition. If I were not a minister, I would choose to be a journalist. No prospect for life-work opens so vivid a picture of opportunity. There is an alluring fascination at the thought of the influence that may be found in a paper which has for its motto: 'For a better world,' and for its purpose everything holy. What endless possibilities to shape public feeling and mold private character! Oh, yes, I know the old pessimistic cry of utopian, visionary, impracticable! It is not the first time I heard practical newspaper men say a paper cannot be run on strictly religious principles without going bankrupt in thirty days. Nevertheless, what a splendid opportunity is offered to try running a paper on new principles as old as God, but applied in new places! The new journalism will dawn on the world at the beginning of this coming twentieth century, and it will be the right hand of the Church, to serve as the means by which Christian principle shall be applied to every human condition." These are Mr. Sheldon's own words, spoken before the students of Washburn College.

Personal Supervision of Every Item

Every item of news, as it comes in, will be submitted to Mr. Sheldon, who will pass judgment as to how much or how little of it shall be printed, or whether it shall be printed at all. The same rule will be observed in regard to advertisements, and in fact in everything that is to appear in the paper.

During the week the pastor-editor will be given a list of all the drug stores in Topeka that do an unlawful business in liquors; of all the houses of ill-repute; of all secret barrooms, saloons and so-called clubs where drinks are sold, and of all the resorts of vice of whatever nature. He will be given the names of the owners of these places, together with their street numbers and hours of business. At present, each resort of the kind mentioned pays $25 a month for police protection. This is not a secret, but it is a fact known to half the voting citizens of Topeka. The list will be handed to Mr. Sheldon, therefore, to see what he will do.

Scrutinizing all Advertisements

Each particular advertisement offered is put in an envelope and laid on Mr. Sheldon's desk, marked: "For Sheldon's judgment." He has excluded every patent medicine advertisement of whatever nature. All advertising that comes under the head "Agents Wanted," is declined, Mr. Sheldon's reason being that advertisers of this class usually make promises they never fulfil, and that such advertisements are generally a bait to catch the unwary.

As Kansas is a prohibition State, it is not likely he will have to decline advertisements of wines and liquors. Tobacco advertisements, however, will not be given a line of space. No notice of theatrical performances will be permitted. None of the advertisers now holding contracts with the paper, and whose advertisements have been excluded by Sheldon, have uttered a word of demur. They have cooperated with him so far as they can, by offering no objections to the dropping of their advertisements. They tell me they are willing to be excluded for a week, knowing that after that week, and perhaps for months to come, The Capital will enjoy a circulation at least double its present output, and from this increase they will derive benefit without extra cost.

In refusing to admit an advertisement, Mr. Sheldon almost invariably quotes from Scripture to show the reason of his refusal. For example, an advertisement worth several hundred dollars came from a certain novelty concern. The merits of the particular novelty offered were set forth in exaggerated terms. The whole thing, to be plain, was a lie. When this advertisement was submitted to Mr. Sheldon, he simply wrote upon it: "Can't accept. See the commandants, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness.'"

One day recently he received an application for a large amount of space, which he felt he ought to deny, though he could not readily find a Biblical quotation to support his denial. He came quietly to the business manager and asked what the exclusion of the matter would cost.

A Sacrifice "for Conscience Sake"

"Twelve hundred dollars," was the answer. "Very well then," said Mr. Sheldon; "I feel that we cannot print this advertisement, and I beg that you allow me to make the amount good. I will gladly pay it out of my own pocket."

Of course, his offer was refused, and the advertisement was declined. But the incident is significant of Mr. Sheldon's absolute sincerity, when it is remembered that $1,200 is the exact amount of his yearly salary as pastor of the Central Congregational Church.

Mr. Sheldon eats only two meals a day, no breakfast. He is inclined to stoutness, and by reducing his meals, he has lost fifteen pounds in the last few months. He argues that a full-blooded man should eat less than his thin-blooded brother, and believes that the majority of people would suffer less and live longer if they would do without breakfast.

A Glimpse of Home Life

His working hours may be said to begin the moment he finishes dressing in the morning. Winter or summer he is up and out-doors by seven. His cottage on the outskirts of the town is heated by a furnace. Mr. Sheldon's first self-imposed duty in the morning, is to attend to that furnace. After that, he builds the kitchen fire, so that when the maid-of-all-work comes down, she can begin at once preparing breakfast; for Mrs. Sheldon and the baby have not yet learned to omit the morning meal.

Mr. Sheldon then returns to his room, shaves and completes his toilet, in which he is almost painfully neat. Then a cheery good-morning to the baby—a greeting, by the way, which is full of all the proud surveyings and silly sayings which the average man bestows upon his first-born. The baby-boy is not yet two years old and is, of course, the wonder and pride of the household.

At eight o'clock Mr. Sheldon joins Mrs. Sheldon in the dining-room and, after a short prayer, both kneeling, he looks over the morning paper, while his wife breaks her fast. Mrs. Sheldon is a bright, happy-natured young woman, the daughter of E. B. Merriam, Topeka's leading real estate dealer. She spares what time she can from baby to act as Mr. Sheldon's private-secretary-in-chief, aiding him in his church work, and discussing with him the plans for his experiment with The Capital.

After breakfast Mr. Sheldon mounts his wheel, the weather permitting, and pedals swiftly to the post-office. His mail is the largest received by any individual in Topeka. It averages four hundred letters a day, and I was in the post-office one morning when fully seven hundred letters were handed to him.

Handling Hundreds of Letters

These letters came from all parts of the world, from all sorts and conditions of men, women and children, and contain a great variety of requests. With the mail-bag strapped to his bicycle, he wheels over to the Central Congregational Church, enters his study, where Mr. Leroy A. Halbert, his assistant pastor, is awaiting him, and together these two open the letters. At present, owing to the extra demands upon his time, he needs a number of assistants. A large percentage of the letters cannot be answered. He dictates replies to as many as he consistently can, and then wheels down to The Capital office to spend the rest of the morning there preparing for editorial work. Usually, he returns home for dinner with Mrs. Sheldon, after which he returns to work. Promptly at 5 P.M. he again hurries home, harnesses his horse himself, and takes his wife and baby for an hour's ride over the prairie beyond the town. Then comes supper, an hour or two more of work, and early to bed. Now that he has actually assumed editorial charge, this daily routine is greatly changed, and his application to work is closer than ever.

On Monday, March 5th, the mail was phenomenal, 19,500 subscriptions being received, eclipsing all records for a daily newspaper. In one day nearly 2,000 subscribers were received through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Twenty-six foreign countries are represented, and all the States. Kansas leads; then in the order named come the States of Iowa, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Missouri, and New York, the others following. It is impossible to get anything like an accurate estimate of the circulation through other channels. The London edition will be printed by Sir George Newnes, of the Strand magazine, and it is said that it may even exceed the American edition.

For the first issue of The Capital under his editorship, Mr. Sheldon has prepared a full statement of the paper's policy, and he also gives the name of the institution or cause to which the profits of the entire six days' venture are to be given.

The Hope of the Nation

THE hope of the nation is in the moral strength of its youth. Its youth, that will not disappoint this hope, are to-day in schools and churches. We hold the fort to-day, but to-morrow they take possession. Some months ago we loaned a brief work on moral science to a young man in jail. He read it with the deepest interest, and as he returned it he said: "If I had known these things, I should never have been here." Moral science is the science which keeps men from jails. And moral science is rooted in the Decalogue; springs from that summary of all obligation: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself." It is the sense of obligation to God and to man that makes a republic possible; that will save it from decadence and ruin.

Uriah Heeps

THERE are a great many churches that have two or three ecclesiastical Uriah Heeps. When the fox begins to pray look out for your chickens. The more genuine religion a man has, the more comfortable he will be; but you may know a religious impostor by the fact that he prides himself on the fact that he is uncomfortable. A man of that kind is of immense damage to the Church of Christ. A ship may outride a hundred storms and yet a handful of worms in the planks may sink it to the bottom. The Church of God is not so much in danger of the cyclones of trouble and persecution that come upon it as of the vermin of hypocrisy that infest it. Wolves are of no danger to the fold of God unless they look like sheep.

Every Individual a Unit

EVERY individual of us is a unit in America's seventy millions. We count for so much in intellect, morals, religious life. The schools and the churches are to keep us up to the mark; the high standard, needful for a republic where every man is his own king, every woman her own queen and every boy and girl has a new outlook into the future. It is worthy of a great struggle; of a struggle perpetual. God is in it. The hope of humanity is in it; especially the destiny of a nation that has numbered such names as Washington, and Webster and Lincoln. Every new hero, statesman, philanthropist; every great teacher, preacher; every worthy citizen puts us under new obligation to have, to hold and transmit what has come to us through such hands, till time shall be no more.

The People's Ordination

THERE are hundreds of thousands of men who will never come to church. The only kind of a pulpit that will reach them is a dry-goods box or a drayman's cart at the street corner. We want hundreds of men every Sabbath to be preaching the Gospel in our great city parks. "What," you ask, "would you let them preach without ordination?" I answer: "If Conferences and Presbyteries will not put their hands upon your head, then I would have you ordained in another way. I would take you down into the haunts of suffering and crime, within ten minutes' walk of our best churches, and there have you tell the story of Christ, until men, redeemed from their cups, and women, elevated from a life of crime, and children, whose bare, bleeding feet are on now the road to death, should be, by your instrumentality, saved.

Then I would have these converted suffering ones put their hands of ordination on your head, setting you apart for the holy ministry in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Ah! that would be an ordination as good as the laying on of hands by Conferences and Synods—an ordination that would be most bright in the day when

> Shriveled like a parched scroll,
> The flaming heavens together roll.

Open the Windows

WE have wrecked too many sermons and lectures in ill-ventilated audience-rooms not to understand the value of pure air. There are not twenty properly ventilated lecture halls east of the Alleghany Mountains. There are not a hundred churches in America with air fit to breathe. We have more veneration for every other antiquity than for stale air. Atmosphere that has been bottled up for weeks is not quite equal to "Balm of Thousand Flowers." Give us an old log across the stream to sit on, rather than an armchair in the parlor that is opened chiefly on Christmas and Thanksgiving Days. While waiting for this year's turkey to get browned we do not want to smell last year's. There are church basements so foul that we think some of those who frequent them for devotion get sooner to the end of their earthly troubles than they would if there were less dampness in the wails; some of them suffering from what they suppose to be too much religion, when it is nothing but wind-colic.

Chips

THE world has learned that a thing is not necessarily good because it is dry. There is no religion in chips. We never could see any sanctity in husks. The donkey hath no hilarity in his voice, and no nonsense in the twitch of his ear. He never was known to dance, yet he never gets higher than his feed-box, while the robin and the lark, from the tip of bill to tip of claw, all life and joy and merriment, with their wings brush the door-latch of heaven. I would like it the more if the editor dips his pen in the dew to tell one of the morning, and in roseate to describe the sunset, and into the purple vats to suggest the vineyards, and if then he fasten his sheets together with a blue band torn from the forehead of heaven. There is yet to be such a thing as holiness on the bells of the horses; and, when religion shall have completed the conquest of the earth, I expect to see all the diamonds of the universe flashing in the urn of her tiara.

From the very beginning of his fame, two years ago, Mr. Sheldon has declined all offers of money. He does not wish it said that he works on a dollars-and-cents basis. He could be a very rich man in a short time, were he so inclined. Not long ago a New York paper offered Mr. Sheldon $15,000 a year to write for its columns. This princely honorarium he declined, refusing to consider it for a moment. Again, a prominent religious weekly offered him $5,200 for one article from his pen each week during the year 1900. This offer the preacher and author also declined, though with regret.

Declines to Become a Rich Man

The handsomest offer of all was made by a New York lecture manager. Mr. Sheldon's congregation is to give him an eight months' vacation this year, beginning May first. He has announced that he will spend the first month or two of his vacation lecturing in this country, and will then take his family to England.

The manager's offer was a guarantee of $150,000 if Mr. Sheldon would agree to deliver a series of lectures in England. Here was a tempting opportunity for Mr. Sheldon to devote his vacation to becoming a comparatively rich man—but again he refused! Meanwhile, he has agreed and arranged to lecture in England, in every city and town, if the English managers will agree not to charge an admission fee.

Thus Pastor Sheldon refused all offers of riches, having to make at least one refusal of the kind almost every day. Even the money he receives in royalties for the sale of his books, is a source of trouble to him. He feels that he might not accept it. The amount of his royalties is from $400 to $500 a month, and the fact that the sum is so large, is a constant source of wonder to him.

When I suggested to him that he could make a splendid use of money—that he could devote it to the poor and needy—his reply was: "People would only misunderstand. They might overlook the fact that I gave the money away, and was growing, supposedly, rich."

It is said that he receives many calls to fashionable and wealthy churches in large cities; but he declines all, electing to remain with the little flock who stood by him before he became famous. He says that under no consideration will he leave Topeka; but after his trip abroad, he will return to his pulpit. His congregation is by no means a rich one.

With Sheldon in Prayer-meeting

A prayer-meeting at the Rev. C. M. Sheldon's church in Topeka is an occasion of no more ceremony than attends the gathering in an ordinary household for family prayers. Simply a few souls from the flock gather round their shepherd quietly and reverently on Thursday evenings. It is a gathering characterized by simplicity, earnestness and humility, and Mr. Sheldon himself is the simplest, most earnest, most humble of all. The usual attendance is about forty, young and old, working people principally, from the heart of the city a mile away.

As I sat in the back seat of the lecture-room of the church where these prayer-meetings are held, I watched Mr. Sheldon and wondered. Could that simple soul, that man of extreme modesty sitting at the table, in front of that small gathering be the man upon whom the eyes of the world are now turned? Here was a man who with his pen had gathered an audience of many millions of people. And yet he was now talking in the simplest way to that little band of forty, in a none too sumptuous building, on the very edge of a remote, obscure city. He conducted that little prayer-meeting as though it had been the most important, most distinguished audience in the world. At the conclusion of his first prayer, in which he asked the Lord to bless the stranger present (meaning the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), and that stranger and pastor might co-operate in perfect harmony in carrying out the experiment he was soon to begin for the good of God's people. This was his sole reference to the great event impending.

During the evening Mr. Sheldon asked us to sing the following hymns from the Christian Endeavor Sacred Song Book No. 1: "What a Friend Thou Art to Me," "Thou Art My Rock," "Morning Breaks Upon the Gloom," and "Ye Christian Heralds Go."

The hymns were played by a young woman at the piano, and the singing was led by the patriarch of the congregation—Mr. Edward Parson—who bears a striking resemblance to Charles A. Dana, and who is the oldest member of the church. Mr. Sheldon himself joined heartily in the singing.

Three times he led in prayer, and each time he asked the Heavenly Father to teach us all to live as Christ would; to be not only Christians, but Christs.

A Missionary Family

The subject for informal discussion at the prayer-meeting I attended was "Home Missionary Work." The Congregational Home Missionary Society had asked Mr. Sheldon's church to give $150 as its portion of the money needed during the coming year.

During his talk on this subject, Mr. Sheldon alluded to his boyhood, when he used often to have to leave his warm bed in the middle of the night and sleep on the floor, to make room for one of the missionaries who were passing through the town.

"I never minded leaving my bed thus," he said, "for, since the time I first learned to pronounce the word 'missionary,' I had been accustomed to the presence of missionaries in our house. Ours was a home missionary family. I was brought up, I might say, among missionaries, and seemed to feel that I was a part of the missionary system. It is only natural, therefore, that I should be especially interested in Home Missions. My father was a missionary, and helped establish more than one hundred churches on the Western frontier, principally in the Dakotas where we lived."

"Once at a frontier gathering, a saloon keeper—one of the worst characters in the place—stepped forward and gave my father a one hundred dollar bill, adding that he would give him the deed of an acre of ground the following day, upon which to build a church. He said they needed a church, and the reason they were all so bad was because they had never had a church. And so, you can see, my friends, why I am so interested in the Home Missionary Society."

Mr. Sheldon's aged father, the Rev. Stuart Sheldon, was among the forty who attended that prayer-meeting.

After the meeting, Mr. Sheldon, in his gentle way, shook hands and exchanged a pleasant word with each person present.

His Unique Ideas

The pastor aims to give variety to his mid-week prayer meetings, and often introduces unique features. One evening he invited a number of the leading men of Topeka to come to the meeting and tell why certain kinds of work should be done on Sunday. Thus he had the editor of The Capital tell why a Sunday edition of a newspaper should be issued. At the same meeting, the superintendent of the principal railroad in Kansas told why railroads should be run on Sunday; the president of the street railways told why cars should be run on Sunday; and a hotel-keeper told why barber shops should be open on the Sabbath, and so on. Mr. Sheldon stated at that prayer-meeting that it was always his desire that both sides of a question should be heard.

When subscriptions for the Sheldon edition began to pour into The Topeka Capital office, and the venture promised large profits, Mr. O. F. Popenoe, the proprietor of the paper, suggested to Mr. Sheldon that the latter ought to receive compensation for his work, and begged him to promise to accept at least one-half the profits. Mr. Sheldon promptly declined the offer, but compromised afterward by agreeing to designate some institution or charity, or some other good cause, to which at least half the profits of the Sheldon edition should be given.

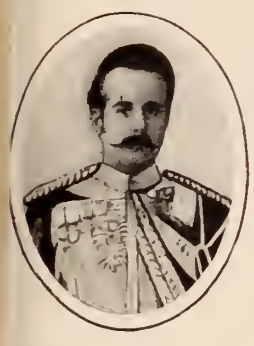
"I do not want one penny for my services," he said, "but in an early issue of the paper under my management, I will suggest a way of disposing of the profits for the benefit of our people here."

Topeka, Kan. GILSON WILLETS.

[Mr. Willett's next letter will describe in detail the whole history of the six daily issues under Mr. Sheldon's editorship. It will be copiously illustrated.]

The War in South Africa

A NEW phase of the war appears near at hand. Hitherto the Boers have been the invaders, but now they are retiring into their own territory and preparing to act on the defensive. Gen. Joubert, who has been besieging Ladysmith, apparently warned by the fate of Cronje, decided to retire while the way was still open. Gen. Buller was pressing him from the south, and there was a possibility of the British forces getting between him and the passes into the Transvaal. He therefore ordered a retreat, which appears to have been a hurried one. His rear-guard valiantly opposed Buller's advance, thus gaining time for the main body to get away northward. As soon as the last train-load was safely away, the Boers blew up the bridges to prevent pursuit. The way to Ladysmith was consequently clear for Buller's force, and Gen. Dundonald entered with a cavalry regiment. It found Gen. White's garrison in sad plight. It had been reduced to a diet of meal and horseflesh, and even those in small rations. The men looked wan and pale, but were still holding out vigorously and determined not to surrender. If, however, Joubert had made another assault like the one he made on Jan. 6, it is doubtful whether the garrison would have been strong enough to repulse it. The men are so weak from their long privations and the sickness caused by drinking the filthy water of the river, that they need rest and care before they can become effective. Eight thousand of them had been in hospital, either sick or wounded, and during the latter part of the siege there had been increased mortality, owing to the complete exhaustion of the store of medicines. The siege had lasted 118 days. General Cronje has been sent on board a British ship. He and his officers have written letters to Lord Roberts, thanking him for the kindness and consideration with which they have been treated. The rank and file also have expressed their gratification. They had evidently been deceived as to British character, and were amazed when British soldiers, seeing them about to march southward as prisoners of war, loaded them with gifts of food from their own rations. It is expected that Lord Roberts will now push forward toward Bloemfontein, capital of the Orange Free State; but it is not safe to predict what he will do, as he has the habit of doing something unexpected. As the invasion of Boer territory has only just commenced, this would be a propitious time to sue for peace, but unhappily there are as yet no signs of a disposition in that direction on the part of the Boers. If they adhere to their resolution to oppose the British advance, some of the bloodiest battles of the war have yet to be fought. It is clear that as, in the conflict which Daniel predicted:



LORD DUNDONALD

Unto the end of the war, desolations are determined (Daniel 9: 26).

The Silent Bells

The managers of the Pan-American Exposition, which is to be held in 1901 in Buffalo, N. Y., are making arrangements to include among the attractions of the Exposition a peal of bells of unique history. The peal consists of forty-three bells, ranging in weight from the small tenor of twenty-five pounds to the ponderous bass of 5,068 pounds. These bells were cast by a noted French firm, on the order of Bishop Timon, at a cost of $25,000. They were retained in France for two years in order that they might be exhibited at the Paris Exposition of 1867, where they won a gold medal for their makers. They were then sent to America and were hung in the tower of the Cathedral of St. Joseph at Buffalo. During the following seven years, according to the report of Mr. George Bleistein, of the Exposition Committee, several attempts were made to ring the chimes on the carillon. It was found, however, that the atmosphere of the tower was so damp and its area so confined that the attempts were ineffectual. The effort was then finally abandoned, and for twenty-five years they have hung silent in their tower. Mr. Bleistein says the carillon is the largest and finest in America, and that in the special campanile which will be erected at the Exposition on elevated ground to hold the bells, their harmonious sound will be fully appreciated. Each bell bears some motto in Latin, such as "Praise the Lord all peoples," "Glory to God in the highest." It must have been very mortifying to have the bells, capable of producing sweet music and bearing such mottoes, hanging silent in the tower for a quarter of a century; but far worse is it when men with so many causes for praising God and capacity for praising him are silent.

If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out (Luke 19: 40).

A Secret Divorce

A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery in Jersey City, N. J., by a well-known society lady living in New York, asking that a divorce case decided some months ago, in that court, should be reopened. Her story is that two years ago she and her husband quarreled and agreed to separate, he promising to pay her monthly a sum sufficient to support her and her two children. The monthly payments were continued until recently when they ceased. She then entered suit to secure their renewal, when, to her astonishment, she was informed that she had been divorced. Her husband had petitioned the Court of Chancery for a divorce, and as no defence had been made, the decree had been granted. The wife contends that she had never been notified of her husband's petition and knew nothing of the subsequent proceedings, otherwise she would have defended herself. She now asks that the decree be set aside and an opportunity be given her to rebut the charges made against her. If, as she alleges, no such opportunity has as yet been afforded to her, she is certainly entitled to it. We can imagine how a wife must feel on learning that without any notice to her or any word of warning, her husband has severed his relations with her. There are some desponding Christians, who in their depression and conscious of their own unworthiness fear that Christ may so cast them off. Paul appears to have known such people in his day and for their encouragement penned his triumphant words:

For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord (Rom. 8: 38).

A Shocking Will

The cable brings a report of the testamentary directions made by the Marquis of Queensberry, the British nobleman, who compiled the rules under which prize-fights in Great Britain and America are generally conducted. The following are the clauses of the will relating to the disposition of the body: "At my death I wish to be cremated and my ashes put into the earth enclosed in nothing. 'Earth to earth, ashes to ashes,' in any spot which is most convenient that I have loved. I particularly request that no Christian mummeries or tomfooleries be performed over my grave, but that I be buried as a secularist and agnostic. If it will comfort any one, there are plenty of those of my own friends who would come to say a few words of common sense. Over the spot where my ashes may lie, place no monument or stone. It is not necessary or required, nor is a procession, as the ashes can be carried in one person's hand. It can be buried in any place where the stars shall ever shed their light and the sun shall gild each rising morn." Perhaps it was best that over the remains of a man capable of writing such words, there should be no religious service. When a man deliberately spurns the good that God has provided for his spiritual development, he voluntarily degrades himself to the condition which the Preacher described:

I said in my heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them and that they might see that they themselves are beasts; as the one dieth, so dieth the other (Eccles. 3: 18).

CROSSING THE KLIP RIVER

BOER PRISONERS OF WAR

GENERAL VIEW OF LADYSMITH

BRIEF NOTES

The Jubilee of Y. M. C. A. work in America is to be celebrated next year in Boston, Mass., on June 11-16, by a world's convention.

Dr. Talmage preached on Sunday, March 4, for Dr. D. J. Burrell in the Collegiate Church in New York. An enormous congregation assembled to hear him.

A munificent gift has rejoiced the Presbyterian Boards. Mrs. Rachel B. Crane, of Peekskill, N. Y., has given one hundred thousand dollars to reduce the mortgage on the Presbyterian building in Fifth avenue, New York.

A wealthy Hebrew banker in London has undertaken to provide a quantity of the unleavened cakes used by Jews in the celebration of the passover, so that the Jews who are serving under the British flag in South Africa may observe the festival in orthodox style. More than three hundred Jews are known to be in the British forces.

The Bishop of Moosonee reports having heard from two Eskimos that two white men came down from the sky and were murdered by Eskimos. It is feared these men were the balloonist explorer Andree and his companion.

The Woman's Board of the Reformed Church in America has received from Mr. Robert Schell, of New York, a gift of ten thousand dollars for the establishment of a woman's hospital at Velore, India, which will be called the "Mary Taber Schell Hospital," in memory of Mrs. Schell.

The West Side Business Men's Noonday Prayer Meeting, held at 281 Greenwich street, New York, is one of the fruits of Mr. D. L. Moody's campaign in the city in 1876. Every business day since that time the meeting has been held and large numbers of business men have found it a source of help and strength. Several conversions have occurred there recently. A cordial welcome is given to all visitors.

Dr. Birch, having decided to appeal to the General Assembly from the decision of the New York Presbytery, which voted by a large majority not to place Professor McGiffert on trial, the Professor has determined, according to a published statement, to relieve the Assembly of the painful duty by withdrawing from the Presbyterian Church. It is reported that he will join the Congregationalists, who will give him cordial welcome.

A short prayer for the use of British soldiers in the war has been prepared by the Archbishop of Armagh, and Lord Roberts has ordered copies of it to be distributed among the soldiers. Its concluding words are: "Keep us faithful unto death, calm in danger, patient in suffering, merciful as well as brave, true to our Queen, our country, and our colors. If it be thy will, enable us to win victory for England, but above all grant us the better victory over temptation and sin, over life and death, that we may be more than conquerors through him who loved us and laid down his life for us, Jesus our Saviour, the Captain of the Army of God. Amen."

WELL, Arvilly's first work, after she had canvassed the hotel-keeper for the Twin Crimes, and as many of the guests as she could, wuz to find out if Waitstill wuz there. And sure enough she found her. She wuz in one of the hospitals and doin' a good work, jest as she would anywhere she wuz put. She come to the hotel to see us as soon as she could, and Arvilly seemed to renew her age, having Waitstill with her agin. We writ to once to Cousin John Richard.

Robert Strong and Dorothy wuz dretful interested in Waitstill I could see, and they asked a great many questions about her work in the hospital. And I see that Robert wuz only grounded in his convictions when Waitstill told him of the sickness the doctors and nurses had to contend with, and how largely it wuz caused by liquor drinking. Hundreds of American saloons in Manila, so she said, and sez she, "How can the hospitals hope to undo the evils that these do to men's souls and bodies?" Sez she, "You know what a fearful disease and crime breeder it is in a temperate climate, but it is tenfold worse here in this tropical land." I asked her about Willie Gray, but she knew nothing about him; she said that he was not in the hospital where she wuz working.

She wuz anxious to hear all the news from Jonesville, and I willin'ly told her what Phila Ann had told me about Elder White, and the noble work he was doin' in East Loontown, and I sez, "Missionary work is jest as necessary and jest as important and pleasin' to God if done in Loontown as in the Antipithies."

And she said she knew it. And I sez: "Elder White is working himself to death, and don't have the comforts of life, to say nothin' of the happiness he ort to."

Waitstill didn't say nothin', but I fancied a faint pink flush stole up into her white cheeks, some like the color that flashes up onto a snow bank at sunset. Life wuz all snow and sunset to her I could see, but I knowed that she wuz the one woman in the world for Ernest White, the ideal woman his soul had always worshiped, and found realized in Waitstill—poor little creeter!

I didn't know whether the warm sun of his love could melt the snow and frozen hail or not—the sun duz melt such things—and I knew love wuz the greatest thing in the world. Well, I had to leave the event to Providence, and wuz willin' to; but yet, after a woman duz leave things to the Most High to do, she loves to put in her oar and help things along; mebby that is the way of Providence—who knows? But 'tennyrate I gin another blind hint to her before we left the conversation.

Sez I, "Ernest White is doin' the Lord's work if ever a man did, and I can't think that it is the Lord's will that whilst he's doin' it he ort to eat such bread as he has to—milk emtin's and sour at that, to say nothin' of fried stuff that a anaconda couldn't digest. He deserves a sweet, love-guarded home, and to be tended to by a woman that he loves—one who could inspire him and help him on in the heavenly way he's treading alone and lonesome." Her cheeks did turn pink then, and her eyes looked like deep blue pools in which stars wuz shinin', but she didn't say anything, and Robert Strong resoomed his talk with her about her hospital work. And before she left he gin her a big check to use for her patients; I don't know exactly how big it wuz, but it went up into the hundreds, anyway; and Dorothy gin her one, too, for I see her write it; Miss Meechim gin her her blessin' and more'n a dozen tracts, which mebby will set well on the patients, if administered cautious. I myself gin her the receipt for the best mustard poultice that ever drawed, and two pairs of clouded blue-and-white wool socks I had knit on the way, and though it wuz a warm country she said they would come handy when her patients had chills.

"TOMMY AND I WANDERED IN A CROSS STREET"

CHAPTER XV

The Search for Willie Gray

THERE wuz two young American girls at the hotel, and they happened to come into the parlor while we wuz talkin' and they sent a big present to the hospital. I guess they wuz real well off and good dispositioned. They wuz travelin' alone and seemed to be havin' a real good time. One on 'em wuz sunthin' of a invalid, but wuz outdoors all day. I spoze tryin' to git well. They minded their own bizness and didn't do any hurt so fur as I could see, but Elder Wessel couldn't bear 'em. Sez he to me one day:

"I spoze they represent the new young woman?"

He said it real skornful, and Arvilly, who wuz present, took him up real snappish. "Well, what of it? What have they done?" If that poor man had said that black wuz black and white wuz white, Arvilly would have found fault with it.

"I don't object to what they have done," sez he, "so much as to what they are. Young American women know too much." And Arvilly sez with a meanin' glance at him, "That is sunthin' that everybody don't have to stand."

She might just as well have called him a fool, her axent wuz such. Arvilly is too hash. Sez he: "Now my Lucia is different. She knows nothing about sin and wickedness, and I got this position for her, so that as soon as she left the convent she was placed directly in the care of this good woman and her little innocent child. What does she know of danger, of sin or sorrow, or worldliness or vanity?"

"Or danger?" sez I meanin'ly. "If she always has someone at her side to guard her, her perfect ignorance and innocence is a charm, but how would it be in the hour of danger and temptation? Why should anybody fear being burned if they had no knowledge of fire?"

"Oh," sez he, "her divine innocence is her safeguard. Evil would retire abashed before the timid glance of her pure eyes."

"I hope so," sez I dryly. "I hope so. But I never knew the whiteness of its wool to help a lamb if a wolf dog got after it. But mebby it will in her case," sez I reasonably. "I don't want to break up your happiness," sez I.

"You cannot," sez he dogmatically. "You cannot. I have brought up my Lucia in the only right way for a young girl to be brought up. She has been completely separated from young people of the opposite sex; she knows nothing of fashionable flirting and folly. And when I see such abnormal creatures as the New Girl, as they call her, I am horrified, shocked beyond words at the spectacle of their brazen independence and what they call their freedom, their comradeship with the opposite sex, their fearlessness and boldness and frankness with gentlemen, talking with them really as if they were of the same sex as themselves. As I see this I thank God. I thank God that my Lucia is different."

Lambs and Wolves

Well, she wuz a pretty little thing, with eyes as innocent and timid as a young fawn's that had never been outside its green covert in the great wilderness. But I knew that under her baby looks and baby ways wuz a woman's heart; a woman's emotions and impulses would roust up when the time come and the sun of love shone down on her. Why, Nater had layed down laws before Elder Wessel did; he couldn't keep her from thinkin' about her future mate; she would let her mind dwell on some one if it wuz only the man in the moon. And I knew the world wuz full of bad men as well as good men, how would it be with her if thrown with a wolf in sheep's clothing? If guarded and sheltered all right, but if onguarded and onwarned and thrown into temptation and danger I felt that trouble wuz ahead for Lucia Wessel. But I knew that it wuz of no use for me to hist up a danger flag in front of her, for her father wouldn't let me. But I felt dubersome about her, dretful dubersome. She and Aronette had formed a real girl attachment for each other, and some way I didn't like the idee on't, but don't know as I could have told why.

Well, we didn't lay out to stay long in Manila, but we did stay long enough so Dorothy and Miss Meechim and Robert Strong went round and see the different islands. They went to Illollo and wuz gone for three days, Aronette stayin' with me at the tarven, and Dorothy told me when she got back how beautiful the journey wuz. The water wuz like glass, the sunrise and sunset marvelous, thickly wooded shores on either side filled with oncounted wealth. Great forests of sandal wood, enough to build houses of, and how we treasure little snips on't in fan sticks. Mahogany trees enough to build barns and cow stables on, and how we gloat over a old clock case or lamp stand made on't. She said that Illollo wuz like most old Spanish towns, dretful old lookin' and kinder run down. The natives dressed like others she had seen, but spoke a different language. They went to the American general's headquarters some two milds off. A hundred varieties of palm trees grow along the road and every sort of tropical tree. The natives wuz all dark complected, but some good lookin', most all bareheaded or else with a gay turban and knives stuck in the sashes of their gay tunics.

A Wayward Pair

They didn't see any of the insurgents, but knew that back in some of the thick woods or hiding amongst the mountains wuz men fighting for what they called their liberty, home and native land.

One day whilst the party wuz gone Tommy and I wuz takin' a little walk; Josiah could't go, he had got hold of a New York paper of three weeks before, and was readin' it through from title page to Lost and Found column. We wandered into a little cross street lined on each side with little shops with the shopkeepers squattin' in the door, and outside the native wives and children. Everything under the sun almost wuz to be found in these shops, and we had wandered along for quite a good ways lookin' at the curious things, and still more curious people, when we met Aronette and Lucia, accompanied by the two young men I had seen with 'em on the boat; they wuz on the stoop of one of the old business buildin's, gigglin' and laughin' like a bevy of swallers round the eaves of a Jonesville barn.

But, as I said before, I didn't like the looks of the young men, and on Aronette's return I told her so, feelin' that I wuz in a measure responsible for her safety whilst her mistress wuz away. Aronette wuz combin' Tommy's hair and curlin' it over her finger as I talked to her, which made me feel some mean to attact her whilst in my service, but Duty's apron string fluttered down before me and I stiddied myself on it as I spoke real good warnin' words to her.

Sez I, "My dear, I didn't like the looks of the young men I saw you walkin' with to-night." Sez I, "I saw them two young men coming out of a Canteen not a half hour before, and" sez I, "they look to me dissipated and mean. They drink; I know by their looks they do."

Aronette Rebuked

And she sez, "Oh, dear Madam, I only went out to take the air a little while. You know I care for nobody in this country. My heart is in old Normandie," sez she, the tears welling up to the blue well of her eyes. "My heart is with my Pierre, but," sez she, kinder tossin' her head, not a high toss, only a little vain pretty motion of a pretty, thoughtless girl, some like a blue bird in the spring of the year, "if a young man insists on paying you a little attention what can a poor little girl do? The days are long when one is young and her own Pierre so far away, and, dear Madame, Lucia was with me."

"Another innocent, ignorant young creature," sez I; "two little butterflies fluttering about instead of one, not thinkin' or carin' for the fouler's net," sez I, smilin' on her pleasant, for I couldn't help it. For I knew the heart of youth, and the monotony of life, and the need of young hearts for each other. But I didn't like the young men's looks and told her so agin, and she laughed, and said she didn't like their looks either. Sez she, "Their breath always smells of the whiskey. Faugh!" sez she. "It makes me sick," and she shrugged her shoulders in the true French way.

And I sez agin, lookin' solemn, "No young man whose breath smells of whiskey is safe for any young girl to associate with. It is a pizen atmosphere that blasts every sweet and pure thing that comes nigh it." And I sithed.

And she said in her own sweet way that she knew I was telling the truth, for I talked just as her own sweet mother did. And she bent down with one of her pretty foreign ways and kissed my hand. Dear little thing, I didn't spoze my talk had done her much good, but then I considered that it couldn't do her any hurt anyway. And so I left the event to the overruling Power, just as we poor weak mortals have to.

An Unexpected Meeting

Well, a day or two after that Josiah and I wuz takin' a walk, meetin' occasionally Turks all dressed turkey fashion, and Japans, and Yankees and men and wimmen and children, when who should we meet face to face but Cousin John Richard, that blessed man. As I said, we had writ and writ and tried to find him, but didn't know but we should have to hunt round considerable, but wuz bound to not leave the islands till we'd seen him. But lo and behold! here he wuz, lookin' just as good and heavenly minded as ever. He wuz santerin' along apparently lost in deep thought or nearly lost.

But when he see us he grasped our hands with a welcome that made us know that no matter to what a extent a man's soul may live in the heavens, his heart is tied with deathless ties to the relations on his own side and to their pardners if they be congenial.

"HE SAID WILLIE GRAY HAD BEEN IN THE NEXT COT TO HISEN"

We stopped stun still and talked for quite a spell about different things: our health, the relations and so forth, and then santered on agin all together. But anon I sez: "John Richard, you look wan and pale, your duty here as a chaplain has wore on you; but oh what a blessed work!" Sez I, "Comfortin' the sick and dyin', turnin' the fadin' eyes to heaven's light, oh what a holy work!" sez I.

Cousin John Richard shook his head sadly. "I am not a chaplain, cousin Samantha," sez he. "I offered my services as a chaplain or a missionary, but was refused. They said I was not needed in that capacity. They had already all the chaplains they needed."

"And after you come thousands of milds, led by Duty, to give your services free?"

"Yes, I offered my services free as a helper to care for them that needed me, and also as I told the representative of the United States, I had brought a sum of money with me to buy little delicacies and comfort for the sick ones."

"And they wouldn't take even that?" sez I.

"Yes," sez he sadly, "they offered to sell part of a Canteen to me. The man didn't know me, and anyway I saw at once that he was under the influence of liquor as he talked to me."

I wuz almost speechless with agitation and shame, and a number of other emotions, and Cousin John Richard went on still more sadly, pintin' as he spoke to a barren lookin' spot sown thick with graves: "There lies the product of the Canteen and Saloon; in this deadly climate the drink demon has little to do to assist his brother, Death. Our poor boys fall like rotten leaves before the hurricane."

Sez I, lookin' up to the blue sky, "Why don't the heavens fall when such things affront the light of day?"

"The patience of God," sez John Richard, "is one of the things we cannot measure."

"Nor his pity, nuther," sez I, in heart-broken axents; for as I looked at them thickly-sown graves and thought of the mothers and wives and sweethearts fur, fur away, mourning for them that wuz not, my tears fell and I wiped 'em off with my snowy linen handkerchief. But our steps had drawed nigh to a rough-lookin' hospital where many lay sick unto death, and I sez to Josiah: "Let's go in; mebby Willie Gray is here." I hadn't seen his ma since we come but spozed that she wuz huntin' for him. We too had tried to find him but had not succeeded.

The Fate of a Soldier

There wuz a kind-lookin' man at the door who let us in after a few questions, and we passed through ward after ward, inquiring for Willie Gray, and at last we found a sick Irishman by the name of Riley, who said that Willie Gray had been in the next cot to hisen, but had died two days before and wuz buried. Riley wuz good natured and went on of his own accord to tell us about his death. Willie Gray had died all alone, the doctor was so hard worked that he could not stay with any one patient, and the chaplain wuz called away to other sick beds, and the nurse of that ward was sick and had to go off duty for awhile. Riley said that Willie had been calling to his mother; for some one to come to him all night. He had something he wanted to say. He wanted to tell his mother sunthin, he wanted someone to pray with him. He sez, "I can't die alone."

When Riley dropped asleep he said that Willie wuz cryin, sobbing in a weak way for he wuz almost gone, but still saying in his low whispering voice, he couldn't die without someone to pray with him. And before morning he died. Some time durin' that dark, lonesome night the poor, home-sick boy left the ranks of the army which had ruined him, for we heard from them that knew that it wuz the fast life he had led there that had killed him. Destroyed by the evils of the system that is provided for our boys with their soldier clothes. Well, it did its work on Willie Gray, just as it has on thousands and thousands of others of mothers' boys, and will keep on doin' I spoze, as long as the flag waves and the eagle screams. And I should think she would scream to think on't. (I call the eagle "she" owin' to a inadvertence, for it is a male bird; no female has any place in our govermunt unless it is the statutes of Justice and Liberty, and all Liberty can do is to stand out in the water and hold up that wooden torch of hern, and if the nation took it into its head to paint that torch with tar and lam black she couldn't hender it. And Justice I spoze has cried quite a good deal under her bandages to see how things are goin' on, she must.

A Mother's Grief

Well, it jest killed his ma; she may drag round her body a few weeks or months longer, but her real life died there. Not knowin' any better, Riley told her jest what he had us. And there I found her in another ward of that hospital smit down like a flower by frost. When I bid her adoo I knew that we should never meet until we meet in that other country whose govermunt is better to its soldiers than ourn, for its Ruler leads them not to pizen drink that murders soul and body, but to living fountains of water, and wipes away all tears from their eyes.

Well, we didn't make a long stay in Manila. But Arvilly beset me to go with her to see General Grant on this subject so near to her heart, and which she had made her life work. She said that it wuz my duty to go.

But I sez, "Arvilly, you talk so hash; I can't bear to have the son of the man who saved his country talked to as I am afraid you will if you git to goin'."

Sez she, "I won't open my head. You know the subject from A to izzard. I'll jest stand by and listen, but somebody ort to talk to him. Hundreds and hundreds of American saloons in this one city! Forced onto these islands by our country. Sunthin' has got to be done about it. If you don't go and talk to him about it I shall certainly go alone, and if I do go," sez she, "he will hear talk that he never hearn before."

"I'll go, Arvilly," sez I hurriedly, "I'll go and do the best I can, but if you put in and talk so hash it will jest throw me off the track."

"A promise is a promise," sez she; "I never did break my word yet."

Well, havin' made the necessary preliminary moves, we met General Grant by appointment in his own quarters. Before we got inside the lines we had to advance and give the countersign, which wuz Whiskey. Arvilly planted herself right there like a balky mule and said she would die in her tracks before she said it. But I, knowin' that it wouldn't make nor break the traffick, sez "Whiskey," and I added, "May the Lord destroy it!" Arvilly sez, "Amen!" and we walked in past the astounded sentry with our heads up. (General Grant hadn't nothin' to do with that countersign; it wuz some officer's doin's.) Well, General Grant seemed quite pleased to see us. He's a real good lookin' man, and if he hadn't any properties of his own he would be beloved for his pa's sake, but he has properties of his own. He is a good man and a smart one. Well, the first compliments bein' passed, I lanched out into my bizness.

SAMANTHA GIVES THE COUNTERSIGN

... Under the Evening Lamp ...

By Margaret E. Sangster

In the Sunrise Kingdom

IN Japan, as everywhere else in the East, many of the customs to which we have been inured from infancy, and which have prevailed among the well-bred for generations, are reversed. For example, our men wait upon the ladies. In Japan the men are first served; they precede the women on social occasions; the man first enters a train, is first waited on at the table, is, in fact, first everywhere. The women are charmingly graceful, suave, and polite, in the Sunrise kingdom. Part of their training is to make them facile in small talk, and differential in manner. When a group of pretty maids is dressed for dancing, it is not that they are to dance with men; rather they are to execute smooth figures and difficult steps while men look on and are entertained. Thus, long ago, in another Eastern country, the daughter of a wicked queen danced before a wicked king, and so pleased was he that he offered her any gift within his power to grant. And, instigated by her cruel mother, the damsel asked for and received the head of John the Baptist. In Eastern lands, dancing is among the immoralities of life.

MY LADY'S TOILET

A GROUP OF JAPANESE GIRLS IN TABLEAU

Nothing can be prettier, or more comfortable than the dress of a Japanese lady. Often it is composed of very rich silks and brocades, splendidly embroidered, and very lovely in color. Our Western fashions have, from time to time, felt the influence of Japan, and we have now and then broken away, to some slight extent, from the bondage of the stiff corset, and the ugliness foisted upon us by the tyranny of the French dressmaker. The loose flowing skirts, the graceful jacket effect, the soft sleeves, the great girdle and sash and picturesque bows, veil outlines, hide an ungainly figure, and are becoming to old and young. Japanese women are small and doll-like: they look insignificant in the conventional European or American costume, but they are very attractive in their national dress.

Babies have a beautiful time in Japan, as do all little children. The houses have little furniture and few portable bits of ware which a child may ruin by accident or mischief. The nurses are generally young, though occasionally and infrequently they are old. They trot about carrying the babies on their backs, the little bald heads bobbing up from the bag-like wraps where they are securely tied. One seldom hears a child cry in Japan. The nurses are patient and loving, and few dont's hedge the infantile path.

About Boarding-Houses

If I kept a boarding-house, I think my first endeavor would be to make it as home-like as possible. It should be thoroughly aired every day, so that no ghosts of last week's dinners should pervade the stairs and halls, and abide, in the shape of clinging odors, in carpets and curtains. My house should be clean and neat; and I would not have spidery chairs which would break under the weight of a substantial person; nor decrepit tables, ready to go down at a touch. I'd have a piano or a cabinet organ, and it should be in tune. As for pictures, they should be well-chosen photographs of fine pictures, or interesting characters, not, however, of my own family, and cheap oil-paintings and chromos should be banished. My table should be daintily set and served well, with an abundance of good and wholesome food, not depending so much on desserts, as some women do, but giving nutritious soups, well-cooked meats and other viands with a flavor of mother's cooking in their taste. And I'd remember that people who board are people who must somehow make shift to find home in their boarding-house, and it should be my aim to let them discover it in my house. I would order my house as a Christian should, and, at least, so arrange its routine, that church-going folk should have hours which would accommodate them.

Industries of the Blind

Broom-making, the seating of chairs with woven cane, hammock weaving and similar industries are in our large cities carried on by the deft fingers of the blind. A good way to help them is to patronize the homes and shops where they live, as these institutional asylums should never be confounded with the places where hopeless pauperism resignedly hides. The blind prefer to be self-supporting, and may be so, if good people will only buy their wares.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—FATHER. Do not allow your boy to neglect his pet animals. They are dependent on him for food and happiness and their care developes many good qualities in him.

—MATTIE C. Your Aunt Patience advises you to let the young man get over his tiff without assistance from you. Pray do not seem anxious for the attentions of any young man.

—EMPLOYER. When a trained nurse is in your home she is entitled to a good bed in a comfortable room, and to certain hours for rest and exercise. If she lose her own health, she cannot take proper care of a sick person.

—CONSCIENCE. If your parents and friends are satisfied with your engagement, and the young man is devoted to you, I think you are giving yourself needless trouble in the matter. Why distrust happiness? Accept it and be grateful.

—J. R. Please do not take any risks in the matter of which you speak. Aunt Prudence inclines to keeping on the safe side. Find something nearer home, and refuse to invest money. No doubt the people are all right, but you are too far away.

—HILDRETH. A young lady should not permit the familiarities of which you speak. They may not be improper from a moral standpoint, but they are very bad form indeed.

—A SUBSCRIBER. Fathers generally find it rather a trial to give up their daughters, and regard with very critical eyes the man who comes courting the little maiden they have brought up. I counsel the daughter whose father opposes her marriage, to patience and a year's waiting. If at the end of that time her father remains obdurate and she is convinced of her lover's worthiness, she may then decide upon her course.

Mountain Sunday Schools

Many of the American Sunday School Union missionaries in the mountain districts of Tennessee, Kentucky and North Carolina relate interesting experiences among the children. Missionary Jones gave a poor boy a pair of shoes one frosty morning, lately, which put the lad on a comfortable footing, as he went from house to house through field and forest, inviting everybody in the settlement to the meeting. "Do please come to the school house nex' Sunday. The man what 'livers 'dresses to the children is gwine to be there an' make us a Sunday School, perviden' hit aint a snowin'." At the hour appointed the sky was clear, the little house was filled with a most attentive audience, and the happiest looking boy in the crowd was Albert, who had traversed the mountain by-ways for many miles, giving notice of the meeting. It was the boy's first experience in a Sunday School class and the same was true of almost all the others present.

"I Could Not Do Without Thee"

I could not do without thee,
O Saviour of the lost!
Whose precious blood redeemed me,
At such tremendous cost.
Thy righteousness, thy pardon,
Thy precious blood must be
My only hope and comfort,
My glory and my plea.

I could not do without thee,
I cannot stand alone;
I have no strength or goodness,
No wisdom of my own.
But thou, beloved Saviour,
Art all in all to me;
And weakness will be power
If leaning hard on thee.

I could not do without thee,
O Jesus, Saviour dear!
E'en when my eyes are holden,
I know that thou art near.
How dreary and how lonely
This changeful life would be,
Without the sweet communion,
The secret rest with thee.

.. Anxious Hours ..

THESE come to us all now and then. Perhaps sickness is in the house, a dear one lying moaning and tossing on a bed of pain, with the doctor coming several times a day, wearing an inscrutable countenance, but failing to leave behind him any definite hope. If the sufferer is husband or wife, the clock of life seems at a standstill: the home loses its cheery aspect of order and business; every thought centres on the couch where fever is burning up the vital forces, and good nursing is fighting to gain the victory. If it be a dear little child, or a youth, the hearts of parents are torn with anguished suspense, until they are sure that the danger is past.

Anxious hours come over money, when funds are low, or the head of the house loses his job, or expenses are too large for the income. Retrenchment is dictated by prudence, but is not always easy or possible. Anxious hours—far the most anxious in life—are the portion of those whose children go astray and wander into forbidden paths.

What are we to do? Carry every anxiety, the least, the greatest, to the dear Lord, and lay it at his pierced feet. There is no burden too heavy for him to lift.

Spring Flowers

On my table to-day, brought me by friends, are two large bunches of golden daffodils, and all summer shines for me in their cheery bloom, and awakes for me in their sweet fragrance. The spring flowers have a message for us in these Lenten days—the assurance of our Father's care. Well may we expect every good thing from him, when he gives us back, year by year, the flowers we love, after the winter's rigor is over.

"THE STONY HEART"

The Carven Scarab Within the Mummy the Emblem of Immortality

THE Egyptian emblem of immortality was the scarab, or sacred beetle. This interesting little creature is found throughout Egypt, as well as in certain other countries. It is black in color and about one inch in length. One of its habits is to burrow its way down into the mud of the Nile, and disappear for a time. After the inundation has subsided, however, it comes forth again to the surface of the ground, the first of living creatures seen emerging from the black soil.

Astonished beholders in ancient times believed this to be a veritable case of death, burial, and resurrection, and seizing the suggested thought, made it a symbol for themselves. It is not difficult to understand, therefore, why this insect came to be looked upon as sacred. Models of it were made in great profusion. The material used was chiefly stone. Many of these representations are small, not larger than the insect itself. Others of them are about the size of the closed hand or fist. In the British Museum there is one of basalt about six feet long, five feet wide and three feet high. One precious little scarab (which lies before me as I write) has inscribed on it the cartouche of Thothmes III., a Theban Pharaoh, who reigned while the Israelites were in the land of Goshen. From Egypt these stone models or representations of the sacred beetle were conveyed by traders and merchants to all parts of the ancient civilized world. They have been found in the Tigris-Euphrates valley, in Syria, Phœnicia, Greece, Italy, Sardinia, and in other countries.

In the ancient process of embalming the human body, the brain was taken out and put into a jar, the heart and lungs were put into another jar, and in like manner the viscera was deposited into a third jar. These jars or sepulchral vases were placed in the tomb near the casket which contained the mummy. In that part of the body where the heart had been, the Egyptians were in the habit of putting one of these stone scarabs. Those thus used inside of the mummy were usually two or three inches long. Specimens of them can be seen in the British Museum, and in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. They are yet found in Egypt, in the bodies of mummies. The significance of this custom is apparent. As the beetle disappeared under the ground for a time and again emerged, so the Egyptians believed the bodies of their dead that were buried from their sight should, in like manner, rise again, after the lapse of three thousand years. In Ezekiel 11:19 and 36:26 we have a gracious promise that God will take away "the stony heart" out of men's flesh and give them "a heart of flesh." The imagery employed by the prophet is believed to be borrowed from this ancient Egyptian custom. An unconverted person is compared to a shriveled, unsightly mummy, with a cold, dead stone lodged in his bosom in place of a heart. When regeneration takes place the dead is brought to life, the heart of stone is taken away, and in its stead is given a heart of flesh. This throws fresh light upon an interesting figure, and is one of the most striking statements we have in the Bible, of the supreme change that is wrought in man when he becomes a new creature.

His Life-Work Done

To have been for nearly three score years and ten a minister of the Gospel is surely a very exceptional record of usefulness. Rev. Dr. Shaler G. Hillyer, who died in Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 19, had been blessed with just such a long and honorable term of service to the Master. He was ninety years old last June, and his brother ministers called upon him in a body with congratulations and good wishes. The week in which he died, an article from his pen appeared in the Southern paper, of which he was an editor; another completed by him during the same week awaits publication. His mind was clear and vigorous up to the day preceding his death, when he was stricken with paralysis. His last sermon was preached two Sundays before. He was a native Georgian; his education began in an "old field school," which he attended when he was a little boy.

In describing the little schoolhouse of his boyhood, Dr. Hillyer said, "The floor was dirt, the desks were plain boards nailed to the log walls, the seats were plain board benches. The teacher, a man named Jones, sat on the wooden bench at the end of the room. The pupils were grown young men and women, and there were boys and girls and some very small children. We were taught spelling and got as far as the first reader. We learned reading, too, out of a newspaper. One of the pupils got hold of a newspaper somewhere and it produced a ripple when introduced in school for our edification."

Dr. Hillyer's education was completed at Franklin College, now the University of Georgia, and he became Professor of Theology in that institution. He was one of three remarkable brothers; Rev. John F. Hillyer died at eighty-nine, after a ministry of sixty-six years; Junius Hillyer, Congressman, lawyer, judge, and solicitor of the United States Treasury, lived to be seventy-nine.

A Missouri Revival

A wave of revival is passing through large parts of the State of Missouri. Besides the wonderful work of Maj. J. H. Cole at Springfield, in which the converts already number over eight hundred, revivals are reported at Green Ridge, Lebanon, and Kansas City. A notable fact is that the majority of the converts are men, some of them advanced in years.

"A Stitch in Time Saves Nine."

A broken stitch, like the "little rift within the lute," is the beginning of trouble. "I am tired, not ill." "It will soon pass away." "I don't believe in medicine." These are the broken stitches that lead to serious illness. Nature is wise and in Hood's Sarsaparilla she has furnished the means to take up broken stitches. Why? Because it starts at the root and cleanses the blood.

Bad Blood — "For years I was troubled with my blood, my face was pale, I never felt well. Three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla made me feel better and gave me a healthy color." Mae Cross, 24 Cedar Av., South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Rocky Mountain Snow-Sheds

THE winter of 1899-1900 has been remarkably free from heavy snow-storms such as those that have visited the Middle and Western States during the several preceding years. In the West, however, there have been some very heavy snow-falls; the Rockies, of course, never know a winter of complete exemption. Our picture of the exterior of a snow-shed on the Union Pacific Railroad, between Sherman and Tie Siding, the highest point on that road, illustrates one of the methods by which modern engineering overcomes the dangers and difficulties of winter travel. These snow-sheds are often miles and miles in extent; and are so constructed as to protect passing trains from snow-slides, and also to keep the track clear in regions where the cutting-wheel of the snow-plow would hardly avail for this purpose, and the rails would otherwise be continually buried in snow. The supports need to be strongly built; and the general appearance of the shed suggests the track of a New York elevated train.

A RAILWAY SNOW-SHED IN THE ROCKIES

A Clergyman's Conversion

IN the course of an address to his people on the death of Mr. Moody, the Rev. E. Bacheler Russell, Vicar of Leyton, England, told the following story of his conversion: "When Mr. Moody visited us in 1875, I had no idea that I was not what could really be called a Christian man. I was as ignorant of the simple plan of salvation and the Gospel message as a man could possibly be, though living in a Christian community and in a Christian land. I had my race-horses; I spent a great deal of time at the card table, in the ballroom, in the theatre. With shame I must say it, I began to gamble; I had a horse which carried everything before him, and consequently I was very much elated, and so lay on more and more until the tide turned and I lost heavily. I wondered whether I was being punished for living an un-Christian life and I determined to go and see Mr. Moody and ask him. I went into his inquiry meeting and asked him if it was wrong for a Christian man to go to the races. Mr. Moody took my hand and looking me full in the face asked, "Are you a Christian?" If any one had before implied that I was not a Christian I should not have liked it, and should have thought it very rude and impertinent. But I didn't with this man. For the first time in my life I realized I was not what he meant by a Christian. 'No,' I said, 'I am not.' Do you want to become one?' he said. 'Yes, I do.' 'Very well,' said Mr. Moody and then he talked and prayed.

It was then, on the 12th day of March, 1875, that the light broke into my soul, and as I sat there, miserable up to that moment, I thought, 'What a fool, what an utter diiot I have been. I have been praying 'Lord I believe,' and I never believed at all. Here, now, I put forth my hand for salvation and took it, and I believed God. And oh, the peace that came into my heart and soul! For twenty-four years, with many, many failures, I have followed Mr. Moody's Master, and the way grows brighter and brighter still."

A Notable Revival

Sunday morning, February 11, the Wesley evangelists began a two weeks' soul-saving campaign at Hempstead, L. I., M. E. church. All the services were marked with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The first Sabbath over fifty persons made public confession of Christ, and for four weeks souls were saved at ever service. A little girl who confessed Christ the first Sunday, went home and informed her unconverted father; his heart was touched, and he also came to the services and found a Saviour. Then two more of his children were converted, and several entire familes were also saved. Up to the close of the fourth week of the services, over 200 souls had made profession of faith in Christ. Rev. Wm. Willett, Jr., of Lawrence, L. I.; Rev. Louis Johnson and Sherwood, of Brooklyn; Colwell, of Long Island; Stockdale, pastor of Fleet Street M. E. Church, Brooklyn, and Wm. Nesbitt, the converted policeman of New York; Dr. Sanford and Rev. Jas. E. Holmes, the pastor, with the members have assisted the evangelists in this remarkable revival. The house has not experienced such a religious tidal wave in over forty years.

The Force of Habit.

It is a peculiar thing that the use of Coffee and Tea has not been replaced, more than is the case, by the use of Van Houten's Cocoa.

The reason for that is to be sought in the force of habit. But habits should be broken through, and Van Houten's Cocoa taken, now that it has been proven to be a much healthier, and more delicious drink than Tea and Coffee, while at the same time so nourishing and easily digested.

For the Nerves, also, Van Houten's Cocoa is so much better; because, although it is equally refreshing, it has not the pernicious after-effects upon the nerves, such as follow after using Coffee or Tea.

It is not an expensive habit to use Van Houten's Cocoa; indeed, after actual trial of various brands, and even loose cocoa, many persons have discovered that Van Houten's Cocoa is not only the best and most delicious, but it is also the most economical.

Quit Drug Coffee and Uses Postum Food Coffee

"While on a visit to a relative in New Hampshire, who runs a fruit farm, I found on the supper table what appeared to be a strong cup of coffee. I usually drank tea at night and they knew it, but asked me to try the coffee, saying it was Postum Food Coffee, and the reason they served it was that they found when they got up early in the summer mornings and drank a cup of coffee to brace up on, they generally had a headache or sick stomach along about noon, and that their grocer persuaded them sometime before my visit to try Postum Food Coffee. After a week's trial they adopted it for the family, and had never returned to the ordinary coffee, saying that it had worked a wonderful change in all of them—no more sick headaches, no more sick stomachs.

"For two weeks I used Postum, and when I returned to Boston I banished tea and coffee from the table forever. My complexion has made a decided change for the better, and it goes without saying that I feel greatly benefited. My nights are not sleepless now, as they were when I was a coffee drinker." M. E. Curtis, Canterbury street, Boston, Mass.

WHEN a popular hymn is carried around the world, the singing public is interested to learn something of the author, and how he was led to compose the song. As many inquiries have been made as to the circumstances which brought forth the famous melody, "Throw Out the Life-Line," we give our readers a brief sketch of its origin.

REV. E. S. UFFORD,
The author of "Throw Out the Life-Line"

The author, Rev. E. S. Ufford, is a Baptist clergyman, now residing in a suburb of Holyoke, Mass. He is a native of Newark, N. J., where he was born in 1851. For many years his father was a chorister in the city churches there, and from him his son inherited musical tastes. The young lad, while living in Stratford, Conn., grew wayward, and, at the age of nineteen, gave himself up to dissipation. At twenty-one, however, after he had attended a dance one night, where he had assisted at the piano, he went home to the old house where his grandmother kept the lamp burning for his return, and threw himself in bed. But it was not to sleep. Next day a horror of darkness seemed to overspread his soul. Two weeks of mental agony passed. One day, while walking, like Bunyan's pilgrim, burdened by a sense of mysterious despair, it flashed upon his mind that he had been seized by conviction. He could almost hear the words pressed upon his soul, "Why stand ye in jeopardy every hour?" At last Rev. Joseph Vinton, the very evangelist he needed, led him through the wicket-gate, where, at the foot of the Cross, he lost his burden and went on his way rejoicing. A new world was now open to the young convert. He was filled with the desire to work for Christ. He held meetings in an unused club-house down by the wharf at the Housatonic River. With the aid of a few singers and some exhorters, the first meeting proved a success.

He visited Dr. Talmage in his Brooklyn home and laid bare the wish of his soul—to become a herald of the Gospel. The kind welcome and cheering encouragement given at this time, and the words of the eminent divine, "I think you will make a success," still linger in the thoughts of this humble worker.

Mr. Ufford went to Lewiston, Me., where he took a course in theological study. He was called to the East Auburn Baptist church and ordained there in 1879, in that his first pastorate. He removed to Massachusetts in 1882, settling at Canton, then in Dedham, and afterwards in Hingham.

It was while settled at the rural hamlet of West Dedham, thirteen miles out of Boston, that the celebrated hymn, "Throw Out the Life-Line," was composed. Mr. Ufford had been preaching to his usual morning congregation of one hundred. He yearned to go out and reach the non-church-going members of the community, and during the afternoon was led to do so. Taking his small organ, he located himself at the public square and began to sing several Gospel songs. The people soon gathered, listened reverently as he prayed for the blessing of God upon them, and urged them all to accept the refuge offered them in the only Saviour of men. It was here that the idea of saving men as if they were drowning, sinking in the waves of sin and temptation, came to the mind of the open-air speaker. Some days afterward, Mr. Ufford was aiding a Boston pastor in revival work, in which the phrase "Throw the line" occurred. Later, while he was at Nantasket Beach, the whole idea burst upon his soul, as if by a revelation. He saw the life-saving station, the distant wreck of a vessel, and thrilling rescue described by an eye-witness, the crew being brought safely to shore by the life-line and breeches buoy. Then he realized that men in a spiritual sense were tossed by the treacherous waves of dissipation, and needed a line thrown to them by the consecrated hands of willing workers.

Returning home, the pastor began to write the hymn, seemingly as if some other help than his own was directing him:

Throw out the life-line across the dark wave,
There is a brother whom some one should save;
Somebody's brother, Oh, who then will dare,
To rescue this lost one, his peril to share.

The other verses followed, slightly changed now, and when completed, the writer sat down to his instrument and began to compose a melody to suit them. It is a singular fact that without the slightest use of music-paper or mental effort, the present air as it is sung to-day came to him, which, after singing over a few times, was then recorded for future use. It has been borne on the wings of song and has entered every English-speaking city on the face of the globe, and found its way into several languages.

The spiritual results of this famous song will not be known until all the sheaves are gathered home. Mr. Ufford is now in the prime of life and is active in Gospel work, using an oil painting in his addresses to men, depicting an ocean scene, where a ship is hove to, and a lifeboat on the way to rescue two men clinging to a spar.

SAVED BY GOOD FOOD

A Doctor's Words About Grape-Nuts

"A short time ago I was called to a patient who had been given up by his physician; his stomach would not bear food and consequently he got no nourishment and was slowly dying from exhaustion. He was reduced to skin and bones. I immediately put him on Grape Nuts Food and Postum Cereal Food Coffee. He could keep both articles on his stomach and neither caused him any pain. He has been using both the food and the cereal coffee and has gained so rapidly that I feel he will be out of bed in about a week." Dr. C. Leutwein.

The reason a delicate stomach can take Grape-Nuts Food is that it is predigested by natural means during its preparation, and even a small babe can handle it, as it causes no heavy work by the stomach and digestive apparatus; on the contrary, being predigested, it is quickly assimilated into blood and tissue.

The food, as well as the Postum Food Coffee, contains elements selected from the grains of the field that are of first importance to the human body in nourishing and rebuilding it.

All grocers keep Grape-Nuts and Postum.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL MARVEL OF THE AGE.

You can play it. Not the slightest knowledge of music required. Hum into the mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest. It is a money-making and music-supplying feature for churches and all other entertainments.

CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND, PATERSON, N. J.

The above photograph represents the Church Choir Zobo Band of Paterson, N. J., which was organized by the church choir and organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for church purposes. It was a great success. Hundreds of church choirs have Zobo bands and find them of great value. Zobo Concerts always draw large audiences.

READ WHAT PASTORS AND ORGANISTS SAY ABOUT ZOBO:

Rev. E. H. Berkey, of Red Lion, Pa., says: "My Sunday School superintendent, Mr. J. A. Miller, has called my attention to your Zobo band instruments, as he has some, and thinks they are just suited for our work."

Miss Hattie E. Kountz, of Springfield, S. D., organist, choir leader, says: "Zobo instruments received, and are all right, and we want more of them."

Rev. James C. Mitchell, of North Easton, N. J., says: "I have just received the Zobo cornet, and I am delighted with it; will organize a band."

Wm. F. Miller, organist and director of church choir of Park Ave. Baptist Church of Paterson, N. J., says: "I find the Zobo brass instruments to be first-class, and just what we needed. We have a 14-piece Zobo band and intend to enlarge it. We have had one Zobo concert and would say it was a big success."

Mac Blance Winfield, instructor of music at Gallaway Female College, of Searcy, Ark., says: "I am much pleased with the Zobo band instruments. I could not and would not do without them, either in my orchestra or in my clubs, as they give much beauty and volume to the orchestral parts." (This orchestra plays only high-class music.)

Also refer you to Rev. A. G. Stewart, of Raymond, S. D.; Rev. C. McKibbin, of East Grand Forks, Minn.; Rev. W. H. Sampson, of St. John, West New Brunswick, Canada; Rev. A. S. Willoughby, of Moorland, Ia.

Had we space we could quote thousands of such letters from pastors and prominent citizens who have Zobo instruments. With a full Zobo band A GRAND PIPE ORGAN EFFECT can be obtained. To Churches that have no pipe organ Zobo supplies the want at a small cost. Churches without a paid choir should organize a Zobo Church Choir band. It is a money-making and music-supplying feature. To you personally a Zobo cornet affords unlimited pleasure in your home, as you can play it with forcible effect without the aid of other Zobo instruments which usually constitute a complete Zobo band. The Zobo cornet is also an excellent accompaniment to a piano, organ, or any string instrument. We especially call the attention of vocalists to Zobo instruments, as they open up new possibilities for the improvement and high cultivation of the voice.

We were awarded first prize, Gold Medal, at the Greater American Exhibition, Omaha, Neb.

$1. SPECIAL OFFER. To introduce the new Musical Wonder, and to give you a chance to test our instruments and prove all our claims, we will send the Zobo Cornet, solid brass, highly polished and lacquered, 11 inches long, 5½ inch bell, with full instructions how to play, and our illustrated catalogue by mail, prepaid, for $1.00. This is an exceptional offer, and you should not miss it. We warrant each instrument just as represented, or money refunded. Send money by registered letter, post-office money order, a bank draft payable to our order, or have your store-keeper order for you.

ACROSS THE SILENCE

ON the other side of the stillness,
Where our hearts and hopes abide
With those we have tenderly loved,
Our souls shall be satisfied.
In the fairness of the morning,
'Neath the glow of the rose-lit skies,
We shall give, across the silence,
To our darlings a sweet surprise.

When the angels have closed our eyelids
With a lingering, fond caress,
And we hear a glad "Good-morning"
From lips we have yearned to press,
We shall wonder why the silence
Had seemed to us so long,
And Heaven shall be the sweeter
For life's discordant song.

With Time and its clinging shadows,
Our doubts and all our fears
Shall fade in the morning sunlight
Across the silence of years.
Beyond the voiceless stillness
Dividing that land from this,
Love breathes in sweeter fullness
An eternity of bliss.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

PRISCILLA COMPOUND

is by all odds the best, safest and most reliable preparation yet compounded for washing art embroideries, laces, linens, silks and all other fine and delicate fabrics which require careful handling.

Priscilla Compound cleanses them thoroughly, removes discolorations and improves their appearance without the slightest danger of injury to the most dainty fabric.

It improves faded colors, gives a bright lustre to the silks and a fine grass bleach to linens.

It is highly recommended by leading authorities.

A Light Along the Road

Among the many appreciative letters that reach us daily there are often some that strike a peculiarly felicitous note, and a line from these may help others. Mrs. E. R., Wissinoming, Philadelphia, writes: "I have been a subscriber and reader of the good and precious CHRISTIAN HERALD for some time. I think it is invaluable. It will supply the Gospel Truths and the Glimpse of Heaven as I journey down the bright side of the hill, nearing the river. Your sermons are very precious to me, more than the worth of the paper, and the articles contributed by different writers are all invaluable. I think your last sermon was grand."

Feeding East Africa's Sufferers.

Charles F. Johnston, one of the American missionaries in the East African famine district, writes from Kangundo, stating the progress of the relief work now being conducted there. In the famine camp near Machakos 1100 persons are being fed. In the hill paths the emaciated bodies of natives who have died of starvation are frequently found. "As we passed the huts along the way gaunt, emaciated figures crouched beside them, sometimes extending a bony hand in mute appeal for a morsel to eat. I do not think over one-fifth of the fields are being made ready to plant. Even the valley shambas, which yield a fair harvest even when there is no rain, are rapidly filling up with weeds. We were told that during Bangert's absence, less than four weeks, sixteen people had died of starvation."

START right. In painting, the first or priming coat is important. It is the foundation. It is a mistake to think anything is good enough for it. If a mixture of Zinc, Barytes, etc., is used the paint will surely crack and peel.

The only safe paint for priming is Pure White Lead. It combines with the oil, forming a tough, elastic coat that penetrates and will adhere to the surface. The brands in the margin are genuine.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

The Glory of Obedience

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for March 25. Matt. 21: 28

CRITICS who have reproached Christianity with being concerned with the creed rather than with the life, find no basis in Christ's teaching for such reproach. Though he insisted on the necessity of faith and promised that he who believed should be saved, he was always careful to enjoin a change of conduct and to test the sincerity of a man's faith by his actions. The man who heard but did not do, was, he said, like a foolish man who built his house on the sand. The severest of his condemnation was reserved for the scribes and Pharisees, and this not because of heterodoxy or negligence in religious observance, but because their lives were not in accord with their professions. They made long prayers, but they devoured widows' houses. Obedience of the lips that was not followed by obedience of action, was in his eyes utterly worthless. In the parable of The Two Sons this principle is conspicuous. Christ had no sympathy with the son who refused to obey his father's command, but when the son changed his mind and went to work, Christ could forgive the disobedient answer. All through his ministry the same characteristic is seen. Salvation comes to the house of Zaccheus when the publican vows to make restoration, the prodigal son was met with a kiss when he went back to his father's house. The one way of salvation is to repent and quit sin. Then there is restoration and amendment.

The parable has consolation and encouragement for the erring man who changes his ways, but it must not be taken as giving any approval to the early wickedness. A son who answered his father with an "I go, sir," and went, would be a better son than either of the two mentioned. The first son was approved in spite of, and not because of, his rebellious answer. It would be a great mistake to suppose that there is any encouragement given to one who refuses to obey God, while intending at some later period to obey. When the son went to the vineyard he might have found that the father had taken him at his word and had employed others, or circumstances might arise which prevented his going when he wished to do so. There is always a risk in postponing obedience. So long as the son persisted in his refusal, he was in rebellion and therefore under condemnation. It was well for him that he was able to go when he wished. Perhaps, if he had fallen in with some wicked associates he might have been held back, or he might have begun some agreeable pursuit and have become so absorbed in it that he would have no inclination to turn. The one important fact about him was that he carried out his decision to work, and that he was permitted to work, after having refused. The man whom the parable is designed to help is the one who is sorry that he refused the Gospel call when he first heard it, and now wishes to accept it. He is told that his refusal will not count against him if he is now prepared to change his course.

It is the course of the second son that is fatal. None are so hard to win as those who have made profession of Christ, but have failed to live up to the profession. The experience of all evangelists and ministers confirms that rule. Their appeals may reach the open sinner, but they rarely touch one who has promised to yield himself to Christ, but has not kept his promise. There is no church connection, no rite or ceremony that can take the place of obedience. The man who says, "I go, sir," but goes not, adds hypocrisy to his rebellion. He is trying to deceive God, the most hopeless of all forms of deception. Yet it is the most common of all. In all our churches there are people whose hopes of salvation are based on experience that occurred some time in the past, when after a period of anxiety and distress, they entered into peace. But how about their subsequent life? Was the profession of faith made at that past time, like the profession of obedience made by the second son in the parable, a profession that has had no fruit in Christian living? If so, it is of no value, and the sooner the fact is realized the better. There is all encouragement yet. They, too, may go and work in the vineyard, as they promised to do, late as it may be, but work they must, otherwise the promise is an additional sin. The life must be in accord with the profession; that is indispensable. Nothing can be offered in its place. Long prayers, church membership, regular church attendance count for nothing unless there is obedience and a course of life in unison with the spirit of Christ. The question is not as to avowals and professions, but "Whether of them did the will of his Father."

HOW, WHEN, WHERE, WHY?

YOU ask me how I gave my heart to Christ?
I do not know.
There came a yearning for him in my soul
So long ago.
I found earth's flowers would fade and die,
I wept for something that could satisfy;
And then—and then somehow I seemed to dare
To lift my broken heart to him in prayer.
I do not know—
I cannot tell you how;
I only know
He is my Saviour now.

You ask me when I gave my heart to Christ?
I cannot tell.
The day, or just the hour, I do not now
Remember well.
It must have been when I was all alone
The light of his forgiving Spirit shone
Into my heart, so clouded o'er with sin;
I think—I think 'twas then I let him in.
I do not know—
I cannot tell you when;
I only know
He is so dear since then.

You ask me where I gave my heart to Christ?
I cannot say.
That sacred place has faded from my sight,
As yesterday.
Perhaps he thought it better I should not Remember where. How I should love that spot!
I think I could not tear myself away,
For I should want, forever, there to stay.
I do not know—
I cannot tell you where;
I only know
He came and blessed me there.

You ask me why I gave my heart to Christ?
I can reply.
It is a wondrous story: listen while
I tell you why
My heart was drawn, at length to seek his face:
I was alone, I had no resting place;
I heard of how he loved me, with a love
Of depth so great—of height so far above
All human ken,
I longed such love to share;
And sought it then,
Upon my knees in prayer.

You ask me why I thought this loving Christ
Would heed my prayer?
I knew he died upon the cross for me—
I nailed him there!
I heard his dying cry, "Father, forgive!"
I saw him drink death's cup that I might live;
My head was bowed upon my breast in shame,
He called me—and in penitence I came.
He heard my prayer!
I cannot tell you how,
Nor when, nor where;
Why I have told you now.

—F. G. Brown.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AG'TS., NEW YORK.

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have cured obstinate cases of locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, and St. Vitus' dance, is the best evidence that they will cure all lesser nervous disorders, because the principle in the treatment of all nervous diseases is the same. Nervousness is a question of nutrition. Food for the nerves is what is needed and the best nerve food in the world is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Mrs. Annie H. Magee, of Port Austin, Mich., says: My daughter, Jean, was always a delicate child, had stomach trouble, nervous debility and general weakness. She had to be taken out of school and kept from all study for nearly five years. About three years ago she began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I am happy to say they have helped her to become a healthy, happy girl who no longer needs medicine of any kind. It scarcely seems possible she can be the same one who a few years ago wes a delicate, almost a hopeless, sufferer."

DRY BRONCHITIS.

From Dr. Hunter's Lectures on the Progress of Medical Science in Lung Diseases.

There is another form, called dry bronchitis, in which the matter expectorated is neither profuse nor watery nor purulent. It is a glutinous kind of stuff, of a bluish white or pearly gray color. The chronic inflammation which causes it thickens the mucous membrane, thereby narrowing the tubes through which we breathe, and shortening and oppressing the breath. Often tubes of considerable size become completely clogged by this tough phlegm, causing great difficulty in breathing.

Of all the forms of bronchitis this is the most common. "In France," says Laennec, "fully one-half of the people are found, on careful examination, to have thickening of some portion of the mucous lining of the lungs, caused by dry bronchitis." It is the most insidious of lung complaints. Those suffering from it have at first only a slight cough; it may be only a trifling coughing spell in the morning; they have a chilly sensation in the forenoon, and toward evening are feverish.

There is always a feeling of more or less tightness and oppression in the chest, which is relieved from time to time by coughing up a quantity of tough, jelly-like matter before described. Sometimes the cough comes on in paroxysms, attended by great oppression and distress, like asthma. On inquiry of a person so affected if he has any lung trouble, he will almost certainly answer, No, and yet during your conversation will perhaps hack and raise this jelly-like mucous half a dozen times.

Here we have a lung disease which directly tends to consumption, and has most of the symptoms of that disease, and yet is not consumption at all. When it ends fatally, as it often does, an examination of the lungs reveals neither tubercles, ulceration, nor the bacili of tuberculosis.

In such cases death generally results from suffocation caused by a sudden attack of congestion, which, supervening on the chronic disease, fills the lungs with viscid mucus that the patient, in his weakened condition, is unable to raise.

Bronchistis is not generally treated with success, because the proper remedies are not applied to the diseased tubes within the lungs. I had the good fortune some years ago to discover and successfully apply a local treatment for this and other lung complaints. I make the air which the patient breathes the carrier of the remedies which are necessary for his cure. Instead of sending them on a roundabout way through the stomach and general system, I introduce them directly into the air tubes and cells of the lungs, where the disease and all the danger lies, and I know by ample experience that this treatment is the only hope there is for the cure of any form of bronchial or lung diseases.

A few cases are as good as a thousand that I might refer to; write to any of them. A personal letter from them may be the means of saving your life.

TESTIMONIALS.

Mr. A. L. Peer, 179 Washington street, Newark N. J., says: "I had 27 hemorrhages and lost 50 pounds in weight; I was cured by Dr. Hunter's treatment."

Mrs. Edward Raynor, 174 Bank street, Newark N. J., says: "I had the worst symptoms of consumption, fever, night sweats, hemorrhages, great shortness of breath and loss of flesh, and I owe my recovery to Dr. Hunter's treatment."

In order to obtain Dr. Hunter's book, "The Lungs and Their Diseases," free, address Dr Robert Hunter Association, 117 W 45th Street New York.

Bowery Mission Singers

The Male Concert Quartette Whose Voices Greatly Aid the Gospel Work

THE Bowery Mission Male Quartette is composed of the superintendent, Mr. Hallimond; the organist, Mr. Benke; Mr. Frank Fitzgerald, first tenor, and Mr. Thomas J. Bryant, second bass. The two latter are ex-opera singers of no mean repute, and both are converts of the mission. Mr. Fitzgerald, when quite a young man, was a member of the old Bromfield Street M. E. Church, Boston; and at that time studied music under George L. Osgood, one of the ablest masters in the country. While studying he sang in some of the leading churches in Boston, and was a member of the Boylston Musical Club. After his studies were completed, he went upon the operatic stage and was connected with some of the leading companies. Then came a period of dissipation. His use of stimulants had grown upon him to such an extent, and his downward progress had been so rapid, that he found himself singing in saloons and concert halls in the Bowery. One evening he heard the singing in the mission as he passed by, and went in and heard the wonderful testimonies of redeemed men—redeemed from just such a life as he was leading. Ultimately, after many ineffectual struggles, he gave himself up wholly to Christ, and for twelve months past his beautiful voice has been heard in many of the churches of the Eastern States with great delight and acceptance. In the Gospel tent in New York City last summer, he was one of the most welcome and successful of the soloists. His services are entirely confined to evangelistic work.

Mr. Bryant, the basso of the group, paid his first visit to the mission last August. He professed a desire to lead a Christian life and the next day entered the home of which Mr. Hallimond then had charge where he has remained ever since, living in an upright and consistent manner. He has a remarkably rich and powerful bass voice. Away back in '78 he began his career on the operatic stage. He has traveled all over the United States, Canada and Mexico, singing with such celebrities as Mme. Patti and Emma Abbott. The story of Mr. Benke's career and conversion is already familiar to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers.

A unique event took place at the Bowery Mission on March 1. It was an organ recital, and the audience was a very different one from that which usually fill the mission benches, being composed of ministers from uptown churches, settlement workers, missionaries, business men and philanthropic citizens from two States. A number of ladies were present. This really brilliant audience had assembled to hear a musical entertainment given by saved men, under the skilful musical conductorship of Victor Benke. Among the compositions sung by the Bowery Mission Quartette were: "There is Work that We Can Do," "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," "Pilgrims of the Night," and several others. One of Mr. Benke's compositions, "He Leadeth his Flocks," was finely sung by Mrs. Hallimond. At the close of a most enjoyable musical hour, Rev. H. Allen Tupper made a short address, during which he declared that the church which did not bring the Gospel home to the masses did not fulfil its mission. Dr. Tupper has recently resigned his pastorate at Montclair N. J., to devote himself permanently to evangelical work.

All contributions sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the spiritual and rescue work of the Bowery Mission will be acknowledged in these columns:

"No gains without pains." Yet by purifying, vitalizing and enriching your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla you can acquire good health and escape much suffering. It never disappoints.

AN OHIOAN'S REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENT.

Invents a Device That Brings Happiness and Health to Every User and Relieves Without Drugs the Most Obstinate Diseases by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons Out of the Blood.

"JUST WHAT ALL READERS NEED."

A genius of Cincinnati has placed on the market a new Bath Cabinet, whereby any one resting on a chair within enjoys the famous Turkish, hot vapor or medicated baths at home for 3 cents each, heretofore enjoyed only by the rich at public bathrooms, health resorts, hot springs and sanitariums. These baths are celebrated for their marvelous cleansing, curative, purifying and invigorating effects upon the human system, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing out of the system all impure salts, acids and poisonous matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs and skin, causing disease, fevers, debility and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feelings and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long-sought-for natural method of curing and preventing disease without medicine has certainly been found.

More than 116,387 of the Cabinets have been sold since August, and letters have been received from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving entire satisfaction, and a most marvelous Health Producer and Preserver.

Dr. M. R. Beech, Chicago; E. M. D. Moore, of Brooklyn, and some of the best doctors have given up their practise to sell these Cabinets, because they say it benefits humanity more than drugs, and is all that is necessary to get well and keep well.

Congressman John J. Lentz, Rt. Rev. Bishop J. L. Spaulding, Rev. C. M. Keith, editor Holiness Advocate; Prof. Kline, Ottawa University; Edw. Rischert, M.D., University of Pennsylvania; Senator McCarrell, Mrs. Kendricks, Principal Vassar College; Mrs. Senator Douglas, Rev. John A. Ferry, Brooklyn, and a host of eminent people use and recommend it.

Persons who were full of drugs and nostrums, and had been given up to die, were restored to perfect, robust health, to the astonishment of their friends and physicians.

J. A. Gehring, 342 Naghten street, Columbus, O., afflicted for years with Rheumatism in its worst form, also Pleurisy, Headaches, Dizziness, Stomach Troubles, was cured with three treatments, and says: "My wife finds it a grand remedy for her ills; also, for our children. A neighbor cured Scrofula and Bad Blood, after drugs failed." W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., found it better than $50 worth of drugs. A lady in Rochester, Mrs. F. B. Williams, was cured of woman's ailments after suffering for years, and writes: "It's a God-sent blessing to me worth $1,000. No woman should be without it." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., unable to walk, was cured of Rheumatism, Piles and Kidney Troubles. A prominent citizen of Mt. Healthy, O., Mr. Owen C. Smith, afflicted since childhood, was cured of Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, and writes: "Have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted." Rev. H. C. Roernaes, Everett, Kan., says: "It's a blessing; made me full of life and vigor. Should be in use in every family." Rev. Baker Smith, D.D., of Fairmont, says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pains, and, as cleanliness is next to Godliness, it merits high recommendation."

After examination, we can say this 1902 style Square Quaker Bath is a genuine Cabinet, with a door, handsomely and durably made of best materials, rubber lined, has a steel frame, and should certainly last a lifetime. It folds flat in 1 inch space when not in use; can be easily carried; weighs but 10 lbs.

IT IS IMPORTANT

to know that the makers guarantee results, and assert positively, as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure Nervousness, Weakness, that Tired Feeling and the worst forms of Rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Headache, Piles, Dropsy, Eczema, Malaria, all Blood and Skin Diseases, Stomach, Liver, Kidney, Bladder, Nervous Troubles and all ailments peculiar to women. It cures the worst Cold in one night and breaks up all symptoms of La Grippe, Pneumonia, Fevers, Bronchitis, and is really a household necessity—a God-send to every family.

To please the ladies a face and head steaming attachment is furnished, if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion, removes Pimples, Blackheads, Eruptions, and is a sure cure for Skin Diseases, Catarrh and Asthma.

ALL READERS

should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Cabinet complete, with Heater, formulas and directions, only $5. Head Steamer, $1 extra; and it is, indeed, difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much genuine health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 1528 World Building, Cincinnati, O., for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money after 30 days' use if not just as represented. The Cabinet is just as represented, and does all they claim, and will be sent promptly on receipt of remittance by express or P. O. money order, draft or check.

Don't fail to send for booklet anyway.

Wonderful Remedy for Rheumatism

DR. J. G. CONNOR, Ionia, Mich., writes:

DEAR SIRS:--An old friend of mine handed me a couple of small vials of your TARTARLITHINE some time ago and I tried it on myself, having suffered from rheumatism for several years. I assure you I was so pleased with its effects that I procured a full sized bottle, and since taking it I have been entirely free from rheumatism during the past year. I also observed that it is not surpassed by any other preparation as a PROMPT and EFFICIENT diuretic; besides it is pleasant to administer. Please send me a few bottles for use among my patients afflicted with Rheumatism.

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail.

These Questions Will be Answered April 18

1 Why is May so generally tabooed for weddings and June so popular?

2. Has a counsel a right in law or ethics to drag in or abuse an outside person while discussing a case, even though that case may be strengthened by the evidence?

3 What five proverbs are the most frequently quoted in ordinary American conversation?

4. Is there any symbolism in Bible numbers?

5 Who is the author of the following lines, and to whom do the words in italic refer?

I held it truth, with him who sings,
To one clear harp in divers tones,
That men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves to higher things.

6. Why were Cleopatra's needles so called?

7. What was the first English newspaper?

8. What is the most popular anonymous poem in the English language?

9 What letter of the alphabet may be said to have played an important part in the career of the great Napoleon?

10. Has any light been shed on the act of Lamech, the commission of which he regrets in such strong terms in the record of Genesis 4. 23, 24?

Questions of the Week

1. How do you account for the fact that the Christian era is dated some few years after the birth of Christ?

It is due to an error of Dionysius Exiguus, who originated the Christian calendar. He fixed on March 25, year of Rome 754, as the date of Christ's incarnation, and the beginning of the year A. D. 1. He made "the fifteenth year" of Luke 3: 1 refer back to the death of Augustus, 767, assumed John had been baptizing several years when he baptized Christ at the age of thirty (Luke 3: 23). Hence Christ, born about Jan. 6, 755, but assumed Dec. 25, 754, and the conception on March 25, 754 But Luke 3 1 refers to beginning of co regency of Tiberius as 764 or 765, and it is almost certain that Herod the Great died in 750. So it is now generally accepted that Christ was born late in year 749. Hence the era should begin with 749, instead of 754, five years after as it does J. A MCALLISTER.

2 What is the meaning of the resurrection of the body? Is there any foundation in the Bible for the belief in the resurrection of the body in the sense that God will use the same elements which have constituted the mortal body in the formation of the incorruptible body?

Beyond the words of St. Paul in I. Cor. 15: 35-44, we have nothing suggesting the constituency of the resurrection body Christ's mortal body was raised in its entirety at his resurrection, but through what chemical changes, if any, it had passed, no mortal can possibly tell. It was evidently visible or invisible to the mortal eye at Christ's volition. There is no subject about which it is more easy to speculate.

S E. HANSON.

3 Who is the author of the following lines and where may they be found:

"The voice of Jonathan was heard to express
Our president is going to war I guess"

The lines quoted are from Lord Byron's Vision of Judgment, and are supposed to portray the surprise of an American ghost over the clamor incidental to the appearance of George the Third in the world of spirits.

E MATTHEWS.

4 The year 1896 was a leap year. Why is 1900 not a leap year?

The time required for the earth to revolve around the sun is three hundred sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight minutes, and forty-nine and seven tenths seconds, or very nearly three hundred sixty five and one-fourth days. To cover this fraction a day is added every fourth year. Since the fraction thus made up is a little less than one-fourth of a day, the addition of one day every fourth year is a little too much, and to correct this excess addition is made only to every fourth centennial year. With this correction, the error does not amount to much more than a day in four thousand years. Therefore, centennial years exactly divisible by four hundred are leap years; and as 1900 is not exactly divisible by four hundred it is not a leap year.

CHARLES H. LAFFERTY

5. In what sense was David "a man after God's own heart," in view of his recorded sins?

David is spoken of as a man after God's own heart in I. Samuel 13. 14, before he had committed his most serious sins. God knew the difference between the two men Saul and David, and expresses his preference. David's sins are not made light of in God's Word, but David's manifest penitence has called forth the commendation of good people in all ages since and may well have been one of the features in David's character that would please God CHARLES ROBINSON.

6. What is the meaning of the theological term "sanctification?"

1. Sanctification is making sacred, a consecration or devotion of times, places, things or persons (Matt. 23: 17, etc.) 2. To sanctify is to render morally pure, to cleanse from sin, to render holy (John 17: 17, I. Thess. 5: 23). This moral purification is in two distinct stages (a) Its commencement, called regeneration or new birth; (b). Its progressive accomplishment unto ultimate perfection, which progress is sanctification. Regeneration and sanctification mark the progress of the real moral change wrought in the soul by the Holy Ghost. The means of sanctification are (a), internal, the indwelling Holy Spirit, faith and the co-operation of the regenerated will with grace, and (b), external, as the Word of God, sacraments, prayer, Christian fellowship, and the providential discipline of our heavenly Father. EDITH S. DAMON.

7. Is or is not the world growing better?

While a vast amount of evil is visible in infidelity, intemperance, worldliness, war, licentiousness, etc., the world is daily growing better from every standpoint. Each succeeding decade of the nineteenth century has introduced additional evidence of the world's moral progress. Never were there so many home and foreign missionaries or such vast missionary offerings from the denominations. In the United States alone sixty new churches are dedicated every Sunday. Our humane societies are caring for the wounded on all of the battlefields of earth. What paper, even a quarter of a century ago, gathered like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD vast sums of money for the relief of the suffering in various parts of the world? Hospitals, asylums and homes for the aged and poor annually become more numerous. In heathen countries missionary movements are enlarging and gaining mighty victories. The brotherhood of man has been wonderfully widened. ADA L. MCJUNKIN.

8. Which is the more likely to foster crime—poverty or wealth?

Most crimes, under modern laws, are offenses against the property rights of others; and they are more likely to be committed by those who have no property than by those who have. "Necessity knows no law" This is also true of crimes against the person, like robbery and murder, where the motive is theft from the man injured. And the vast multitude of acts which are criminal only because they have been made so by human statute—like practicing medicine without a license and the like—are more likely to be committed by poor persons through their ignorance and necessity than by the intelligent and rich. Wealth has its temptations to which its owner succumbs, for the "love of money is a root of evil"; but usually the wickedness that comes from an abuse of wealth is of such a character that, though sinful, it cannot be made a crime, for human laws can only punish offences against the statute books. H. C. UNDERHILL.

9. How is the candle-power of gas for electric light arrived at?

The candle power of a gas or an electric light is arrived at by comparing it with the light given by a sperm candle which burns 120 grs. per hour, known as the "standard candle." This is done by an instrument known as the photometer. The principal involved is that the ratio of the intensities of two lights equals the square of the ratio of the distances at which they give equal illumination. To illustrate. If a gaslight at eight feet gives as much light as a standard candle at two, the former has a power of sixteen candles. E. G. DARBY.

10. What is supposed to be the origin of the various names of the members of the human family?

Christian names in past ages were frequently decided by some circumstance occurring at birth. Family names originated in a variety of ways. from one's trade, from some peculiar characteristic, or from the name of one's father, from the place in which one was born or lived and in other ways. E. A. SCOTT.

Miscellaneous Questions

Reader, Harrington, Del. There is no Biblical injunction against the marriage of second cousins, but there are physiological objections which merit consideration.

Lottie B. B., Lake City, Minn. 1. Do the Boers believe in the New Testament as well as the Old? 2. Has England any just or lawful claim to the Transvaal? 3. Is it right for professing Christians to attend dances, card parties, sociables?

1. Yes, in both. 2. She claims suzerain rights. 3. Dances and card parties, no, sociables, yes.

Subscriber. 1. To whom does Alaska belong? 2. When and under what circumstances were the American people called Yankees?

1. To the United States. It was ceded by Russia to the United States for $7,200,000 by treaty signed March 30 and ratified June 20, 1867. 2. The word "Yangees" is a corruption of "English," which was the name originally given by the Massachusetts Indians to the colonists. During the war of 1775-81, it was applied by British soldiers solely to New Englanders, afterwards to all natives of the United States and more lately to the people of the North.

Inquirer. Does the Lord require of a woman who through industry and economy has acquired a comfortable living, to give to a friend who began life with better capabilities, only she felt herself too good and was too indolent to work and is now lonely and poor? Does humanity require such a sacrifice?

This is a very difficult question and deals with an experience familiar to many. It would seem to be an injustice that the burden of supporting a lazy and incapable person, who had not had sufficient energy or industry to learn how to make a livelihood, should fall upon a deserving worker; yet there are such cases in every community. Wasted opportunities result in wasted lives. Such people should be made to work, if possible. It is doubtful whether there is any merit in generosity that will enable them to continue in indolent idleness.

Alcibiades, Brooklyn. Where will be found the full sentence—a part of which has been quoted by one of your correspondents—to the effect that "A nation shall be born in a day"? Is it Scriptural in origin?

It has a Scriptural basis, being doubtless founded on the passage in Isa. 66. 8.

Miss Kittie R., Hiram, O. Does a Christian ever get mad? Is it right for him to get mad at the people about him, when they do things he cannot approve of?

Madness, in the sense of blind, violent, insensate rage or passion, is a sin; but there is a righteous anger or indignation, which every Christian may at times experience, without sin (see Eph. 4. 26; II. Cor. 7: 11). It is the revulsion of a pure mind against flagrant and persistent sin, and may find expression in stern private rebuke, or open denunciation; yet it is directed against sin itself rather than against the sinner, for whom it feels nothing but sorrow.

"Ouie," Cohasset, Mass., suggests a new idea, which may challenge the attention of thoughtful women. She writes:

The W. C. T. U. favors giving the ballot to women. Many women feel that if all were allowed to vote, many would not and the result would be disastrous to the temperance cause, because in communities having a foreign population, even in small towns, that element would go to the polls solely to advance the liquor interest. In seventeen large cities the foreign element preponderates. According to the census of 1890, 165 cities had each a population of over 20,000. Would not a Women's Christian Temperance organization, that did not favor giving the ballot to women, be a stronger influence and accomplish more for the temperance cause?

G.W.D. 1. Is the social custom of giving banquets, dinners or teas, in honor of some person or thing, with the modern menu and service, detrimental to health and longevity? 2. What is the history of such functions, ancient and modern?

1. A too frequent indulgence in such festivities is to be avoided, for obvious reasons. Overloaded stomachs, late hours, loss of sleep and the resultant impairment of the digestive organs and the nerves, often lay the foundation of fatal diseases, and carry off many victims. This refers, however, only to a certain class of social functions; there are unquestionably occasions of social reunion where common sense dictates the menu and such gatherings, occurring only at rare intervals, are thoroughly enjoyable and unaccompanied by unpleasant results. 2. Feasts are apparently as old as the history of the race. In sacred history, the first record is found in Gen. 19: 3. Anniversaries of great events, victories, birthdays, the accession of kings and potentates to power, harvests, weddings, and even funerals were so celebrated. Heathen nations made feasting a part of their sacrificial observances. The history of Egypt, Rome, Greece, and other ancient countries is replete with the record of feasts and banquets, public and private, and our modern method of feasting is based on somewhat similar grounds. The calendars of almost all the churches, old and new, contain hundreds of so-called "feast days."

Reader. Dewart, Pa. Please give the area of Greater New York, its outlines, etc.

Greater New York consists of New York city, Long Island city, the county of Kings (which includes Brooklyn), Richmond county (Staten Island), the towns of Westchester, Flushing, Newtown, Jamaica, and parts of Eastchester and Pelham. This includes an area of 35,975 square miles. The population is estimated at 3,500,000.

Frank L. W., Gloucester, Mass., writes:

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for March 7, I note in THE MAIL-BAG you are asked by a correspondent a question as to any large number such as 3,000 having been baptized in one day in recent times. I quote from The Story of the Baptists, by H. B. Cook, page 74, where the following history is recorded: "In July, 1878, J. B. Clough, D.D., Baptist missionary in India, with five assistants, two baptizing at a time, immersed 2,222 believing Telugus converts from heathenism in six hours."

The story of this great harvest, probably the largest in many centuries, is also told in a little booklet, entitled The Lone Star or Triumphs of the Gospel, by Rev. S. S. Day, the founder of the Telugu Mission.

M. E. S., Cranberry, O. Did God foreknow from all eternity whether a certain man would be lost or saved?

If you concede God's omniscience you must believe that he did know. But why do you ask? It does not concern us. Every man is perfectly free to accept or reject the offer of salvation. When you have done and said all, it comes to the fact that God knew that the man in question would accept or reject the offer. No one can escape responsibility in that way, because his conscience tells him that he is free and accountable. God does not compel a man to do this or that. If he deprived him of power, he would by the same act free him from responsibility. Still further, knowing that man needs power to lead a godly life, God offers him more power.

Student, Philadelphia, Pa. Are we to understand from John 19. 24 that the soldiers designed to fulfil a prediction of the Old Testament when they cast lots for Christ's garment?

No; they had no such design, and had probably never heard of the prophecy. They simply perceived that if they tore the garment into four pieces they would spoil it, and it would be of no value to any one. It was the most natural course for such men to cast lots for it. The evangelist, in writing that it was done "that the Scripture might be fulfilled," meant that in God's providence the fulfilment took place. The soldiers were unconsciously doing the thing that it was predicted they would do. John was anxious to show that Christ was the predicted Messiah, and he mentions this incident to show that the details of the prophetic writings were fulfilled in him.

Young Christian, Bangor, Me. How can I discover whether I am called to the ministry? I should like to be a minister, but am conscious that a mere desire is not enough.

Go and work for Christ wherever you have opportunity. Teach in Sunday School, give addresses, speak in mission chapels, try to bring some of your friends to Christ. Ask God for light and guidance. You will soon learn whether you have a call to the ministry. If God blesses your labors and you are used in winning souls, he will open your way.

H. M. S., New York, N. Y. Do evolutionists believe that the process of evolution will still continue and a higher being than man be produced?

Some evolutionists believe that the summit has been reached and no higher order of beings will be developed on the earth. We cannot answer for all evolutionists. Professor Drummond's reason for believing that the process will not continue was that the causes for development have been superseded. When man began to use tools, he lost the impetus to development. When he wanted to see farther he did not train his eye, but made a telescope. When he wanted more power he did not cultivate his physical strength, but made a steam engine. Thus the development, that came by use and effort, ceased, and therefore no further progress in physical power is to be expected.

C. P. D., Buda, Ill. Certainly. the immediate effect of the Peace Conference does not seem to have been to dissuade the nations from war.

.. THE BEATITUDES ..

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for April 1. Matthew 4: 25—5: 12.

Golden Text, Matthew 5: 8: Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

THE beatitudes are a chime of Old Testament bells which Christ brought together and lifted up for all the world to hear, and it is of vital importance to keep in mind that they were not, as their place in Matthew might suggest, the morning chimes of his ministry, but rather a noontide psalm from the middle of his second year. Those who depreciate the atonement and future punishment often speak as if the Sermon on the Mount was both the keynote and summary of Christ's teaching, whereas it is neither. Atonement (John 1: 29, 36), regeneration (John 3: 3), and worship (John 4: 23), had been previously proclaimed and eternal punishment was afterwards declared (Matt. 25: 46), with the same "authority" that marked this sermon, which was not Christ's inaugural, but an exposition of the Old Testament's relation to the New, its most famous passages being the very words or substance of Old Testament utterances. Overlooking this fact, many praise this sermon who have only sneers for the Old Testament.

What is it like? It was not new truth which Jesus was setting forth, but old truth in new promises and deeper meanings.

Are these the first and only beatitudes? There are a thousand Bible verses, mostly in the Psalms, on the blessedness of goodness. See Psalm 1. especially.

The Sermon on the Mount may properly be called the dedication sermon of the Christian Church, as it was also the ordination sermon of the apostles. Which apostles had long been with Christ? Andrew, Peter, Philip, Nathaniel, Matthew, James and John. The other five had been called but recently.

Why did Matthew introduce this sermon so early in his gospel? Because he was writing "the Gospel of the Kingdom" in the order of thought rather than the order of time. First, he gives the genealogy of the King; then his relation to Herod, the earthly king; then his inaugural at the baptism, which was a King's anointing; then his temptation to set up his Messiahship by force. Next Matthew states in his sermon the conditions of naturalization, the elements of Christian citizenship.

The Scene Pictured The place, seven miles southwest of Capernaum, is a low grassy hill, called "The Horns of Hattin," from its two peaks, suggestive of law and Gospel, which Christ in this sermon sets side by side, as branches of love. Sitting on a stone as his pulpit, with his twelve apostles close beside him, Jesus spoke to the multitude who were sitting and standing on the green slope that form a natural amphitheatre. Teachers should especially note how Jesus used a score of things in sight for illustrations. As he uttered a new truth, he seemed to say, as a mother would in teaching a child, "To what shall I liken it?" and thus he was led to speak illustratively of the city set on a hill, the house on the rock, the birds playing about him, the flowers so abundant, even to-day, in those fields.

Beatitudes of Goodness Jesus was about to preach and, instead of taking one text he took eight, which together give a full picture of a Christian citizen, a Christian gentleman; a picture also of true blessedness, a full answer to the new question, "What would Jesus do?" What he would have us be, first of all. Which beatitudes relate chiefly to the inner life? Those that approve humility, repentance, aspiration, purity: "Blessed are the poor in spirit," Blessed are they that mourn," "Blessed are the pure in heart," "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness." These relate to character, a character impossible save as the spirit of Christ dwells in us. The other beatitudes show what conduct flows out of such character. "Blessed are the meek," "Blessed are the merciful," "Blessed are the peacemakers," "Blessed are they which are persecuted," that is, whose who successfully endure it.

As Christ was transfigured on Mount Hermon, the stern law was transfigured on the Mount of Beatitudes, whose green slopes contrast with the bare rocks of Sinai. The Koh inoor diamond is called a "Mountain of Light." In a truer sense the Sermon on the Mount is that, with its many beatitudes flashing back upon our eyes the light of heaven.

The word "blessed" is sometimes translated "happy," but Christ names as blessed the very ones who are not happy, those conscious of their own faults: the mourners, the persecuted, etc.

Blessed are those who are poor—not in property but in pride. The less a man has of that the "better off" he is. The less he has of it the more room he has for Christ.

Blessed are they that mourn, in the development of those sweetest graces, uplook, tenderness, sympathy, brotherhood.

Blessed are the meek. Diplomacy has won more than war, even in the career of warlike Russia. Christian nations possess more than half the earth's surface and have kept it more through the application of Christian principles, imperfect as they have been, than through the sword. The meek inherit the earth, enjoying all its wonders and beauties, whoever possesses it.

Blessed are they that hunger. It has been well said of the slum dwellers that "the lack of goods for the higher wants is not so sad as the lack of wants for the higher goods."

Blessed are the merciful, those who are merciful not in separate acts only, but in their temper of life, pitying even those who wrong them, rather than hating them, because they are wronging themselves most of all by being what they are. That is what Christ meant when he said of his crucifiers, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

Blessed are the pure, the sincere, the simple, the guileless. As the ear is the natural sense for enjoying music, so the pure heart is the sense for seeing God, in his works, in his Word, in his providence.

"Blessed are the peacemakers." The world still says, "Blessed are the war-makers." But the peace beatitude, seemingly drowned in the cannonading of wars, is surely much less contrary to public sentiment than when Christ uttered it.

"Blessed are the persecuted," and they receive the blessing in the fellowship of Christ's suffering; in the development of his patience and courage. The word "traitor" comes from "traditores," referring to those Christians who gave up the Bible rather than die for it in days of persecution. Alas that many to-day will disobey the Bible rather than lose a job or even a dollar! Blessedness is not mere happiness, but the deeper peace and satisfaction that the Puritan and other heroes of history have felt in God's approval in both worlds.

Teaching Hints for Class Instruction Draw on the blackboard, or on a slate or pad, a row or circle of eight hearts. Print the word "blessed" above the hearts, one letter over each heart — B, L, etc. Print in the first heart, "Not proud;" in the second, "Sorry for sin;" in the third, "Gentle;" in the fourth, "Want to be good;" in the fifth, "Think no evil;" in the sixth, "Pure in thought;" in the seventh, "Healing quarrels;" in the eighth, "Patient." Connect with each heart a short story made up when none remembered that would fit; first, of a child willing to be told of his faults; second, of a child who prayed to be forgiven for doing wrong; third, of a child who said "never mind" when a blow had been struck, or unkind words spoken; fourth, of a child who prayed every day for help from Jesus to do good, fifth, of a child who was always trying to do kind things for everybody, and for animals as well; sixth, of a child who wanted to be clean inside; seventh, of a child who would not quarrel, and helped others to make up; eighth, of a child who kept right on being a Christian though made sport of at school. Tell the children that such hearts as these are pleasing to Jesus, for he once told the people so as he sat upon the mountain, while they were gathered at his feet. The hearts if touching each other will form a necklace, the "jewels" of Jesus. Proverbs calls the virtues "an ornament of grace about the neck." Illustrate how all of these good things may be in one heart, drawing one large heart around the smaller ones or by preparing before coming to the class a string or circle of paper hearts, folded so as to look like one. As the hearts are unfolded, one by one, the children read what is in each. They are then folded up again to suggest that one heart is to be blessed or happy in having all these virtues.

For Class of Juniors Let the teacher briefly relate eight incidents from the Bible, illustrating the beatitudes. Let it be done by personating the characters, whose names the children shall be expected to guess. For example:

I am a very young man, hardly more than a boy, but suddenly, because of the death of my father, I am crowned king over more than three millions of people. God speaks to me and tells me to choose what he shall give me. I ask for wisdom, so that I can judge the people righteously. Who am I? Solomon. If we ask him God will give us wisdom to know what we must do in order to be prepared for heaven. And the beginning of wisdom is humility, willingness to be taught. Let us together read, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Now I am a man, very much discouraged. I was very brave yesterday, brave enough to defy a great company of false prophets, and even the king and queen; but to-day I am lying under the bushes, and I think God has no friends. But I go to sleep, and when I wake up I find that an angel has prepared food for me. Later I hear the voice of God telling me that he will meet me on yonder mountain, and he does. Who am I? Elijah. Let us read together "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

Now I see one that I would not dare to say that I am. His enemies, who have given him wounds unto death, are gathered about him. He is dying, and listen, he is praying for those who have wounded him. Who is it? Jesus. Let us read, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

Now I am a man who is soon going to have the duties of a prophet put upon him, but all of my life I have been a farmer; indeed, I was ploughing in the field when I was told by one of the greatest prophets that I should be a teacher and prophet in his stead. I want to do my duty so well that I ask that a double portion of his Spirit may be upon me. Who am I? Elisha. Let us read, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."

Now I am a young man. I know that I shall some day be king in place of the king now reigning, for he has disobeyed and dishonored God. He knows that I am to be king, and he is determined to kill me. I hide from him in caves, and he comes after me with soldiers. One day he comes into the very cave where I am, but he does not see me. He lies down and goes to sleep. I might easily kill him, but instead, I only cut off a piece of his cloak to show him, some other time, that he might see I could as easily have cut off his head, but did not. After I had cut so much as his coat I was sorry to have done even that. Who am I? David. Let us read together, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Now I am a very old man; I know that I am soon going to die. All my life long I have been the servant of the Lord. When I was only three years old my mother brought me to live in God's house. All through my life since I was only twelve years old, God has talked to me and told me what to do. I have given God's laws to the people. Now I am standing up and saying, just before I say good-by, "If I have ever wronged anybody, or taken what did not belong to me, let any man say so." No one speaks against me.

OLD TESTAMENT BELLS

Who am I? Samuel. Let us repeat together, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Now I am a rich old man, rich because I have large herds of cattle, and flocks of sheep. My nephew, who is much younger than I am, has flocks and herds too, and there is not grass for all. Our herdsmen quarrel, but I will not quarrel with any one. I tell my nephew to choose which way he will go, and take his herds, and I will go another way, so we shall both find grass. My nephew chooses the richest place, and I move off where the grass grows less abundantly, but I speak never a word of reproof, and afterward, when my nephew was in great trouble, I go to his relief and bring back the things which have been stolen from him. Afterwards, when he is in greater danger still, I pray for him. Who am I? Abraham. Let us say together, "Blessed are the peacemakers."

Now I am in prison and another man is with me. Our backs are all bleeding, for we have been beaten, though we have been doing nothing wrong. We have been put into prison because we preached to the people about Jesus. The prison is very dark, but our souls are filled with the light of heaven. We sing songs of praise to God in the darkness. Suddenly there is an earthquake, and the prison doors are opened; but we do not go out. The jailer comes in; we talk to him about Jesus, and he and his whole family are baptised. Who am I? Paul. Let us say together, "Blessed are ye when men shall persecute you."

For Classes of Older Scholars Eight members of the class are each in turn asked to report on the meaning and examples of one beatitude which was assigned to him on the preceding Sabbath, or some days in advance. The teacher should be fortified with additional material on each one, to add, if necessary. Let this whole group of beatitudes be treated as Christ's picture of a true gentleman, and compare it with Paul's picture of the same in I. Cor. 13: 4-8, and Peter's in II. Peter 1: 5-7. In eight footprints, indicate by one word each, the eight beatitudes as Christ's picture of the way to be happy, for which the world has vainly searched in the ways of honor and wealth and worldly pleasure. Contrast with the beatitudes the six things the Lord hates, Prov. 6: 16-18. Write out eight false beatitudes which the world has followed in vain search for happiness or blessedness: Blessed are they who are rich and mighty; blessed are they whose lives are free from affliction and tears; blessed are the proud conquerors of the sword, for they shall inherit the earth; blessed are those whose every earthly desire is gratified. Let instances be cited of men and women who have had great wealth, great honors, great conquests, unlimited gayeties, and yet, because their hearts were wrong, were far from happy, such as Alexander, Byron, etc. It should not be denied that power brings a certain pleasure and wealth and even sinful indulgences, but they will not bear the two tests that are based on memory, and should be kept, like shields, in every memory:

Nothing is true pleasure that is not pleasant to remember.

A good time is one that don't go off with the having.

Since we are endowed with memory and must live every experience over and over in this world and the other, it does not pay to take pleasure that will be pleasant only once—in the act—and bitter a thousand times in both worlds when conscience cries, "Remember" (Luke 16: 25). On the other hand, when Job was in trouble what treasures of joy he drew out of his memories of doing good! And one of the joys of heaven is the memory of repentance in the new song, "Unto Him that hath washed us from our sins."

The Dramatic Element

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, I. Cor. 7: 31, ... { They that use this world as not abusing it

MY reason for preaching this discourse is that I have been kindly invited by two of the leading newspapers of this country to inspect and report on two of the popular plays of the day: to go some weeks ago to Chicago, and see the drama Quo Vadis, and criticise it with respect to its moral effect; and to go to New York, and see the drama Ben Hur, and write my opinion of it for public use. Instead of doing that, I propose in a sermon to discuss what we shall do with the dramatic element which God has implanted in many of our natures: not in ten or a hundred or a thousand, but in the vast majority of the human race. Some people speak of the drama as though it were something built up outside of ourselves by the Congreves and the Goldsmiths and the Shakespeares and the Sheridans of literature, and that then we attune our tastes to correspond with human inventions. Not at all. The drama is an echo from the feeling which God has implanted in our immortal souls. It is seen first in the domestic circle among the children three or four years of age playing with their dolls and their cradles and their carts—seen ten years after in the play-houses of wood—ten years after in the parlor charades—after that, in the elaborate impersonations in the Academies of Music.

I do not speak of the drama on the poetic shelf, nor of the drama in the play-house; but I speak of the dramatic element in your soul and mine. We make men responsible for it. They are not responsible. They are responsible for the perversion of it, but not for the original implantation. God did that work, and I suppose he knew what he was about when he made us. We are nearly all moved by the spectacular. When on Thanksgiving Day we decorate our churches with the cotton and the rice and the apples and the wheat and the rye and the oats, our gratitude to God is stirred. When on Easter morning we see written in letters of flowers the inscription, "He is risen," our emotions are stirred. Every parent likes to go to the school exhibition with its recitations and its dialogues and its droll costumes. The torchlight procession of the political campaign is merely the dramatization of principles involved. No intelligent man can look in any secular or religious direction without finding this dramatic element revealing, unrolling, demonstrating itself. What shall we do with it? Shall we suppress it? You can as easily suppress its Creator. You may direct it, you may educate it, you may purify it, you may harness it to multipotent usefulness, and that it is your duty to do.

The plainest man has in his plainest day something histrionic. Now I have to tell you not only that God has implanted this dramatic element in our natures, but I have to tell you in the Scriptures he cultivates it, he appeals to it, he develops it. I do not care where you open the Bible, your eye will fall upon a drama. Here it is in the Book of Judges: the fir-tree, the vine, the olive-tree, the bramble—they all make speeches. Then at the close of the scene there is a coronation, and the bramble is proclaimed king. That is a political drama. Here it is in the Book of Job: Enter Eliphaz, Bildad, Zophar, Elihu, and Job. The opening act of the drama, all darkness: the closing act of the drama, all sunshine. Magnificent drama is the Book of Job!

Here it is in Solomon's Song: The region, an oriental region—vineyards, pomegranates, mountain of myrrh, flock of sheep, garden of spices, a wooing, a bride, a bridegroom, dialogue after dialogue—intense, gorgeous, all suggestive drama is the Book of Solomon's Song. Here it is in the Book of Luke: Costly mansion in the night. All the windows bright with illumination. The floor aquake with the dance. Returned son in costly garments which do not very well fit him, perhaps, for they were not made for him, but he must swiftly leave off his old garb and prepare for this extemporized levee. Pouting son at the back door, too mad to go in, because they are making such a fuss. Tears of sympathy running down the old man's cheek at the story of his son's wandering and suffering, and tears of joy at his return. When you heard Murdock recite the Prodigal Son in one of his readings, you did not know whether to sob or shout. Revivals of religion have started just under the reading of that soul-revolutionizing drama of the Prodigal Son.

Here it is in the Book of Revelation: Crystalline sea; pearly gate; opaline river; amethystine capstone; showering coronets; one vial poured out incarnadining the waters; cavalrymen of heaven galloping on white horses; nations in doxology—hallelujahs to the right of them, hallelujahs to the left of them. As the Bible opens with the drama of the first Paradise, so it closes with the drama of the second Paradise.

Mind you, when I say drama I do not mean myth or fable, for my theology is of the oldest type—five hundred years old, thousands of years old, as old as the Bible. When I speak of the drama at the beginning and the close of the Bible, I do not mean an allegory, but I mean the truth so stated that in grouping and in startling effect it is a God-given, world-resounding, heaven-echoing drama. Now if God implanted this dramatic element in our natures, and if he has cultivated and developed it in the Scriptures, I demand that you recognize it.

Because the drama has again and again been degraded and employed for destructive purposes is nothing against the drama, any more than music ought to be accursed because it has been taken again and again into the saturnalian wassails of four thousand years. Will you refuse to enthrone music on the church organ because the art has been trampled again and again under the feet of the lascivious dance?

It is nothing against painting and sculpture that in Corinth and Herculaneum they were demonstrative of vulgarity and turpitude. Let me say at this point in my sermon that the drama will never be lifted to its rightful sphere by those people who have not sense enough to distinguish between the drama and the play-house. The drama is no more the theatre than a hymn-book is a church. I am not speaking in regard to the theatre at all. The drama is a literary expression of that feeling which God implanted in the human soul. Neither will the drama ever be lifted to its proper sphere by wholesale denunciation of all dramatists. If you have not known men and women connected with the drama who are pure in heart and pure in speech and pure in life, it is because you have not had very wide acquaintance.

Wholesale denunciation of all dramatists will never elevate the drama. Yonder stand a church and a theatre on opposite sides of the street. The church shouts over to the theatre, "You are all scoundrels;" the theatre shouts back, "You are all hypocrites;" and they both falsify. Dropping all indiscriminate jeremiads against dramatists, and realizing that the drama is not necessarily connected with this institution or with that, I want to show you how the dramatic element in our natures may be harnessed to the chariot of civilization and Christianity.

Let the Sabbath School teachers employ more of the dramatic in their work. By graphic Scripture scene, by anecdote, by descriptive gesture, by impersonation, urge your classes to right action. We want in all our schools and colleges and prayer-meetings, and in all our attempts at reform, and in all our churches, to have less of the style didactic and more of the style dramatic.

Let me say to all young ministers of the Gospel, if you have this dramatic element in your nature use it for God and heaven. If you will go home and look over the history of the Church you will find that those men have brought more souls to Christ who have been dramatic. Rowland Hill, dramatic; Thomas Chalmers, dramatic; Thomas Guthrie, dramatic; John Knox, dramatic; Robert McCheyne, dramatic; Christmas Evans, dramatic; George Whitefield, dramatic; Robert Hall, dramatic; Robert South, dramatic; Bourdaloue, dramatic; Fenelon, dramatic; John Mason, dramatic. When you get into the ministry, if you attempt to cultivate that element, and try to wield it for God, you will meet with mighty rebuff and caricature, and ecclesiastical counsel will take your case in charge, and they will try to put you down; but the God who starts you will help you through, and great will be the eternal rewards for the assiduous and the plucky.

What we want, ministers and laymen, is to get our sermons and our exhortations and our prayers out of the old rut. The old hackneyed religious phrases that come snoring down through the centuries will never arrest the masses. What we want to-day, you in your sphere and I in my sphere, is to freshen up. People do not want in their sermons the sham flowers bought at the millinery shop, but the japonicas wet with the morning dew; not the heavy bones of extinct megatherium of past ages, but the living reindeer caught last August at the edge of Schroon Lake. We want to drive out the drowsy, and the prosaic, and the tedious, and the humdrum, and introduce the brightness, and the vivacity, and the holy sarcasm, and the sanctified wit, and the epigrammatic power, and the blood-red earnestness, and the fire of religious zeal, and I do not know of any way of doing it as well as through the dramatic.

If Christianity is mighty enough to manage everything but the amusements of the world, then it is a very defective Christianity. Is it capable of keeping account of the tears of the world and incompetent to make record of its smiles? Is it good to follow the funeral but dumb at the world's play? Can it control all the other elements of our nature but the dramatic element? My idea of Christianity is that it can and will conquer everything. In the good time coming, which the world calls the golden age, and the poet the Elysian age, and the Christian the Millennium, we have positive announcement that the amusements of the world are to be under Christian sway. "Holiness shall be upon the bells of the horses," says one prophet. So, you see, it will control even the sleigh-rides. "The city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof," says another prophet. So you see it is to control the hoop rolling and the kite flying and the ball playing. Now, what we want is to hasten that time. How will it be done? By the church going over to the theatre? It will not go. By the theatre coming to the church? It will not come. What we want is a Reformed Amusement Association in every city and town of the United States. We need a new institution to meet and recognize and develop and defend the dramatic element of our nature.

It needs to be distinct from everything that is or has been. In an age which has projected a telephone and an electric pen and the bicycle and the telegraph, surely we are not afraid of a new institution. It would be derided at the start, as all great movements are derided at the start, but it would revolutionize society for good. Wiser men than we are would baptize it with a name, only for the purposes of this sermon I will call it The Spectacular. I would have its board of trustees made up of the most intelligent and most unimpeachable men and women of each community. One half of them I would have professed and most pronounced Christians, connected with the churches.

I would have this Reformed Amusement Association having in charge this new institution of the Spectacular take possession of some hall or academy. It might take a smaller building at the start, but it would soon need the largest hall, and even that would not hold the people: for he who opens before the dramatic element in human nature an opportunity of gratification without compromise and without danger, does the mightiest thing of this century, and the tides of such an institution would rise as the Atlantic rises at Liverpool Docks.

There are tens of thousands of Christian homes where the sons and daughters are held back from dramatic entertainment for reasons which some of you would say are good reasons and others would say are poor reasons, but still held back. But on the establishment of such an institution they would feel the arrest of their anxieties, and would say on the establishment of this new institution, which I have called the Spectacular, they would say, "Thank God! this is what we have all been waiting for."

Now, as I believe that I make suggestion of an institution which wiser men will develop, I want to give some characteristics of this new institution, this Spectacular, if it is to be a grand social and moral success. In the first place, its entertainments must be compressed within an hour and three-quarters. What kills sermons, prayers and lectures and entertainments of all sorts is prolixity. At a reasonable hour every night every curtain of public entertainment ought to drop, every church service ought to cease, the instruments of orchestras ought to be unstrung. What comes more than this comes too late.

On the platform of this new institution there will be a drama which, before rendering, has been read, expurgated, abbreviated, and passed upon by a board of trustees connected with this Reformed Amusement Association. If there be in a drama a sentence suggesting evil, it will be stricken out. If there be in a Shakespearian play a word with two meanings—a good meaning and a bad meaning—another word will be substituted, an honest word looking only one way. The caterers to public taste will have to learn that Shakespearian nastiness is no better than Congrevean nastiness. You say, "Who will dare to change by expurgation or abbreviation a Shakespearian play?" I dare. The board of trustees of this Reformed Amusement Association will dare. It is no depreciation of a drama, the abbreviation of it. I would like to hear thirty or forty pages of Milton's Paradise Lost read at one time, but I should be very sorry to hear the whole book read at one sitting. Abbreviation is not depreciation.

On the platform of this new institution this Spectacular, under the care of the very best men and women in the community there shall be nothing witnessed that would be unfit for a parlor. Any attitude, any look, any word that would offend you seated at your own fireside, in your family circle, will be prohibited from that platform. On the platform shall come only such men and women as you would welcome to your homes. I do not make the requisition that they be professors of religion. There are professors of religion that I would not want in my parlor, or kitchen, or coal-cellar! It is not what we profess, but what we are. All who come on that platform of the Spectacular will be gentlemen and ladies in the ordinary acceptation of those terms—persons whom you would invite to sit at your table, and whom you would introduce to your children, and with whom you would not be compromised if you were seen passing down Pennsylvania avenue or Broadway with them—such women as Charlotte Cushman of the past, such men as Joseph Jefferson of the present.

The platform of that new institution, of that expurgated drama, occupied only by these purest of men and women, will draw to itself millions of people who have never been to see the drama more than once or twice in their lives, or never saw it at all. That institution will combine the best music, the best architecture, the best genius six nights the week on the side of intelligence and good morals.

I would go to such an institution, such a Spectacular; I should go once a week the rest of my life, and take my family with me, and the majority of the families of the earth would go to such an institution. Until, sirs, you can establish a Spectacular, or a similar institution, with as much purity and with as much entertainment as this one of which I speak—until you can establish some such institution—you may thunder away against evil amusements until the last minute of the last hour of the last day of the world's existence and without any avail.

This dramatic element will break out, nd it will climb over and it will trample nder foot every effort at suppression. f you cannot guide it in the right direc- on, it will plunge in the wrong direction. t will either be angel or satyr.

We want this institution independent of ie Church and independent of the thea- e. The Church tries to compromise this natter, and in many churches there are ramatic exhibitions. Sometimes they all them charades, sometimes they call iem magic-lantern exhibitions—enter- ainments for which you pay fifty cents. he fifty cents to go for the support of ome charitable institution. An extem- orized stage is put up in the church or in he lecture-room, and there you go and ee David and the giant, and Joseph sold nto Egypt, and little Samuel awoke: the hief difference between the exhibition in he church and the exhibition in the thea- re being that the exhibition in the theatre s more skilful. The exhibition in the hurch generally has amateurs; the exhi- ition in the theatre, performers who have iven their whole life to the study of par- icular parts. But because the dramatic xhibition in the church is not as good as he dramatic exhibition in the theatre, it s considered to be more pious!

Because the drama is good it need not e dull. There is more fun in virtue than n sin. The best way to scatter darkness s by the clear light; and the best way o overcome the polluting and besotting nd soul-destroying amusements of the lay is by a model Spectacular with expur- gated drama, under the control of the purest and the best men and women in he world and church. That man who shall have money enough and brain enough and enterprise enough and heart enough to establish, illustrate and demon- strate the institution that I speak of, will bring the Church of God and all the human race under everlasting obligations. The world waits for it.

Meanwhile, until the Spectacular, this new institution, or something like it, shall be established, I counsel you to beware lest you allow the dramatic element in human nature to lead you into contami- nation. To gratify that one taste, you cannot afford to sacrifice your purity, your influence, your usefulness, your soul, as many have done. The amusements of life are merely the interstices, the paren- theses, the interregnums of hard work, in preparation for other hard work.

It was not original with Shakespeare when he said, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely play- ers." He got it from St. Paul, who, fifteen centuries before that, had written, "We are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men." A spectacle in a Colosseum fighting with wild beasts in an amphitheatre, the galleries full, looking down. Here we destroy a lion. Here we grapple with a gladiator. When we fall, devils shout. When we rise, angels sing. A spectacle before gallery above gallery, gallery above gallery. Gallery of our departed kindred looking down to see if we are faithful, and worthy of our Christian ancestry, hoping for our vic- tory, wanting to throw us a garland; glo- rified children and parents, with cheer on cheer urging us on. Gallery of the mar- tyrs looking down—the Polycarps, and the Ridleys, and the M'Kails, and the Theban Legion, and the Scotch Covenan- ters, and they of the Brussels market- place, and of Piedmont—crying down from the galleries, "God gave us the vic- tory, and he will give it you." Gallery of angels looking down—cherubic, se- raphic, archangelic—clapping their wings at every advantage we gain. Gallery of the King from which there waves a scarred hand, and from which there comes a sym- pathetic voice, saying, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Oh, the spectacle in which you and I are the actors!

Scene: The Last Day. Stage: The Rocking Earth. Enter: Dukes, Lords, Kings, Beggars, Clowns. No sword. No tinsel. No crown. For footlights: The kindling flames of a world. For orchestra: The trumpets that wake the dead. For applause: The clapping floods of the sea. For curtain: The heavens rolled together as a scroll. For tragedy: The Doom of the Profligate. For the last scene of the fifth act: The tramp of nations across the stage—some to the right, others to the left. Then the bell of the last thun- der will ring, and the curtain will drop!

India's Perishing Millions

STARVING MULTITUDES WHOSE LIVES WILL BE SAVED BY CORN SENT TO THEM BY CHRISTIAN AMERICA

PROMISES of help in filling a vessel with corn for the starving multitudes of India are daily being received, and the prospects are now bright that by the time the famine reaches its worst crisis the Stars and Stripes will be seen in the harbor of Bombay, floating over the life-giving gift of the Christian people of America. To do this, however, it is necessary that the corn be given quickly. There is no time to be lost, because a freight steamer is long on the voyage, and in order to reach the people in time to save life, it should be dispatched at an early date. Every one who desires to share in this glorious opportunity of feeding the hungry people should act promptly. To some it may be more convenient to arrange with their neighbors to fill a car with corn. Others may prefer to give money and may send a two-dollar bill, with which we can buy five bushels of corn, but in either case speed and promptitude are imperative. It is a privilege not to be neglected. Many a child, in years to come, will be proud to say: "I sent five bushels of corn to India in the great famine to keep a family alive," and he may truthfully add with the patriarch: "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me."

A report just received from India shows that a direct duty is involved on every Christian in responding to the appeal. Christ said that when even a cup of cold water was given in his name to any of his people, because they belonged to him, the giver should not lose his reward (Mark 9: 41). Now we learn that Christian families—people who "belong to Christ"—are starving. At the recent Methodist Episcopal Conference in Calcutta, the missionaries from Gujarat, Rajputana and the other famine-stricken districts were requested to state what was the condition of their people. From their reports it was learned that in their fields alone, not reckoning those in the districts of the Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Disciples, which are almost as bad, there were eleven thousand five hundred Christian persons in urgent need. These are the people who have the first claim upon us. They are our brothers and sisters in Christ and it would be an everlasting disgrace to have one of them, though "the least of these my brethren," perish for lack of food. We may be quite sure that they will get no help from heathen hands. In becoming Christians they had to accept ostracism, but they have thus a double claim on Christians—the claim of Christian brotherhood added to the claim of common humanity. They should learn in this their hour of suffering that their brotherhood in Christ counts for something with those in other lands who, loving the Lord, love his people too. Thus the prophet's words will be fulfilled. "That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand that the hand of the Lord hath done this."

Rev. E. S. Hume of Byculla, Bombay, whose efforts to relieve the starving people now, as in the previous famine, deserve the highest praise, sends us the two photographs reproduced on this page.

STARVING CHILDREN SUCCORED IN MR. HUME'S MISSION AT BYCULLA

They were taken at his mission station and speak more eloquently than words can do of the terrible suffering he is trying to alleviate. The smaller picture is pitiful in the extreme. The teacher's fingers on the arm of the poor little skeleton present a contrast that moves the heart. The other picture shows a group of sufferers who are now being fed at the expense of our readers. We sent one thousand dollars of the fund so generously placed in our hands by people moved by the spirit of our Master, to Mr. Hume and he lost no time in turning it into food with which to feed the starving children. In his letter accompanying the photographs he says: "I call your attention to the fact that it is difficult in the photograph to tell which are girls and which are boys. The same is true of full-grown men and women. The present famine is affecting the higher castes and the well-to-do classes far more than the former famine did. There are places not far from Bombay where whole companies of women, who not long ago were in comfortable circumstances, will gather, stark naked, around a stranger to beg for food and clothing. I saw distress in 1897 during the famine, but nothing to compare with that which is covering the land this year. In the name of Christian workers to whose assistance you have come, I thank you most sincerely. Please thank your readers, whose generosity and Christlike compassion will surely be observed and rewarded by our Lord."

"ONE OF THE LEAST OF THEM"

A pathetic story of the need of the people for help comes from Rev. H. G. Bissell, of Ahmednagar, who since he wrote it has received a thousand dollars by cable from the fund contributed by our readers. He writes: "There is not a village in this whole district without its scores of empty houses witnessing to the wholesale desertion by sufferers from the famine. Husbands and fathers in despair of caring for their wives and children, are abandoning them to fate, and wandering about irresponsibly in search of food. Not a month ago two children—little girls between four and five years of age—were found seated together near a cactus hedge. Each was supplied with a heap of the red thorn-covered cactus fruit. The poor waifs were questioned, but were evidently so reduced by hunger that they seemed not to comprehend where they were, who had left them, or what they wanted.

"What mothers, delicate women, and children are suffering this season in the relief camps, is past finding out. The Government can plan for and relieve them only in a general way, and is doing so extensively, but private charity alone can meet exceptional cases. The struggle against want and hunger and cold and death is a desperate one this year. All who can should help those involved in it."

There are in the United States and Canada 131,550 Sunday Schools, 42,490 Christian Endeavor Societies, and 26,700 chapters of the Epworth League. If every one of those organizations would send only one dollar, there would be a grand total of $200,740 with which corn enough to nearly fill five ships could be bought and the starving people be fed.

All contributions should be addressed to The India Famine Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Editor Sheldon's Appeal for India

....HE MAKES THIS THE MOST PROMINENT TOPIC IN THE FIRST NUMBER OF HIS CHRISTIAN DAILY PAPER

"The Capital knows of no more important matter of news the world over this morning than the pitiable condition of famine-stricken India. We give the latest and fullest available information of the progress of the scourge in the following articles.

"If every reader of this paper will give ten cents to the relief fund for this terrible Indian famine, we may be able to save thousands of lives. Will you do it? Let us all have a share in helping our brother man, for these fifty million starving creatures are a part of that human family which Jesus taught us to love when he taught us to say, 'Our Father.'

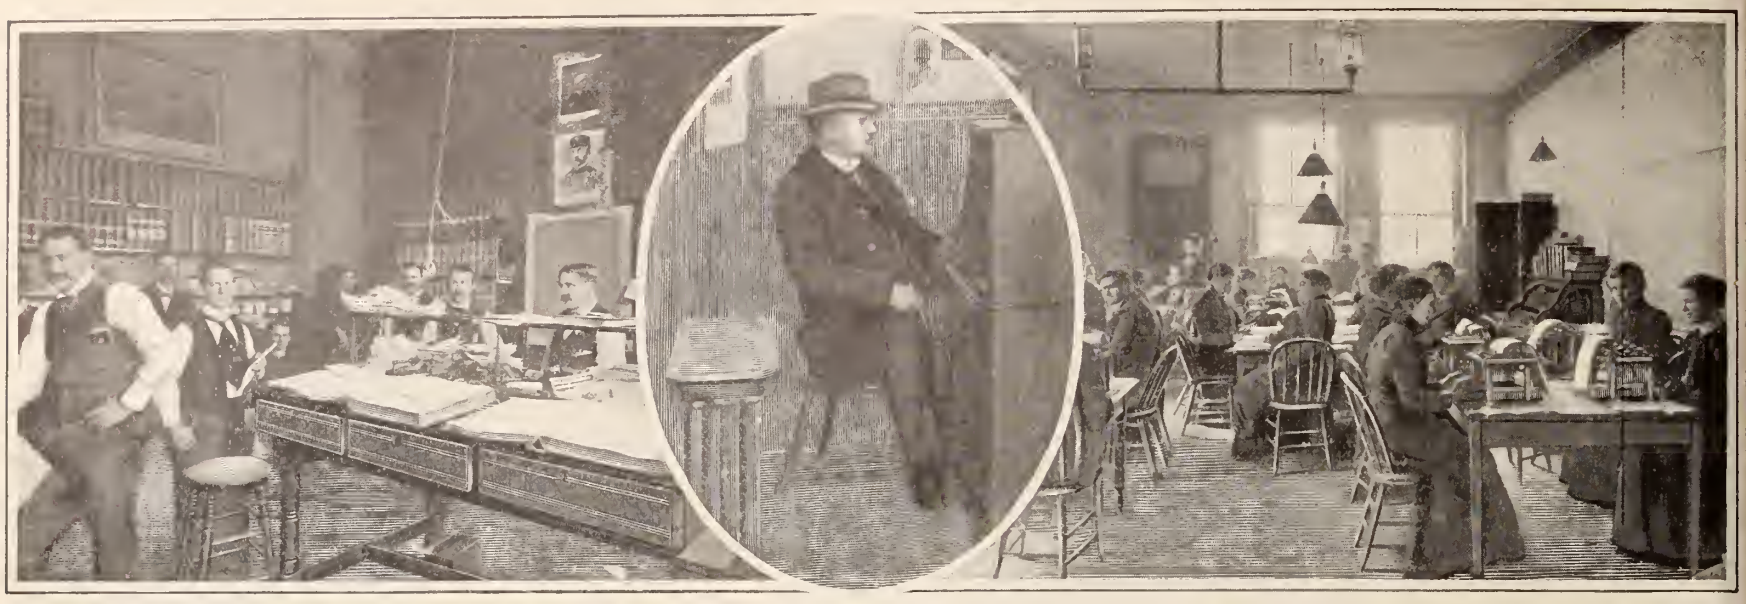
PASTOR SHELDON'S EDITORIAL EXPERIENCES

How the Christian Daily was Welcomed by the World and How it Looked—Practically Applying the Text: "What Would Jesus Do?"



A CORNER OF THE SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT — PASTOR SHELDON VISITS THE BUSINESS OFFICE — PREPARING THE MAILING LISTS

(From Our Special Correspondent)

IT was exactly 9 o'clock, A.M., on Monday, March 12, when the Rev. C. M. Sheldon took the editorial chair of the Daily Capital, in Topeka, and began his actual work of editing and publishing a daily newspaper in the strictest accordance with the teachings of Jesus Christ. Twenty newspaper correspondents, besides the regular staff, were awaiting him. There was no formality, no ceremony, no prayer. Mr. Sheldon said all the praying must be done at home. He was bright and cheerful, but a trifle nervous. His first words were: "Well, brothers, here we are." Then, after a cordial handshake and greeting, he addressed the correspondents:

"I hope you will all take me seriously," he said. "This is not play for me. It is perhaps the most important week in my life. I intend to conduct a normal daily paper. I thank you for respecting my wishes not to be interviewed. I do not care to speak for publication during the week and will not consent to pose for photographs. I wish the paper to speak for itself."

Directing His Staff

The only extra hand on The Capital staff is Mr. Sheldon's private secretary. Sitting at a desk in General Hudson's room, Mr. Sheldon called in the regular staff and gave these instructions:

Do not use any slang words or phrases, not even those in common use, in the paper. Omit the Kansas word "pop" and write "populist." After interviewing submit your article to the man interviewed, and bring me the copy with the man's written approval. If a man does not wish to be interviewed accept his first refusal as final, and never insist. Theatrical news and scandals are not wanted. No notice will be given of any of five theatrical performances to be held this week. We will print only such sporting news as comes under the head of clean, healthful amateur athletics. In crime avoid all horrible details of the actual event and inquire completely into the cause. Discover especially if drink was a cause. All political matter must be absolutely non-partisan. No smoking or profanity will be allowed in The Capital building.

He requested the city editor to give out assignments as usual and proceeded with the regular routine. He agreed to meet the correspondents twice daily, to answer questions. He rented rooms within a block of The Capital office, that he might not have to go home nights.

The Capital is an eight-page issue, with twenty columns of advertising and thirty-six columns of news. No advertisement of Mr. Sheldon's books are printed.

The general appearance of the paper is totally transformed. The first page opens with the following prayer, by Bishop Vincent:

I will try this day to live a simple, sincere, serene life, repelling every thought of discontent, self-seeking and anxiety, cultivating magnanimity, self-control and the habit of silence, practicing economy, cheerfulness and helpfulness. And as I cannot in my own strength do this, or even with a hope of success attempt it, I look to thee, O Lord, my Father, in Jesus Christ, my Saviour, and ask for the gift of the Holy Spirit.

India's Need the Leading Theme

Next comes a leading article headed, "Starving India. Fifty million people affected. Urgent need of aid from Christian America." The article opens with this signed appeal by Mr. Sheldon:

> The Capital knows of no more important matter of news the world over this morning than the pitiable condition of famine-stricken India. We give the latest and fullest available information of the progress of the scourge in the following articles. If every reader of this paper will give ten cents to the relief fund for this terrible Indian famine, we may be able to save thousands of lives. Will you do it? Let us all have a share in helping our brother man. For these 50,000,000 starving creatures are a part of that human family which Jesus taught us to love when he taught us to say "Our Father." CHARLES M. SHELDON.

In thus presenting as the foremost and most urgent topic for the consideration of Christian America the sad condition of the people of India, Mr. Sheldon has given to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S plea for India the grandest endorsement that could have been uttered or written. His words should have weight and influence with the hundreds of thousands to whom his daily paper will go.

The third column of the first page opens with an article on "The War Spirit," which the writer, a physician, diagnoses as "military fever."

Then more reprints on the cruelty of war, ending with a seventeen-year-old speech by John Bright against the former Boer war. The next article is headed "The Cry for Work; the saloon and liquor industry makes millions idle." Then comes an article headed "Prohibition Tested; the law a success in Kansas." The page concludes with a column article headed "Colorado's Burden," appealing to philanthropists to build homes for consumptives.

The second page opens with the names of all the members of the editorial staff, business department and composing, stereotype, press and mailing rooms. Then follows the editor's prospectus. An editorial on starving India says principally that little help will come except from America. Then comes an editorial by a Korean missionary. The market article says the stock market is "a gambling hell" and reports of speculative tradings are not necessary to the business of the country; hence the paper will give space only to actual sales and dealings. The centre of the page is given up to a cartoon showing the canteen as the soldiers' worst enemy.

The third page is devoted to telegraphic and Kansas news, including a column and a half on anti-saloon and anti-trust laws. All the principal news articles are signed and have a paragraph of comment by Mr. Sheldon appended. Some of the subjects are "The Kentucky Trouble," "The Chicago Strike," "The Kansas Methodist Conference," "The Boer War"—the latter being mentioned only as to the possibilities of peace—and "Porto Rico's Appeal for Food." The fourth page gives the Topeka local news, the most remarkable article being a list of local divorces and the cause. The fifth page has four contributed articles on the industries of Kansas, against acquiring the Philippines, the progress of kindergartens for sixty years and local college reports. The sixth, seventh and eighth pages are filled with advertisements.

Appearance of the Paper

The general appearance of the whole paper is more like a literary publication than a newspaper. The large percentage of reprint suggests a free use of the scissors. On the other hand Mr. Sheldon's running comment gives it a wide-awake appearance. As a strictly religious paper, it is a success; but as a newspaper, in the minds of all correspondents here, it is a disappointment.

In his leading editorial Mr. Sheldon defines the policy of The Capital under his management. He states the conditions under which he accepted the editorship; declares that he receives no compensation, and that a share of the profits are to go to some benevolent work. With God's help, he means to do the best he can.

He will not attempt to illustrate in a dogmatic way "What would Jesus do" in every case.

The only thing I or any other Christian man can do in the interpretation of what is Christian in the conduct of this paper, is to define the term "Christian" the best that can be done after asking for Divine wisdom, and not judge others who might with equal desire and sincerity interpret the probable action of Jesus in a different manner.

A Definition of "News"

He then gives his definition of "news" as events which the public ought to know for its development and power in a life of righteousness. Great causes, that belong to the profoundest principles of human life, will be given the most prominent place. The paper will be strictly non-partisan in local, state and national politics. It will advocate universal prohibition of the liquor traffic. The great social questions of the age will be prominently treated. War will be declared utterly abhorrent, whether in Africa, the Philippines, or anywhere else. He confesses that he cannot indicate the Christian attitude on such matters as the finances, the tariff and expansion. The first and main effort of the paper will be to influence i[illegible]ders to seek first the Kingdom of [illegible] without [illegible]

A big advertisement of a Bible publishing house offering Bibles worth $3 for $1 was rejected. Mr. Sheldon wired the firm how they could sell Bibles thus, but received no answer. He also refused the advertisement of a Kansas City clothing house offering suits worth $20 for $14.

Editor Sheldon's first day in the editorial chair was, as a whole, all confusion and hurry. He kept his head throughout, but calmness was a great effort. He passed on news and telegraph as fast as presented, but was constantly interrupted by a stream of callers, citizens of the town who came in to wish him success. He denied himself to none, but arose from his chair, though swamped with work, and advanced half-way across the room with extended hand, greeting each caller patiently. He acknowledges that he cannot keep this up, and callers hereafter can be seen only on business. At three o'clock on Tuesday morning he stood by the press as the first copy came off, seized it and handed it in memory of the occasion, to his wife. At that moment I asked him if he was pleased with the first-born. He tried twice to find answering words but failed. With his thoughts unuttered, he showed how deeply he was moved by turning his head to hide his tears.

"The Topeka Capital" has been furnished by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with six carefully prepared and accurately printed lists of the Sixteen Thousand Subscribers placed through this paper. As the facilities in Topeka were found inadequate to meet the unusual demand, part of the edition will be printed in Chicago and another part in New York. Owing to the necessity of first preparing matrices of the forms in Topeka, and then shipping them to the other cities, a delay of two days or so will ensue.

While it is not expected that any occasion for complaints will arise, still, should there be any, such communications should be addressed direct to "The Capital," Topeka, Kan. Under no Circumstances should they be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as such a rcuitous course must entail considerble and unnecessary delay.

A Unique Experiment

In the history of American journalism, will probably be many years before here will be another week as important as hat of March 12 to 17—the week of the heldon Edition of the Topeka Capital. long time, too, must elapse before any ewspaper office in Kansas will be kept s busy as was the one of The Capital uring the week immediately preceding. he entire business force of the paper orked night and day, opening mail, anwering correspondence, registering subcriptions, booking advertisements, and ttending to a thousand and one details f the enterprise. The number of emloyees in the subscription department ad been doubled, then tripled, then uadrupled, and at last quintupled. Every esk was crowded, two and three at a esk. Even then not all the mail of the orning had been opened at the closing ime in the evening. The entire force orked on till midnight, and on several ccasions even all night, entering subcriptions. There were at work twenty-ix typewriters and fourteen other girls in he mail address room; fifteen men regisering subscriptions and opening mail, nd four men handling money, etc.

On Tuesday of the second week before he time of issue, the subscriptions uddenly jumped from 3,000, the number vhich had been coming in daily for sevral weeks, to 11,000. Even with the six xtra post-office clerks sent from Washingon to take care of The Capital's mail, the Topeka post-office was never before so heavily taxed.

It was computed that the total output of he Sheldon Edition would reach three undred thousand copies. This, however, nly represented an estimate of the circuation in the United States, Canada and Mexico. By far the largest single list of ll was that received from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, aggregating 16,000 subscribers.

It was thought that the British edition o be issued by Sir George Newnes, of London, would equal, if it did not exceed, the American edition. Matrices, plates of the pages issued here, advertisements and all, were forwarded to London, where Sir George Newnes issues the first paper about ten days after the first Sheldon issue here. The New York edition will be three days later than that in Topeka, the Chicago edition two days later, and the Kansas City edition one day later.

For a whole week before assuming actual control Mr. Sheldon went about his work of preparation as silently and modestly as ever. Of his plans or policy he said nothing. Not even the regular editor of the paper, General J. K. Hudson, nor Mr. Dell Keizer, the business manager, nor Mr. E. O. Popenoe, the proprietor, had the least inkling of what he proposed to do, what kind of news he intended to eliminate, or what his policy might be. "I would rather the people would judge the paper itself as I give it to them," he told me personally when I asked him. Regarding advertisements, however, he was obliged to pass judgment day by day, for weeks before the day of issue. His most radical changes were: Refusing all medical advertisements, including even cards of local physicians; refusing all "agents wanted" advertisements; refusing land boom and mining advertisements; giving choice of position to no advertiser; refusing advertisements that are usually printed in the news columns as "reading notices." He would print no advertisement that offered everything for nothing, nor notices of the sale of stock of an enterprise or place that existed only on paper.

Mr. Sheldon committed himself regarding the news end of the paper, pledging himself to read every written line, day by day, before it goes to the compositor to be put in type. He says he "can read two lines at a time." He wrote all his leading editorials in advance, so as to be as free as possible for the routine work, and the news of each day as it comes up for his judgment.

Governor W. E. Stanley, of Kansas, thus expresses his views on Sheldonism and the daily Christian newspaper:

"Everything is possible in Kansas. I believe that if Mr. Sheldon had been born and raised in Kansas he would know how to get the $1,000,000 he needs to endow a Christian daily newspaper. I do not know him intimately, have never heard him preach; but I have read all his books with great interest, especially In His Steps. I believe most of the theories he advances in that book to be impracticable.

"Of course all people, rich or poor, can try to do and live as they believe Jesus would. But in real life all have not the money to experiment with, as do the characters in Sheldon's book.

"In real life there are few people who can afford, or who will spend or lose their money in this way. In our modern life there are a great many problems which we cannot solve by asking, 'What would Jesus do?' We must act according to modern conditions, and we must do and live and decide, each according to his conscience.

Will its Influence Last?

"I do not believe Sheldonism will endure long enough to establish a cult. His newspaper experiment must remain an experiment. Meantime, he is unquestionably a sincere, good man, genuine in his desire to induce people to live as Jesus would, were he in their place. I hope good will come of it."

Before beginning actual editorial work, Mr. Sheldon increased the number of hours he had been spending daily in The Capital office. He went from man to man asking every sort of question, and acknowledging that he knew little or nothing about the practical work of getting out a newspaper. He said he visited to familiarize himself with the work in all the departments. He gave out half a dozen "local assignments" of a special nature—directing reporters to visit certain places and write articles. These pertained principally to the secret saloons, gambling houses and dives. The presumption was that he intended exposing these places in The Capital's columns. Not many months ago the Central Congregational Church of Topeka, Kansas, Sheldon's church, were two months behind with their pastor's salary. On the second Sunday of the third month, the salary not being yet forthcoming, Mr. Sheldon mounted his pulpit and, after the prayer, when he read the "notices" for the ensuing week, he announced that he would not preach for a church that did not pay its debts. He made this announcement in his characteristic, simple way, yet earnestly and even sternly.

MRS. SHELDON AND THE BABY

PASTOR SHELDON IN HIS EDITORIAL ROOM IN "THE CAPITAL" OFFICE

"A church," said he, "should at least be as honorable in its methods as the ordinary mercantile house. And do you suppose dealers would continue long to supply a firm that could not or would not meet its obligations?"

That the congregation of the Central Church would give its last dollar to retain Mr. Sheldon as its pastor was proven the following week, for before the pastor again mounted his pulpit the $200 for the two months arrears of salary had been raised and paid.

The episode did not make the pastor misunderstood, for all appreciated the truth of his statement that it was not the money he cared for, but the principle. He wants his church to be at least as honorable as any ordinary business institution. In his idea of Christianity, "churchianity" has no place. He defines churchianity as a form of worship which includes, as of necessity, a costly edifice, a grand organ, an expensive choir and an immense amount of red tape, style, pomp and ceremony. He says Christ himself preached the Gospel without the adjuncts of riches and vanity, and fashion, and form, and these are not necessary to practical religion to-day. He believes in a Christianity that is a part of life not only on Sundays, but on every day in the week. He wants to see a Christian a Christian at all times and in everything he does. He asks each member of his little flock to live as Christ would have them live each minute of every day, asking themselves, even in the simplest matters, "What would Jesus do?"

Mr. Sheldon has had calls from fashionable churches in large cities, but has declined them. He prefers his own plain little church. Probably $10,000 would cover the entire cost of the edifice in which he preaches. The organ is the small kind used in an ordinary parlor. There are no cushioned pews—just a few plain, wooden benches, such as are used in school-rooms. Of the 350 members, only two may be called rich. The others are bread-winners, who live and earn each according to his talents. There are a few lawyers, real estate men and merchants. A former mayor of Topeka is a member; and others are the editor of the Kansas Farmer, the stenographer in the City Court, the Principal of Washburn College, the city Health Officer, a bank examiner, a state evangelist of the Congregational Church, and the Principal of the Topeka High School. Of course, all the members of Mr. Sheldon's family are active in the church. On Sunday evening the congregation, besides Mrs. Sheldon, are Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Merriam, Sheldon's parents-in-law; also the Rev. Stuart Sheldon and wife, the preacher-author's father and mother.

SHELDON NOTES

"Oom" Paul Kruger, President of the Transvaal, is among the foreign subscribers.

The largest single list of subscriptions, by many thousands, is that received from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Many thousands of subscriptions have been received from the Christian Endeavorers, Epworth Leaguers, Y. M. C. As., Y. W. C. As., W. C. T. Us., and State Temperance Unions.

Gen. Hudson, managing editor of The Capital, though not sharing Pastor Sheldon's religious views, is a firm believer in Sheldon personally and regards him as thoroughly genuine.

While the Sheldon experiment is going on other editors are taking advantage of the excitement to make capital for their own papers. Editor Howe, of the Topeka State Journal, is publishing a series of lay sermons on "How Jesus would run a church," and the Daily Champion, of Atchison, Kan., is running in accordance with a remarkable programme, viz., "How the Devil would run a newspaper."

As might have been expected, the tremendous pressure upon the business office of The Capital, consequent upon the avalanche of subscriptions, has taken most of the business staff by surprise, notwithstanding all preparations. It is an absolute inundation, and the attempt to handle all subscriptions as they arrive leaves the force scarcely time to eat or sleep. Manager Dell Keizer especially feels the pressure which is in striking contrast with his former quiet and easy-going surroundings.

All the ministers of Topeka approve of the Sheldon experiment, and the local Ministerial Union recently adopted resolutions expressing cordial appreciation of the Christian enterprise. In some of the Kansas cities, however, adverse criticism has been encountered both from press and pulpit; but this was not unexpected. Some preachers have devoted whole sermons to denunciation of the experiment as sacrilegious; others have contended that its effect would be to cheapen one's conception of Christ. As a whole, however, pulpit opinion throughout the State has been favorable and expectant of good results.

BABY MERRIAM SHELDON

SIN'S TERRIBLE WAGES

A New Sermon by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kans.

"The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Romans 6:23.

THE Emperor William of Germany is very jealous of what he calls the rights of the throne. He will not allow the least familiarity of approach to himself or any of his family either in word or manner. Recently a German soldier, who did not know the Empress by sight, saw her for the first time in the palace gardens, and thinking her to be an ordinary German woman addressed her as fraulein. The Emperor heard of it, and he was so indignant that according to report he has ordered a portrait of the Empress to be placed in every soldier's barracks in Germany so that every man in the German army may hereafter know the Emperor's wife when he meets her and pay her the due respect which belongs to her rank and importance.

I have often thought that our ignorance of sin's greatness made us so careless and indifferent to its importance that we needed frequently to be reminded by some visible sign of its vast power. If there could be stamped in our imagination, on our heart and mind the portrait of its awful presence in the kingdom of man we might be spared the harmful indifference with which we too often accost it or the light way in which we treat it, as if it mattered very little in any case.

Sin Portrayed And it is of course true that such a vivid portrait of sin God the ruler of us all has placed in view of every soul. We cannot read our Bibles without finding everywhere the most striking illustrations of sin's results in a human life. It seems as if the Old Testament writers exhausted all the resources of language to describe sin's features. And all the writers of the New Testament dwell with inspirational force upon the effect of sin in the soul. No man who reads or studies the Word of God has any excuse for being ignorant of sin. He should know it when he sees it, and treat it with the seriousness its greatness demands.

There is a very common and popular way of treating sin lightly. I was looking over a number of so-called comic magazines lately, and I was struck repeatedly with the fact that drunkenness and lying were made the basis for large numbers of supposably funny pictures. That is, it seemed to the managers of these papers as if it was very funny for men and women to lie to each other, if what they said resulted in certain embarrassing situations that the public falsely think are comical.

It may be well for us to ask, why is sin so great? What difference does it make whether we have sin in us or whether our sin has been borne away by the Saviour of the world? What are the results of sin on the world? What are the results of sin on the life of any soul anywhere? Is sin really so great that we need to know much about it?

In answer to these questions and others like them let us try to see how serious is the harm that sin works in man. I am simply repeating here in a feeble way Rom. 6. There are three very distinct and emphatic ways in which sin shows its enormity. Those three ways we will consider.

The Natural Man 1. Sin makes impossible a right relation between God and man. Paul says: "The natural man receiveth not the things of God. For they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Sin does this. It shuts God out of the ambitions, out of the loves, out of the desires, out of the plans of life. And it is an awful result that such a soul reaps at last. It is like a plant trying to grow without sunlight. It is like a bird trying to fly in a vacuum. It is like a man trying to read in total darkness.

If sin therefore did only this one thing, it would be great and terrible. But there is another truth about sin's power. 2. Sin not only makes impossible a right relation between God and man; it also throws man out of right relation to himself. That is, the man who sins is fighting against his own interests and the penalty of his sin is being visited upon himself.

The Folly of Sin But not only is this true of sin in a man. It brings remorse; that is bitter. It brings a lowering of the moral standing; that is humiliating. It weakens the will; that brings man near to the brute creation. All these things are true of the effect of sin. But more yet. The man who continues to sin loses his taste for the grandest things in the world. Sin, in other words, makes a man choose wrong every time, when choice is a matter of infinite importance. He sets things out of proportion. What profit is it for a man to gain the whole world and lose his life? Yet men keep doing it as if they thought it paid. They choose death instead of heaven. They choose riches instead of character. They choose the temporal instead of the eternal.

Sin makes men fools. That is one of the derivations of sin. It is foolishness because it makes a man an enemy of his own best good. We would certainly call a man a fool who every day cut off a part of his body with a sharp knife. We would say he had lost his mind; that he ought to be restrained or shut up in an asylum. Yet men who sin are daily destroying what is of infinitely more value in the soul, and they do not seem to realize that they are doing a very foolish thing. But this is what sin does. This is what sin is. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." That is the inevitable result. "The wages of sin is death." That makes sin such a terrible power in its greatness.

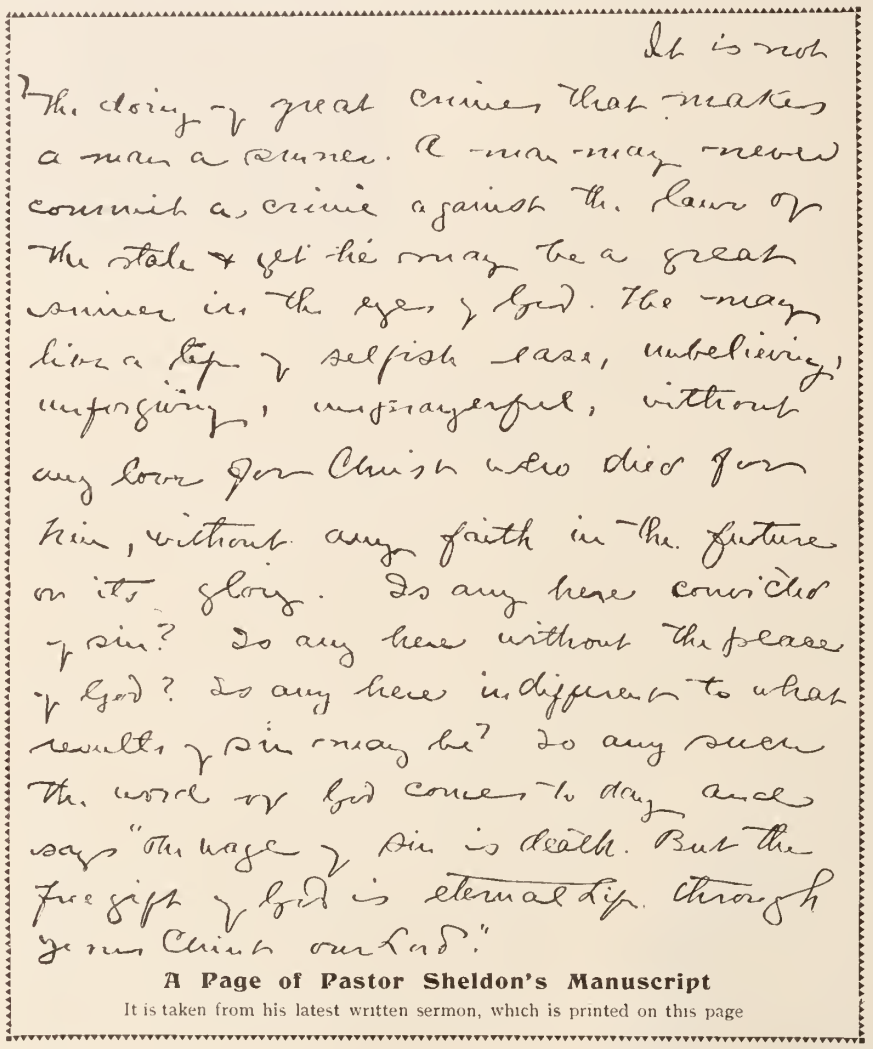
Its Polluting Nature 3. But sin not only makes impossible a right relation between man and God; it not only throws a man out of right relation to himself and causes him to act against his own best good; sin also extends from the individual to society, and the man who sins not only destroys himself but he endangers innocent lives all about him.

When some one in a family has scarlet fever, the Board of Health puts a staring red sign on the house and everybody who can possibly do so leaves the sick person to the care of a doctor or nurse, and keeps away from the house until the danger is over. Even husband and wife are separated and for awhile every precaution is taken to keep people away from the patient.

But in the world of sin men and women who are tainted with that awful contagion, move about among our dearest and best, spreading them all through society and, too often, we do not object nor seem to care. Society that would shrink with terror from a scarlet fever patient, will receive and welcome sinners into its family circle and be blind to the awful danger.



It is not the doing of great crimes that makes a man a sinner. A man may never commit a crime against the laws of the State & yet he may be a great sinner in the eyes of God. He may live a life of selfish ease, unbelieving, unforgiving, unprayerful, without any love for Christ who died for him, without any faith in the future or its glory. Is any here convicted of sin? Is any here without the peace of God? Is any here indifferent to what results of sin may be? To any such the word of God comes to day and says "The wage of sin is death. But the free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

A Page of Pastor Sheldon's Manuscript

It is taken from his latest written sermon, which is printed on this page

Crimes before God You cannot put a man in jail simply for being intensely selfish. And yet his selfishness may ruin the character of many young people. You cannot arrest and convict a man for drinking intoxicating liquor so long as he keeps sober, and yet his sinful example may lead scores of other men into crime and ruin. You cannot bring a man into court and charge him with being dangerous to the human family because he does not believe in the Bible or prayer or God. And yet his sin of unbelief may imperil the soul of your child or mine. You cannot shut a man up in an insane asylum because he is in the habit of laughing at religious things or telling indecent stories to young boys, or finding perpetual fault with Christian people and church members. And yet such a man may be as dangerous to the spiritual life of a neighborhood as a maniac would be to its physical life. All crime is sin. But all sin is not crime in the eyes of society. Only God sees and judges sin, and to him we shall finally have to give account. He will be the final Judge. "For every idle word that men speak they shall give account at the day of judgment."

Sin's Selfishness What an awfully selfish thing sin is. Not content to work out the destruction of the man who is possessed by it, sin always reaches out for those nearest and pollutes and disfigures and hurries into the way of destruction all others who come in contact with it. If we labelled all sinners with red signs, as we label houses where there is contagious disease, how many of us would be going about saying to society, as the lepers were obliged to cry, "Unclean! unclean! Come not nigh! I will certainly pollute thee! Unclean! unclean!"

Sin a Life-Destroyer The man who sins chooses to accept the life of selfish desires, free from service, free from burden-bearing, free from obedience. The very things that the sinner chooses are the things that inevitably bring death to him. The wages of sin, that for which the man hires out, is death. He may enjoy his life in the gratification of certain desires that come to him in the way of sinful pleasures, but every sin indulged leaves its mark upon his abbreviated life. Every sin shortens by just so much the actual life of the sinner. "At the last it biteth like a serpent." "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Sin does this. It is a destroyer of life. I have come to believe, myself, in the probable annihilation of those who persist in sin, those who never respond to God's offer of forgiveness, those who never believe in Christ and take him as their Saviour. It seems probable that the Bible teaches that the word death, as applied to the soul that always refuses to repent is a death that means total extinction. I cannot interpret the use of such a text as we have to-day to mean anything less than that. "The wages of sin is death." What do those words mean if not plainly what they say? The extinction of life. The utter going out of the flame that was meant to ascend brighter and purer on the altar of man's worship of his Creator and Redeemer.

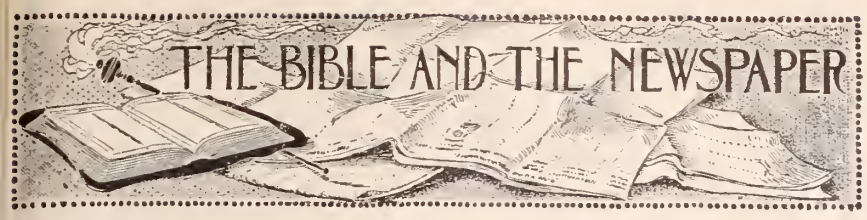
Choose To-day What will you choose to-day? life or death? Always before the soul stands this choice. There is always the opportunity to believe and be saved now. Whatever opportunities there may still be after the earthly life are so shrouded in uncertainty that the chances are all against any such opportunity for repentance. What we are absolutely sure of is that now is the acceptable time; now is the day of salvation. To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Shall we remember it is not the doing of great crimes that makes a man a sinner. A man may never commit a crime against the laws of the State, and yet he may be a great sinner in the eyes of God. He may live a life of selfish ease, unbelieving, unforgiving, unprayerful, without any love for Christ who died for him, without any faith in the future or its glory. Is any here convicted of sin? Is any here without the peace of God? Is any here indifferent to what results of sin may be? To any such the Word of God comes to-day and says, "The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Choose ye whom ye will serve. Sin is a hard master. He pays. He always pays wages. But what wages! Death! The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Who will serve for such wages, when by turning to the Saviour he can receive as a free gift not only life, but eternal life?



The War in South Africa

INDICATIONS of depression on the part of the Boers are seen in the appeal for the cessation of hostilities, which has been forwarded to London. Although it has not been productive of peaceful results, the appeal shows that a decided change has taken place in the Boer attitude since the statement was issued a few weeks ago, in which President Kruger declared that the only terms on which he would make peace were the payment of an enormous indemnity and the cession of portions of Natal and Cape Colony. It is evident that terms much less favorable would now be acceptable, although the two States are not yet prepared to accept the terms which the British Government is willing to grant. The people of the Orange Free State are said to be even more anxious for peace than those of the Transvaal. The war is now transferred to their territory and their capital is menaced. The army which opposed the advance of Gen. Roberts has been compelled to retreat. A brilliant attack by Gen. French at Poplar Grove, near Osfontein, forced it out of its intrenchments, and, had French received the support from the British infantry that he expected, the whole Boer force in that region would have had to surrender. Happily for them, the infantry was delayed, and so the Boers were able to retreat in good order with their guns, but the flight was so hasty that when the victors took possession of the camp they found cooked food which had been prepared, but which the Boers did not stay to eat. The Boer forces fled toward the north and east. They made another stand at Driefontein, where they were again attacked and a furious battle was fought. The Boers occupied a strong position on the crests of the hills and had heavy artillery, which did severe execution. After a stubborn resistance they were driven out of their intrenchments by a bayonet charge and continued their retreat. At the close of the week Gen. Roberts had advanced to within twenty-five miles of Bloemfontein. The conflict in the northwest, where Col. Baden-Powell has been holding Mafeking with great difficulty against an overwhelming force, is enveloped in obscurity. One report has it that the town has fallen, while another has it that the siege has been raised. The garrison has suffered great privations, and for several weeks has been reduced to a diet of horseflesh. The men are represented to be extremely weak, many of them unable to stand, and there is a great deal of sickness. There is additional interest in this struggle, because among the defenders is Lord Cecil, son of the Marquis of Salisbury, the British premier. Several scions of other high families also are serving as officers under Col. Baden-Powell. A report is current that Presidents Kruger and Steyn have addressed an appeal to the foreign consuls at Pretoria, which they asked them to forward to their governments, soliciting intervention. There appears, however, to be little hope of relief in that direction. The British government has emphatically stated that it would regard intervention as an unfriendly act, so the European powers are in the position which the wise king describes:

GEN. JOHN D. P. FRENCH

He that passeth by and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears (Prov. 26: 17).

An Illogical Plea

A lady of Virginia has appealed to the courts of that State for damages in a case of breach of promise of marriage. She was able to prove that the promise had been made and that it had not been fulfilled at the time agreed upon. The defendant, however, presented certificates of physicians, showing that subsequent to his making the promise he had been very ill, that he had not recovered at the time set for the marriage, and that his disease being incurable, he would be an invalid all his life. The court accepted the plea as a valid defense, justifying him in breaking the engagement. The plaintiff has now appealed, on the ground that since the defendant won the case, he has married another lady. She naturally feels indignant at his setting aside the plea which he had used to justify him in breaking his promise to her. Unhappily, there is often similar reason to complain of men in their treatment of the claims of Christ. The reasons they give for not fulfilling their obligations to him do not weigh with them when business or pleasure is in question.

Saying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the sabbath that we may set forth wheat (Amos 8: 5).

A Sister's Sacrifice

A strange reason was assigned recently for an act of renunciation on the part of a girl. It was the admission of a wealthy young lady to a Roman Catholic order known as "The Poor Clares." The members of the Order are bound by most solemn oaths to spend the remainder of their lives in poverty and silence. The girl has a brother to whom she is devotedly attached, who is quite deaf, and she hopes that by this act she may be the means of his regaining his hearing. It is sad to learn that at the end of the nineteenth century and in a Christian land, any one can be so ignorant of God's nature as to think that he can be propitiated by such an act of self-sacrifice. Even under the old dispensation men had learned that such self-inflicted punishment was unavailing.

Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath shown thee O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God (Micah 6: 7).

The Right to Exclude

The Supreme Court of Indiana has been called upon to decide a question at issue between one of the local Health Boards in that State and the father of a child. There was, it appears, danger of an epidemic of smallpox and the health officers, finding in the school a child who had not been vaccinated, excluded him from the school. The case has been carried to the Supreme Court, which has now given judgment in favor of the Board of Health. The Court holds that in view of a public danger, the Board has the right to insist that such safeguards as in its judgment ought to be adopted, shall be enforced. The plea that there was no specific statute authorizing the exclusion of the child was therefore dismissed. We are not so careful about the spread of moral contagion, which is far more common. If exclusion from the schools were the penalty in the case of every child whose parents have neglected to get for it the moral safeguards which God promises in his Word, how many places would be vacant!

Ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way (Deut. 11: 19).

Gift of a Birthday

One of the most peculiar gifts on record is described among the reminiscences of the famous author, Robert Louis Stevenson. While he was living in Samoa, he formed an intimate friendship with Mr. H. C. Ide, of Vermont, who was for several years United States Land Commissioner in that island. Mr. Stevenson was very fond of Mr. Ide's little daughter, Annie, and it was to her that he made his unique gift. In the formal document in which he conveyed it to her, he said: "In consideration that Miss Annie H. Ide was born out of all reason on Christmas day, and is, therefore, out of all justice denied the consolation and profit of a proper birthday; and considering that I have now no further use for a birthday, I have transferred, and do hereby transfer to the said Annie H. Ide, all and whole of my rights and privileges in the thirteenth day of November, my former birthday, now, hereby and henceforth the birthday of the said Annie H. Ide to have, hold, exercise and enjoy the same in the customary manner, by the sporting of fine raiment, eating of rich meats and receipt of gifts, compliments and copies of verse, according to the manner of our ancestors. And I charge her to use my said birthday with moderation and humanity, and as a good daughter of the family, the said birthday not being so young as it once was, and having carried me in a very satisfactory manner since, I can remember." To this quaintly humorous document Mr. Stevenson affixed his signature and seal, as if he were conveying to the little girl an estate. One would have thought that no better birthday than Christmas day could have been desired by anyone, but possibly the child may have perceived its disadvantages, inasmuch as the gifts she would have at Christmas would serve as birthday gifts, and so she would have only one festival in the year instead of the two that come to most children. Doubtless the child's family and friends will respect Mr. Stevenson's kindly device, and so the little girl will have another festival which she will associate with the gentle and beautiful soul who provided her with it. We may hope that her natural birthday, too, will remind her of her obligations to Him whose birth is celebrated on that day, through whom she may have that better birth which begins the endless life.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God even to them that believe on his name: who were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God (John 1: 12).

A Search for a Grave

Notice of a reward of one thousand dollars, which will be paid to the finder of a certain grave, is published by the Republican of Denver, Colo. It appears that fifteen years ago, a millionaire cattle-owner in Chicago sent his favorite son to Colorado for the recovery of his health. The young man had been ailing for several months, and it was hoped that the free, open air life of a cattle-ranch in that State would make him strong and robust. The fact that his father owned most of the cattle on the ranch, insured him all the care and attention that could be expected. He appeared to gain strength after his arrival, and in a few weeks was able to ride around on a gentle horse. He continued to improve until time came for the general "round up" of the cattle, when he was thought well enough to take his share of the duty. He had been out a few days when, one morning, he was seized with a spasm of the heart and died. His comrades wrapped the body in canvas and buried it, marking the grave with a loose wagon-board. That night there was a terrific thunder-storm and the frightened cattle stampeded. How many miles the herders were carried in their effort to gain control of the thousands of terrified beasts, they never knew. It was not until long after dawn that the mad rush slowed up, and then the ground, so far as could be seen, looked as if it had been ploughed and harrowed. The excitement over, the men thought of their dead comrade and sent the sad news to his father in Chicago. He set out at once to bring his boy's body, to inter it in the family tomb. But the grave could not be found. Every trace of it had been obliterated by the hoofs of the cattle. The men were set to digging in a hundred places, but the grave was not located. The grief-stricken father offered a reward of a thousand dollars for its discovery, but without avail. Years have passed and the reward is still unclaimed. The father naturally yearned for the consolation of laying his son in the grave of his kindred, but he has a better hope if, like David, he can look forward to meeting him where there is no more parting.

I shall go to him; but he shall not return to me (II. Samuel 12: 23).

"WAITSTILL HAD A LETTER"

Samantha Sees the General

SEZ I, "Brigadier General Grant, I have come to you on the most important mission any ambassador ever traveled on."

Sez he, "What sovereign, madam, do you represent, and from what country do you come?" Sez I, "Brigadier General Grant, my mission is from the Lord of Hosts, and the country I come to plead for is your own native land—the United States—the land your own illustrious pa saved with the Lord's help."

He wuz deeply affected I see and invited us to set down, consequently we sot. And I sez, plungin' to once into my bizness as my way is in Jonesville or the Antipathies: "Brigadier General, everybody knows that you are a brave man and a good man." He thanked me and looked pleased as well he might from such an enconium from one of the first wimmen of the ages, and I resoomed: "General Grant," sez I, "are you brave enough and good enough to tackle the worst foe America ever had?"

Sez he, "What foe do you allude to, mam?"

Sez I, "The foe that slays sixty thousand, and causes ten thousand murders every year, steals the vittles and clothes from starvin' wimmen and children, has its deadly grip on Church and State, and makes our civilization and Christianity a mock and byword amongst them that think."

"You allude to Intemperance, I presume," sez he. He's dretful smart; he knew it in a minute from my description.

"Yes," sez I, "a foe a million times as dangerous as any your army ever faced, and a million times as hard to chase out of its ambuscade." But here in a gentlemanly, quiet way he went on to recapitulate our provocations. It wuz a eloquent, brief summary of events leadin' to the war. Among other causes he mentioned the words I had hearn before, "Remember the Maine!"

"Yes," sez I, "I remember how roused up you and America wuz by the death of three hundred of our brave boys, but," sez I, "Frederic" (I thought mebby it would sound more convincin' and friendly if I called him Frederic, and I wanted to convince him; I wanted to like a dog), "Frederic," sez I, "three hundred deaths hain't so many as hundreds of thousands. And those poor boys on the Maine died a clean death, and their agony wuz brief: they didn't moulder out a livin' death, chained to tender hearts, dragged along the putrid death path with 'em. Their country honored 'em; they wuzn't thrust into dishonored graves, some as paupers, some as criminals swingin' from scaffolds. Their country mourns for 'em and honors 'em. It wuzn't glad to cover their faces away from the light, brutish faces to hant 'em with reproach, I should think, knowin' how they died. Try to think of that, Frederic; try to take it to heart."

I hearn Arvilly behind me breathin' hard and kinder chokin' seemin'ly, and I knew she wuz holdin' herself in as tight as if she had a rope round her emotions and indignations to keep her from breakin' in and jinin' our talk, but she wuz as true as steel to her word and didn't say nothin' and I resoomed:

"You've got to take such things to hum to realize 'em," sez I. "Owin' to a sweet mother and a good father your boy meby is safe. But spozein' he wuzn't, spozein' you and his sweet ma had to look on as millions of other pas and mas have to and see his handsome, manly young face growin' red, dissipated, brutal; his light, gay young heart changed to a demon's, and from bein' your chief pride you had to hide him out of sight like the foul and loathsome leper he had become. Millions of other pas and mas that love their boys as well as you love yours have to do this. And if it wuz your boy what would you say of the legalized crime that made him so? Wouldn't you turn the might of your great strength aginst it?"

SEZ HE: "WHAT SOVEREIGN, MADAM, DO YOU REPRESENT?"

An Effective Appeal

He didn't speak out loud, but I see from his looks that he would. "Then," sez I, "do, do think of other pas and mas and sisters and sweethearts and wives weepin' and wailin' for husbands, sons and brothers slain by this enemy! I spoze," sez I reasonably, "that you think it is an old story and monotonous, but Love is an old story and Grief and Death, but they are jest as true as at the creation and jest as solemn." I thought he looked a good deal convinced, but he looked as if he wuz thinkin' of the extreme difficulty of reachin' and vanquishin' this foe intrenched as it is in the lowest passions of men, hidin' behind the highest legal barriers and barricaded behind meetin' house doors, guarded by the ballots of saint and sinner; I read these thoughts on his forehead, and answered 'em jest as if he'd spoke.

Sez I, "When your illustrious father come up face to face with a foe no other general could manage, did he flinch and draw back because it had been called unmanageable by everybody else? No, he drawed a line between good and evil, black and white, and says, 'I'll fight it right out on this line.' And he did, and before his courage and bravery and persistence the foe fell. Now, Frederic, here is the biggest foe that the American people are facin' to-day; here are weak generals and incompetent ones. Nobody can manage it; them high in authority wink at it and dassent tackle it, and so on down through all the grades of society—Church and State—they dassent touch it. And what is the burnin'est shame, them that ort to fight it support it with all the political and moral help they can give it. Here is a chance, Frederic, for you to do tenfold more for your country's good than ever your revered father did, and you know and I know that if it wasn't for this great evil and a few others, such as the big Trusts and a few other things, our country is the greatest and best that the sun ever shone on. If we loved our country as we ort to we would try to make her do away with these evils and stand up perfect under the heavens. It is the ma that loves her child that spanks her into doin' right if she can't coax her, and now do lay hold and help your country up onto the highest pedestal that a country ever up stood on, and I'll help boost all I can." I hearn behind me a loud "amen," turned into a cough. Arvilly wuzn't to blame, it spoke itself onbeknown to her.

The Soldier's Heart Touched

Sez I, "This is a hard job I am askin' you to tackle. The foe your father fit wuz in front of him but this foe is within and without, and has for allies, powers and principalities and the Prince of Darkness. And now will you, bearin' the name you do, of General Grant, will you flinch before this black-hearted foe that aims at the heart and souls of your countrymen and countrywomen, or will you lead the Forlorn Hope? I believe that if you would raise the White Banner and lead on this army of the Cross, Church and State would rally to your battle-cry, angels would swarm round your standard and the Lord of Hosts go forward before you."

He didn't say he would, I spoze he wuz too agitated. But he sez sunthin' in a real polite way about what a good Ambassador his country had in me.

But I sez sadly, "I can't do much, Frederic, I am a woman, and the only weepon that is able to slay this demon is hung up there in Washington, D. C. Wimmen can't reach up to it, they can't vote. But you can, your arm is longer, and with that you can slay this demon as St. George slew the dragon. And heaven itself would drop down heavenly immortelles to mix with our laurel leaves to crown your forehead. Think on it, Frederic, no war wuz ever so holy, no war on earth wuz ever so full of immortal consequences."

And here I riz up, for I felt that I must leave the Presence, not wantin' to make the Presence twice glad. I reached out my right hand and sez, "Good-by, and God bless you, for your own sake and for the sake of your noble pa."

He looked earnest and thoughtful, that allusion to the boy he loved so, named after his illustrious grandpa, had touched his very soul. I felt that I had not lost my breath or the eloquence I had lavished. I felt that he would help save other bright young boys from the demon that sought their lives — the bloody demon that stalks up and down our country wrapped in a shelterin' mantilly made of the Stars and Stripes—oh for shame! for shame that it is so! But I felt that General Grant would come up to the help of the Lord aginst the mighty, I felt it in my bones. But I wuz brung down a good deal in my feelin's as Arvilly advanced to the front. She had kep' her word as to talkin', though the indignant sniffs and sithes behind me showed how hard it had been for her to keep her word, but now she advanced and sez, as she drew out her two books from her work bag: "General Grant, I have two books here I would like to show you; one is the Twin Crimes of America: Intemperance and Greed, that subject so ably presented to you by Samantha; the other is The Wild, Wicked and Warlike Deeds of Men."

Arvilly Makes a Capture

Sez General Grant, risin' up: "I haven't time, madam, to examine them, but put me down as a subscriber to both." Arvilly wuz in high sperits all the way back. And as we wended our way to the tarven agin who should we find but Waitstill Webb, and we wuz dretful glad on't, for we wuz layin' out to leave Manila in a few days, and this would be our last meetin' for some time, if not forever. Though I wuz glad to see when questioned by me about her return that she didn't act so determined as she had acted about devotin' her hull life to nursin' the sick.

She told Arvilly confidential that she had had a letter from Ernest White since we had seen her. Arvilly knew that he had wanted to make her his bride before she left Jonesville. But the two ghosts, her murdered love and her duty, stalked between 'em then, and I spozed wuz stalkin' some now. But as I said more previous, the sun will melt the snow, and no knowin' what will take place. I even fancied that the cold snow wuz a little more soft and slushy than it had been, but couldn't tell for certain.

A dretful thing has happened! I am almost too agitated to talk about it, but when I went down with my pardner and Tommy to breakfast ruther late, for we wrote some letters before we went down, Miss Meechim broke the news to me with red eyes, swollen with weepin'. Aronette, that dear sweet little maid that had waited on all on us as devoted as if we wuz her own mas and pas, wuz missin'. Her bed hadn't been slep' in for all night; she went out early in the evenin' on a errent for Dorothy and hadn't come back.

She slept in a little room off from Dorothy's, who had discovered Aronette's absence very early in the morning, and they had all been searching for her ever sence. But no trace of her could be found; she had disappeared as utterly as if the earth had opened and swallowed her up. Dorothy wuz sick in bed from worry and grief; she loved Aronette like a sister; and Miss Meechim said, bein' broke up by sorrow, "Next to my nephew and Dorothy I loved that child."

And anon another dretful thing wuz discovered. Whilst we wuz talkin' about Aronette, Elder Wessel rushed in distracted, with his neck-tie hangin' under one ear, and his coat buttoned up wrong, and the feathers of his conceit and egotism and self-righteousness hangin' limp as a wet hen.

Lucia had gone too; had disappeared jest as Aronette had, no trace could be found of her; her bed had not been slept in. She, too, had gone out on an errent the evening before. She and Aronette had been seen to leave the hotel together in the early evening. Elder Wessel, half distracted, searched for them with all his strength of mind and purse.

I started Josiah off a huntin' the minute he had got through eatin'. He refused pint blank to go before. "Eat," sez I, "who can eat in such a time as this?"

Sez he, "It goes agin my stomach every mou'ful I take (which was true anyway), but we must eat, Samantha," sez he, helpin' himself to another cake. "We must eat so's to keep up our strength to hunt high and low."

The Search Begun

Well, I spozed he wuz in the right on't, but every mou'ful he consumed riled me. But at last the plate wuz emptied and the coffee pot out and he sot off. And we searched all that day and the next and the next, and so did Miss Meechim and Arvilly, with tears runnin' down her face anon or oftener.

Robert Strong, led on, Miss Meechim said by her anxiety, but I thought meb by by the agony in Dorothy's sweet eyes as well as his own good heart, didn't leave a stone unturned in his efforts to find 'em. But they had disappeared utterly, no trace could be found of 'em. They had been seen during the evening with the two young men they had got acquainted with and that I didn't like. They had been seen speaking with them as they came out of the shop where Dorothy had sent Aronette, and the young men could not be found.

"A MAN COME IN AND SPOKE TO ROBERT"

Well, we had all searched for three days without finding any trace of the two missing girls. Everything wuz ready for our departure, but Dorothy said that she could not, could not go without Aronette, but Robert Strong said and believed that the child was dead. He had come to the belief that she and Lucia by some accident had fallen into the water and wuz drowned. Dorothy had cried herself sick and she looked wan and white, but bein' so sweet dispositioned she give up when we all said that we must go before long, and said that she would go too, though I knew that her heart would remain there wanderin' round in them queer streets hunting for her lost one. The morning of the third day after they wuz lost I wuz down in the parlor, when a man come in and spoke to Robert Strong, and they both went out together talking earnestly, and I see in Robert's face a look of horrow and surprise that I had never seen in it before; and the first time Robert saw me alone after that he told me the dretful news. He said that the man that spoke to him was a detective he had employed, and the evening before he had come acrost a man who had been out of town since the night Aronette wuz lost. This man told the detective that he saw her and Lucia and the two young men coming out of a Canteen late at night, staggering and reeling they all wuz, and they disappeared down a cross street towards another licensed house of ruin. Licensed by Christian America! Oh my achin' heart to think on't! "I wonder if our govermunt is satisfied now," I broke out, "since it has ruined her, one of the sweetest girls in the world. But how did they ever entice 'em into that Canteen," sez I.

"They might have made them think it was respectable, they do serve lunches at some of them; of course they didn't know what kind of a place it was. And after they were made stupid drunk they didn't know or care where they went."

"I wonder if America is satisfied now!" I sez agin, "reachin' out her long arms clear acrost the Pacific to lead them sweet girls into the pit she has dug for her soldiers? Oh!" sez I, "if she'd only been drownded!" And I wiped my streamin' eyes on my linen handkerchief.

And Robert sithed deep and sez, "Yes, if she had only died, and," he sez, "I can't tell Dorothy, I cannot."

Elder Wessel's Sorrow

And I sez, "There is no need on't; better let her think she's dead. How long," sez I, turning toward him fierce in my aspect, "How long is the Lord and decent folks goin' to allow such things to go on?"

And he sez, "Heaven knows, I don't." And we couldn't say more, for Dorothy wuz approachin', and Robert called up a smile to his troubled face as he went forward to meet her. But he told me afterwards that the news had almost killed Elder Wessel. He had to tell him to help him in his search. He wuz goin' to stay on there a spell longer. He had to tell him that Lucia had been seen with Aronette staggering out of a Canteen with two young men late at night, reeling down a by-street to that other licensed house which our Christian govermunt keeps nigh the Canteen, it is so obleegin' and fatherly to its soldier boys.

"WE MUST EAT," SEZ JOSIAH, HELPIN' HIMSELF TO ANOTHER CAKE

"WHO SHOULD WE FIND BUT WAITSTILL"

When he told him Elder Wessel fell right down in his chair, Robert said, and buried his face in his hands, and when he took his hands down it wuz from the face of an old man, a haggard, wretched, broken-down old man.

The People's Club House didn't wear the kindly beneficent aspect it had wore. He felt that coffee and good books and music would have been safer to fill the Poor Man's Club with; safer for the poor man; safer for the poor man's family. Tea and coffee seemed to look different to him from whiskey, and true liberty that he had talked about didn't seem the liberty to kill and destroy. The license law didn't wear the aspect it had wore to him, the two cherished institutions Christian America furnished for its citizens at home and abroad seemed now to him instead of something to be winked at and excused, to be two accursed hells yawning for the young and innocent and unsuspicious as well as for the wicked and evil-minded. Ungrateful country, here wuz one of thy sons who sung the praises of thy institutions under every sky! Ungrateful indeed, to pierce thy most devoted vassal with this sharp thorn, this unbearable agony.

"For how was he goin' to live through it," he cried. How was he? His beautiful, innocent daughter! his one pet lamb! It was not for her undoing that he had petted and smiled on these institutions, the fierce wolves of prey, and fed them with honeyed words of excuse and praise. No, it wuz for the undoing of some other man's daughter that he had imagined these institutions had been raised and cherished.

He wuz an old broken man when he tottered out of that room. And whilst we wuz moving heaven and earth hunting for the girls he wuz raving with delerium with a doctor and trained nurse over him. Poor man! doomed to spend his hull life a wretched wanderer, searching for the idol of his heart he wuz never to see agin—never!

A Church Trust

THE English churches have tried it. Since, it has been ten years tried in the State of Maine. It is nothing dangerous, nor very formidable, except to the enemies of the truth and the institutions of the Tempter. Why should not business men exercise the same business skill in church work and missionary work as in work secular? Why need Christians duplicate work, duplicate officials, duplicate expense, and cultivate unfraternal feelings in trying to carry on the work of the Lord in the earth? It is not church legislation that is proposed. It is not interference with creed symbols, with church government. The Congregationalist may still insist upon the Pilgrim Fathers, and date from them; the Presbyterians from the Covenanters, and date from them; the Methodists from John and Charles Wesley, and date from them. And so with all varieties of church belief and church order. It is proposed merely to hold a church conference of mixed denominations, with reference to duties and labors and perils that are common. Mr. Moody had such meetings in Northfield. The idea was long before in the Young Men's Christian Association. It has been well called a Religious Trust, to do business for the Lord on a larger and mightier scale, and with greater ease and better profits.

The Tired Pen

THERE are many new kinds of pen being manufactured, but no man has yet been able to invent a pen that will not get weary. We have often had hold of a pen that seemed determined to skip and gambol: It leaped from paragraph to pargraph; it flew from simile to trope; it made a dash as it went; it slurred unimportant events; it threw interjections of surprise and interrogations of inquiry and hour after hour rushed along the line. But after a while it was sure to get weary. It stumbled. It dragged. It blotted. It staggered and after a while it dropped as though dead. Talk of weary arms and legs; let some one tell us the story of weary pens. They may be found late at night in editorial rooms, and on reportorial desks, and in the hand of poet, essayist, romanticist, and historian. For the most part they hunger for more bread, and yawn for more sleep, and worn out, long for the grave of obliteration. Kept in a fine case at Abbotsford, you may find the expired pen of Walter Scott, and in the venerable hall of Philadelphia, the pen which signed the Declaration of Independence. But post mortem honors are seldom awarded to deceased quills. They are generally thrown away. They drop into the dust and are trod on, and the places that knew them once know them no more. But our chief sympathy is for the living pens, which write and write and wish they could die. Nothing in all the world has such hard work in making a livelihood as pen and pencil. The one languishes in the picture gallery, the other faints in the study. May the day speed on when literature and art shall come to higher appreciation. That will be the elysium of pen and pencil.

Switzerland Reproduced in Paris

AMONG the many wonderful things to be displayed at the Paris Exposition is a model of Swiss mountains, snow-capped, covered with rocks and trees and descending cataracts. This is to be an exact reproduction of Nature; realism as never before executed at a national exposition, save, perhaps, at Chicago, in the case of the cave-dwellers of Arizona. Our readers can imagine the contrast between the intense civilization of the great city of France and this proposed reproduction of Nature in her wildest aspects. The work is to be carried out with exactness and simplicity and is faithfully to display the mountains, cascades, pastures, houses, chalets of actual Switzerland. It will be a whole Switzerland in miniature, and may be supposed to tone up the great Exposition itself. For certainly God himself walks in Nature. And to reproduce from actual scenery glaciers, pasture lands, even mountain flowers, so to speak, the very walks of God, will actually preach the Gospel of Nature to the world's inhabitants, who shall visit this metropolis of fashion, beauty and art. One feature of the exhibition will be a system of irrigation that will keep this miniature Switzerland in perfect verdure. That ought to remind the people of the verse, "He sendeth his rain on the just and the unjust."

Socialism and Christianity

THERE are apostles in the world who claim that they know Christianity better than the Author of it. They want what they call a Christian State. When the founder of Christianity was on the earth, he was very careful to distinguish between his kingdom and Cæsar's kingdom. He insisted on having his own. But he said, "My kingdom is within you." He said, "Render unto Cæsar, the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." There is no doing the first without doing the last. We must begin, not by tearing down what man is doing in the way of rendering God's things to himself, that we may build up things to be rendered to Cæsar on the ruins; but by tearing down what in man is hostile to God's things, and on the new foundation building up the things that belong unto God. Dr. Blumhart claims that "Christ was crucified because he was a Socialist." Why, he did not at all interfere with social conditions. He cast in his lot with the rich and the poor with like indifference. He disregarded the ecclesiastical differences established by the Jews; but in the social conditions he sought to effect changes only by changing the hidden man of the heart.

The Law and the Canteen

AT the request of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, Superintendent of Legislation of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has prepared a brief statement explanatory of the present condition of the Anti-Canteen movement and the legislation, passed and prospective, affecting it. She writes:

The Canteen is the army saloon. Why it is styled Canteen is a problem unenlightened minds have not been able to solve. The object of the Canteen, in the beginning, was a well-stocked general store, where soldiers could procure certain luxuries not provided by the government, viz., a well-kept lunch counter, supplied with a great variety of viands, such as canned fruits, meats, pastry, non-alcoholic drinks, and tobacco. Reading and writing materials were also supplied. Gradually beer and other intoxicating liquors were introduced, and it is to have these latter removed that recent legislative efforts have been put forth.

Upon the breaking out of the Spanish-American war, it became evident that many of our boys who had nobly responded to the call for troops were destined to meet a worse fate than to fall in battle, for in these government saloons soldiers were detailed to tend bar, and many a boy going from a Christian home, and a member of the Society of Christian Endeavor, upon enlistment, was compelled to sell liquors to his comrades at this government bar, without question, for implicit obedience is the rule of the army, and there was nothing left for him to do but to obey orders.

Rumors of the terrible condition in camps where the Canteen flourished, during the mobilization of troops in the southern states, aroused the indignation of fathers and mothers whose boys had gone to the front, as well as of the country at large. There was a general protest in the form of petitions to Congress, which culminated in the framing of the now celebrated Anti-Canteen bill, which provides:

That no officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks, as a bartender or otherwise, in any post-exchange or Canteen, nor shall any other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general orders as may be necessary to carry the provision of this section into full force and effect.

This passed both Houses of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and received the signature of the President. As a consequence of this order, a large number of inquiries reached the War Department, and Secretary Alger referred the law to the Attorney-General, J. W. Griggs, who rendered an opinion that Congress had not intended to abolish liquor selling in the army, but only to prevent officers or soldiers being detailed to sell, and that civilians could do so without fear or question.

A whirlwind of indignation and protest passed over the country at this decision. From press and pulpit, from city and town, from grief-stricken fathers and mothers, came the cry to the Chief Executive, who as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, had it in his power to issue an order forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors in the army.

A committee representing various temperance societies, called upon the President in July last, urging him to take action. He received them graciously, listened attentively, and promised to give the matter personal attention.

Early in January, the National W. C. T. U., through its Superintendent of Legislation, sent out a circular, addressed to prominent professional and business men all over the country, requesting them to write a letter to the President, reminding him of his promise, and urging action. This letter found its way to the Attorney-General, and he replied to the Superintendent of Legislation, that "shortly after the committee had waited upon the President in July, the matter had been referred to him, but with no change in his views, and that furthermore, the present Secretary of War concurred in his opinion."

Thereupon, the President of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Vice-President-at-large, and the writer, waited upon the President again, to ascertain if the opinion of the Attorney-General must be considered as final, and to present over 200 letters from professional and business men and organizations, beside signatures representing over 13,000 people, protesting against the opinion of the Attorney-General. The President assured the ladies that the opinion as given was final, but if "Congress would speak in plain terms on the subject, he stood ready to execute the law."

Again we turn to Congress, and the following bill has been presented in the House of Representatives by Hon. J. D. Bowersock, of Kansas, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"To prevent the selling or dealing in beer, wine or any intoxicating drinks in any post exchange, or Canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled,

"That the sale of or the dealing in beer, wine or any intoxicating drinks as a beverage by any person, in any post exchange, or Canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States is hereby prohibited.

"Sec. 2. That the penalty for any violation of this act shall be no less than one hundred dollars and not more than five hundred dollars for each offence."

Let every one who reads this story, write at once to his Representative, addressing him simply Capitol, Washington, D. C., and urging him to give this bill his support in every way. By so doing, we shall be able to impress Congress with the fact that the people are in great earnest concerning the welfare of the soldier boy.

MARGARET DYE ELLIS,
Superintendent of Legislation.

Liquor Exports to Our Islands

THE writer has just secured the first official report that has been given out by the United States Treasury's Bureau of Statistics (Mr. O. P. Austin, Chief), which shows how beer and whiskey have followed the flag with leaps and bounds since we entered these islands with whiskey "drummers" at the head of the army.

The increase from 1897, when Spain was in charge, to 1899, when our Government was in full control, is shown by the following figures:

	1897	1899
CUBA
Malt liquors . . .	$27,549	$924,654
Distilled	495	65,271
PORTO RICO
Malt	2,354	176,510
Distilled	15	19,213
PHILIPPINES
Malt	663	154,488
Distilled	—	106,843

BRIEF NOTES

Evangelist E. P. Telford is holding meetings this week at Chillicothe, O., at Trinity M. E. Church. On April 8, he begins a series of meetings at St. Paul's M. E. Church, Cincinnati, O. Thence he goes on April 29 to Sidney, O.

The Rescue Band Mission is doing a difficult work at its quarters, 461 Palisades avenue, Jersey City Heights, N. J. In endeavoring to evangelize a neglected neighborhood, the mission is meeting with much encouragement and reaching a class that is seldom found within the walls of our churches.

The spirit of toleration had a conspicuous illustration in London recently. The Bishop of London is a member of one of the most exclusive clubs, which takes a pride in keeping its membership extremely select. The Bishop has nominated for membership there Dr. Hermann Adler, the chief Jewish rabbi.

A correspondent of the Chicago Record who has been on a journey through Siberia, writes that although he came in contact with Russian officers in every town he has only found one Russian military man who was in sympathy with the imperial rescript on international peace, which summoned The Hague Conference.

Rev. Francis Edward Smiley, of Denver, Col., has been holding meetings at Hastings, Neb., assisted by Mr. Herbert E. Pack, who has had charge of the musical part of the services. Many of the students of Hastings College attended the meetings. Over one hundred persons pledged themselves in Christ's strength to a new life.

Dr. J. E. Clough was expected to attend the Ecumenical Conference of Missions in April next and the Baptist Union gave him leave of absence for the purpose. He has, however, decided in view of the suffering of his people in the famine, to give up his journey and remain in India with them that he may help them in their sore affliction.

Send for Mite Boxes for India's Relief!

Our Flying Relief Ship for India will sail from New York to Bombay with its life-saving load of corn as soon as the cargo can be gathered. The India Government pays the steamer's charter, and Christian America supplies the cargo. All should have a share in this work. One dollar may be the means of saving many lives. Churches, Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor and other Young People's societies, should send for FREE Mite Boxes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 92 Bible House, New York.

... Under the Evening Lamp ...

By Margaret E. Sangster

A Home for Old Ladies

I DON'T think any home is ever quite completely furnished until it has an old lady in it, an auntie or a grandmother, or some beloved friend of the family, who is spending her declining years in its shelter. When I was a child there was generally a dear old lady staying with my mother, a relative or an acquaintance, happy in that safe harbor, our peaceful household. It often happens, however, that in the course of human events, women reach old age and have no place of abode on which they have a claim, in which case the best provision for them is found in a retreat like that afforded by an old ladies' home. Here they have pleasant rooms and good care when ill, nursing, doctoring, medicine, and whatever else they may want. The old ladies are company for one another, and have many a friendly hour of gossip over their sewing and mending, while sometimes they are able to do the fine needlework, in which they excel, and dispose of it to others, or in some way aid in lightening the burdens of their own kith and kin. For example, old Mrs. Teal has a distant cousin whose houseful of bairns wear out stockings very fast, and whose heedless boys are often needing a patch on their trousers. Should you peep into Mrs. Teal's mending basket, you would often find that she had a bundle of sewing on hand for her far-away cousin Mattie.

Old age should be sunny and peaceful. The rough and turbulent clamor of life, the battles of the days and the strife with care are behind it. The promise is to God's saints, "At eventide it shall be light." Very beautiful, I think, are the countenances of good women, traced with the lines of struggle, but quiet and resigned, and full of the strength of victory. A woman who is quite homely and plain in her youth, is often beautiful when age softens her face, and crowns it with an aureole of white hair. I like a cap, and consider it a very decorative headdress, especially when the gray hair is growing thin. A tight little knob at the back of the head, and wisps of gray hair over the ears, are not ornamental, but a snowy cap, with a frill or without it, with ribbons, bows, or lacking them, adds much dignity to its wearer; and nothing is more suitable to an old gentlewoman than a shawl or a large kerchief folded over her shoulders.

The cat asleep on the chair, the flowers blooming in the sunshine, the space, the cleanliness of the unspotted room, make this picture of a home for old ladies very attractive.

Variety on the Table

As spring advances we need more variety in our daily bill of fare than in the very cold weather. Stewed fruits, green vegetables as they come, brought to our Northern market from the South, oranges and apples should form a portion of our diet. Eggs and fish, always on the Lenten schedule, may be prepared in so many ways that the family table need not weary by monotony. We need to coax the appetite of the semi-invalid, of the person whom grip has left less vigorous than usual, and of her who frankly believes that she is tired of everything. At this season salads are in order, and they may be of many kinds. On the crisp leaves of the lettuce, lay squares chopped small and fine of the vegetables left over from yesterday's dinner—beets, potatoes, whatever they may be—and pour over the whole a mayonnaise dressing. Apples and celery finely chopped make a delicious salad. We do not use so much oil as we ought in our food, and American women, being highly strung and nervous, require fat of some kind in their food. Nothing is better than oil, used as a condiment, and a simple French dressing of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, adds piquancy to the raw tomato or the lettuce leaf, which help out luncheon or dinner. Onions, which are undeniably wholesome, can never be a popular article of food on account of their pungent odor, which is apt to linger on the breath for hours.

In Play-time

When our little people are at play, and aware of no observation from their elders, they reveal quite unconsciously, not only their traits of character, and the education they have received, but also the style of living in their homes. A little maid of eight, who is sharp and fretful, and given to scolding her dolls, is an index finger, pointing to her own mother. A boy of ten, out of whose mouth slips slang or worse profanity, may have heard that sort of objectionable language from father or elder brothers. If we wish to know our children, and to be fully acquainted with the influences which surround them, we must watch them when they are at play. A mother should be shy of letting her little girls wander off with strangers. They are safer under her own eye.

A TRANQUIL EVENTIDE

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—Margaret. In a city like New York a good trained nurse may receive from fifteen to forty dollars a week. Twenty-five dollars a week is frequently paid her.

—Elsie V. The young woman was very rude to interrupt a conversation not intended for her ears, and her explanation that she was vexed by hearing her own name did not amend matters.

—Mrs. E. O. You have done a good work in your fidelity and kindness to your husband's large family of children. No wonder they love and appreciate you, now that they are settled in life themselves.

—Louise J. "P. P. C." on a visiting card left at your door or sent you by mail means: "To take leave," or "Good-by for a time," as your friends are going from home for a season. You do not return such a card by one of your own.

—M. D. S. We are not so far apart in opinion as you think. Your letter largely expresses my own feeling in the management of children. Punishment is, of course, sometimes necessary. My point is that it should never be inflicted in anger or resentment; always in gentleness, tenderness, and love.

—Vivisection. In Aunt Patience's humble opinion an immense amount of wholly unjustifiable cruelty goes on under the name of scientific investigation. God forgive the torturers of dumb creatures, when they inflict needless pangs upon defenceless animals which cannot retaliate nor save themselves from agony.

—A Sister. You are right. A mother cannot in our country choose a wife for her son, and prevent his marrying the girl he loves, in order that he may oblige her. A mother has no such privilege, and a son must assert himself. If a man ever has the right of choice it is when he is seeking a wife. The second young lady in the case is being unfairly treated.

—Bachelor Friend. You misunderstand the spirit in which your married acquaintances deprecate your single life. They see in you an excellent husband for some admirable woman; they observe your good temper, candor and charm of disposition and manner; and, knowing how happy some maiden would be if allied to you, they suggest that you should become a benedict. No impertinent interference is intended.

—W. F. H. A Christian who has wronged another will always try by every possible means to make amends. This may be done by a personal acknowledgment to the injured party, or if false impressions have been wilfully made, by an honest retraction wherever it is necessary. The pastor would be a good adviser of the best course to pursue. As a rule Christians do not deliberately seek to hurt other people, either fellow members of the church or outsiders.

—Brown Eyes. A black satin dress is not quite so appropriate for a bride's traveling costume as a wool gown of serge or other material would be. I advise you keeping your black satin for church and visiting, and procuring a simple jacket and skirt to be worn with a shirt waist on your journey. Gray or tan gloves and a turban simply trimmed would be suitable with this toilette. Have the wedding cake for the boxes cut and packed beforehand, and let each guest take a box on leaving the house after the wedding reception. It should be a rich fruit cake, and each slice must be wrapped in parafin paper. The bridal cake, cut by the bride herself, may be a white cake, flavored with almonds and elaborately iced. In acknowledging a gift from former business associates of your husband and yourself, the proper way will be to say: "Dear Friends: We thank you sincerely for the kind assurance of your good will and the beautiful wedding present you have sent us. Very truly yours," and then let both names follow, the husband's first. Ordinarily if gifts are sent to the bride, she sends her thanks personally, signing her maiden name. I hope, dear Brown Eyes, that you and your fiance will be very happy in your marriage.

THE TRAILING ARBUTUS

A YEAR ago, in the sweet spring weather,
We sought the trailing arbutus together;
Brushing the withered leaves aside,
And the long pine needles, brown and dried.
We found it there with its glossy green
And its clustering flowers coy between
The sheltering leaves, so near the ground,
And we laughed and sang for the treasure found.

Over the waxen petals white
Hovered a blush as they met the light—
Pure as the look a maiden wears
As forth she comes from her morning prayers.

I gathered the lovely things for you [dew,
With the breath of the woods in their drops of
And home we went by the common way
With a halo around our holiday;
For we both had lost and we both had found
A something sweet in the forest's bound.

And if your heart was exchanged for mine
As we stooped for the blossoms beneath the pine,
The pine was far too high to hear
The words you whispered in my ear.

But the shy arbutus knew of the "yes,"
The troth-plight sealed with love's first kiss.
And every year in the blithe spring weather
We seek the trailing arbutus together.

Ash-barrels and Waste-paper

I LIVE in a city which on certain days of the week parades in sackcloth and ashes before the public gaze. Early in the morning of the penitential Friday, the householder rolls out his barrel overflowing with gray ashes and with red cinders. The latter in such proportion that the frugal and thrifty shudder at the waste of coal which goes on in our American homes. Not one in ten of our townsfolk seems to know that cinders make a hot and clear fire, and should be utilized and not thrown away. Unsightly debris of various descriptions is mingled with the ashes, and inquisitive Italians and professional ragpickers come along, poke the barrels with sticks and hooks, to the detriment of the sidewalk, fringed so far as the eye can see with this unornamental line of defenses, like an abattis thrown up against assault. By and by, great wagons rumble along and dusty men, powdered white with the ashes of the town, toss the barrels high in the air, empty their contents, and fling them furiously back upon the pavement. Woe to the unfortunate pedestrian at that moment passing by. She will be covered with a cloud of dust, and her clothing will show its traces, while her face, unless she is exceptionally amiable, will be darkened by a frown.

To all women who preside over city homes, here is a word in season: Do not allow in your ash-barrefs anything other than ashes. Waste papers have no place there. Garbage should be burned, never buried in an ash-barrel, nor kept waiting for the garbage man, nor thrown about on the floor of the cellar or by the back door.

Burn all refuse which can possibly be thus disposed of. This is at once the safest, cleanest and most sensible method to pursue, and it removes the peril of lurking germs, which may infect the lungs or poison the water-supply. Put ashes and other rubbish into covered receptacles, and stand guard over your own premises, so that bits of paper and anything else which helps to make the street and city untidy may not start on their course from your door. We owe a duty in this matter to our neighbors and the community.

A Word About Prayer

Dear friends, what are we that we should dictate to our Heavenly Father? We complain that we pray and our prayers are not answered. How do we know this? The petition may not be answered in a way open to our eyes; we may not see just what we desire, but God is not limited by our narrowness, and he knows what is for our good, though we ourselves may not know it. Shall we not trust in his never-failing love and boundless wisdom?

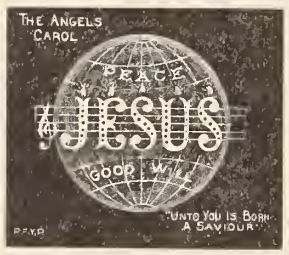
Gospel Teaching by Crayon

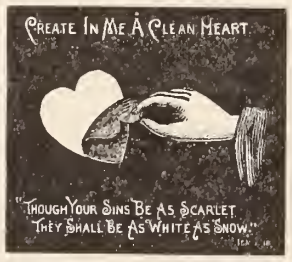
HOW REV. ROBERT F. Y. PIERCE DEVELOPED AND POPULARIZED THE BLACKBOARD ILLUSTRATIONS

TEACHERS in the Sunday Schools of America and Great Britain are under obligation to the famous preacher, of Scranton, Pa., whose portrait appears on this page. The now almost universal use of the blackboard in Sunday School work was in its infancy when Mr. Pierce threw his energy and his genius into it, and he has given it a vitality and a power which have widely extended its usefulness. At its first introduction it was restricted almost entirely to the primary department, and in truth the early illustrations were fit only for that department and not always for that. Mr. Pierce also brought to the work the cartoonist's genius and raised the character of the illustrations, so that they appealed to the older scholars and even to adults. We never lose our interest in pictures, and when a picture tells a story at a glance, or places some truth forcibly before the eye, the sense of vision reinforces the sense of hearing and impresses the lesson with double force on the mind. Christ's sermons show that "He who knew what was in man" appreciated the value of illustration. The kingdom of heaven, which he came to proclaim, always appears in his discourses as like some phenomenon, or some custom, with which his hearers were familiar. Stars, trees, fruit, vines, leaves, etc., were used by the Great Teacher to impress spiritual lessons. Behold him point to the sparrows and teach the transcendent value of human life. Again he points to the fisherman's net, or the ripening harvests, or displays a Roman denarius, or plucks a lily for a text. Pictures speak as forcefully as words, and the teachings of the pictures are often more impressive and abiding. Old and young, of every tribe and nation, find here a universal language which they can understand.

REV. ROBERT F. Y. PIERCE

THE CHRISTIANS COMMISSION
THE WORLDS CALL
GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD AND PREACH MY GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE
COME AND HELP US





Pictured truth has power, and Mr. Pierce has most wisely harnessed the illustrated methods to preaching the living word--methods which are so successfully applied to the departments of secular education, to the commercial, industrial, political, philanthropic and literary enterprises of the day.

A new impetus is being given to "eye preaching" when our colleges and theological seminaries and institutions for the training of Christian workers are asking for instruction and help in this practical method of spreading the light of God's truth. Mr. Pierce has just been giving another course of explanatory lectures on the illustrative methods of preaching, at the University of Chicago, the Baptist Missionary Training School, and the Moody Bible Institute. The Chicago Journal says: "Rev. Robert F.Y. Pierce is delivering a course of lectures on 'Object Preaching' at the Moody Bible Institute. It is safe to say that no more practical and inspiring addresses have been given to Christian workers in this city for a long time. Mr. Pierce is a thorough Bible student, an earnest speaker and a gifted artist, and he combines these gifts in a remarkable degree in simplifying Scripture truths and presenting them to the heart through the eye. The students at the Moody Institute have been charmed by the novel and the practical methods of illustration introduced by the lecturer. Many neighboring ministers and visiting clergymen are availing themselves of these talks, and from the profusion of notebooks and registered hints, it may be expected a large number will introduce this method of preaching and teaching in religious work. The lecturer enjoys an international reputation in his field, as his blackboard illustrations of the Sunday School lessons are extensively used throughout the United States, Canadian provinces and Europe. His recent book, entitled Pictured Truth,* is a handbook of blackboard and object teaching, and is a valuable aid to all classes of Christian workers. His lectures at the Institute are profusely illustrated; the rapid sketches, quick combinations and pungent truths come as a flash, every stroke of his crayon having a new meaning."

Mr. Pierce was born at Salem, N. J., and his early education was received at the public schools and the academy of his native town. In 1871 he graduated from the State schools of New Jersey, and entered upon the teacher's profession in which he was eminently successful, six thousand students being under his care. He early exhibited energy and tact and had been principal of two academies before he was twenty-one. At his majority he was chosen principal instructor in the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind at Philadelphia, the office which James G. Blaine filled when he began his public career.

Mr. Pierce gave much attention to convention work among secular teachers, and organized the American Normal Institute—a home school for the education of teachers—which was afterward embodied in Chautauqua work. For several years during his work as a teacher he pursued the study of medicine, which had been commenced in his boyhood. During the most of the time he was teaching and engaged in medical work he was resisting the call to the Christian ministry. In 1884 he gave up all else to devote his life to the higher claims of the Gospel, and was ordained March 4, 1885. His first work was the pastoral care of the great Mission in Philadelphia, organized by the Christian philanthropist, Mr. John B. Stetson. Since then he has been pastor of the First Baptist Church of Mount Holly, N. J., and of the State Street Baptist Church of Rockford, Ill., in both of which he met with great success and was much beloved.

After two years in the ministry as an evangelist, in connection with the Grace Baptist Temple of Philadelphia, and the great rescue work of that city, he accepted the call of the Penn Avenue Baptist Church of Scranton, Pa., where his ministry is greatly blessed. While his first service is to the church of his pastoral care, his peculiar gifts identify him with the broader ministry of the world.

For several years Mr. Pierce has been deeply interested in all phases of Sunday School work throughout the world, and he is an important factor in developing the religious life of the young people. He was one of the organizers of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, and for some time was the national secretary of that Society. He designed the badge which is now worn by thousands of Young Baptists in the United States and Canada. His broad Christian spirit makes him a universal favorite in young people's gatherings of all denominations. At the great Christian Endeavor convention in San Francisco, thousands attended his daily lectures.

The three illustrations on this page show how Mr. Pierce uses the blackboard to teach spiritual truth. The globe with the name of Jesus in the centre was used to illustrate a Christmas lesson, showing how light and peace and good-will have come from him whose advent the angels proclaimed to the shepherds. The globe with the projecting hand served to impress the duty of foreign missions. Christ's command to preach is on the one side, and the hand between the words of the Macedonian cry, implies the readiness of the world to receive the word. The third illustration, though scarcely such as an orthodox theologian would use, conveys the idea of the cleansing of the heart by removing its dark, sin-stained, sin-hardened covering, under which is the heart, soft and white, ready for the entrance of the Holy Spirit. Such illustrations as these make an appeal to the eye and live in the child's memory after the spoken words are forgotten.

Rejoicing in the Light

Saved Men Tell Their Stories of Rescue in the Old Bowery Mission

THURSDAY, the first of March, was a pouring wet day, but during the afternoon and evening three gatherings were held at the Bowery Mission, 55 Bowery, differing considerably from each other, but all very interesting to anyone interested in what is often spoken of as the "reaching of the masses" by the saving and keeping power of God.

The first of these was an organ recital, which has already been described in these columns. The next gathering was a smaller one, and composed of very different persons. It was held in the basement, and there was no pealing organ for the singing. There were about a dozen men, ages from sixteen to sixty, and there were few indications of prosperity beyond clean faces, clean linen—what there was of it—and whole garments. Yet this was a precious gathering; these men were some of the "sheaves" that God allowed his faithful laborers to gather in before their eyes. "Honest John Long" presided. He is a white-haired convert of the Mission, too, and later in the evening, in another place, described himself as having been a regular drunkard when he first made his appearance in the establishment. This gathering was a converts' prayer meeting for the benefit of the meeting soon to assemble in the large hall. Honest John first read them a verse from the first epistle of John, as a kind of helper for them in time of discouragement, and announced that if any of them should take him for an angel, that brother would assuredly be mistaken. At the same time, he could testify to the keeping power of God, and told them how to lay hold on it and keep it for themselves. Then a few testimonies, the most pathetic, perhaps, being from the lips of white-haired men.

The third meeting was not like either of the other two. The large hall was filled with an orderly, well-behaved crowd. Looking at the congregation as a whole one could not but be struck by the high type of the countenances, even where marred by dirt or dissipation, or both. As for the converts of some time standing, not a few of them were as well dressed and groomed as any men in the city, although, of course, there was no display of jewelry. One man who said that on New Year's eve he had less on his back than anyone he could see in that hall, might easily have been taken, both as to dress and mode of speaking, for a prosperous lawyer or merchant. And he was not alone in well-dressed prosperity by any means. It was not easy to comprehend that the majority of that orderly, intelligent-looking congregation were "homeless men." Yet such was the actual case. When the testimony time came the speakers thanked God for having kept them out of the hands of their enemies, drink being the foe most frequently mentioned, for periods of from twenty-four hours to four months. The man who had been kept a whole day said that later on he would give a lecture there on twenty-seven years of rum. He was a strong, well-built fellow, not apparently more than thirty or thirty-five years of age even now, so let us hope that he will have a long term of service for the Master. Another man, wearing a frock coat, and whose large, fine head suggested no mean intellectual power, had been saved for forty-eight hours. Rum had been his downfall, and he was separated from his wife and family by his evil life. He was exhorted to hold on to God, and encouraged by the testimonies of others who had had the same experience, to believe that he should yet have again the joys and happiness of which he had been robbed by his sins.

The meeting was conducted by Mrs. Bird, who was supported by several ladies. Among them was Mrs. Hallimond, who sang "Behold the Saviour at the Door," with a gentle sweetness, the power of which could not fail to impress every unconverted heart. Mrs. Bird is an adept at handling her forces, and the results of her strategy were delightfully manifested at the close.

In Mr. Hallimond's address he mentioned a case that must commend itself especially to church members. Several months ago a young man who had come to feel keen remorse, after a long debauch, came forward for salvation. He said, with great penitence, that his wife had left him in consequence of his evil ways, and that he had no home to go to and no means. The superintendent dealt with him kindly and kept him there that night. All the next day he spent in looking, unsuccessfully, for his wife, and he kept the search up for several days, always coming to the mission at night. One evening he came, bringing his wife with him that she might hear him testify. After that he was seen no more, until a few days ago, in an uptown church, the happy re-united couple came forward to greet Mr. Hallimond at the close of a meeting that he had been holding.

Mr. Fred. Gardner, formerly of the Volunteers of America, and who now has successful missions at Washington and Baltimore, gave the final invitation for those who wanted to prove the power of God in their own lives, to come forward for prayer and personal dealing.

In response to this call, and to active personal dealing, about a dozen men came up to obtain from God the salvation of which they had heard.

FOOD RULES COMPLEXION.

Medicines of No Avail When Improper Food is Persisted In.

A young lady whose first name is Blossom, and who was for many years, misnamed, but is now properly named, tells some interesting facts about her efforts to clear up her complexion, which in spite of all sorts of medicines and washes, face bleaches, etc., etc., were ineffective, because the root of the difficulty was not removed.

Her own story is interesting. "From childhood up, I, with my sisters and brothers, have been allowed the use of both tea and coffee. After I became a young lady of course it was no more than human that I should wish for a beautiful complexion like several of my companions, but which I did not have. Many different courses were taken to accomplish my end, such as applying face bleach, taking bottles and bottles of cleansing medicines, etc., all to no purpose.

"My older sister had learned before me that coffee was the root of the difficulty and urged me to begin taking hot water. I tried it, but could find little satisfaction in so weak and unpalatable a beverage. While visiting a friend one day, I accepted a cup of coffee (as I supposed), when I noticed that this particular coffee had a hundred per cent better taste than the coffee we had been in the habit of using. Upon inquiring for the receipt of this very pleasing beverage, I learned that I had partaken of the noted Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

"I had struck the goal at last. This was the morning beverage that I wanted, and this, it turned out, was the secret of the beautiful complexion of my friend. Of course we immediately commenced using it in our home, and I want to say that to-day not a more healthy, robust family is to be found in the United States, and the fact is attributable to our abandonment of coffee and the use of Postum Cereal Food Coffee." We do not feel disposed to publish the full name of Miss Blossom, but the name can be given to those interested, by letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich. The young lady lives in Traverse City, Mich.

It may be of interest to know that many of the young ladies' seminaries throughout the country have discontinued the use of coffee and are using Postum Food Coffee. A letter from Rev. Alex. Burr, Secretary of the Seattle, Wash., Young Ladies' Seminary, recites: "We are using Postum Cereal Food Coffee on the table, greatly to the satisfaction of the faculty and a large number of boarding students."

A Young Christian Soldier

A reader in Flandreau, S. D., sends us some interesting facts concerning the career of the first American baptized in the Christian faith in the Philippine Islands, the late Corporal Harvey M. Breed, of the South Dakota Volunteers. He enlisted May 17, 1898. "In a little country schoolhouse on the eve of the 17th day of January of that year he first learned of the love of our Saviour, and from that hour he became an earnest, faithful worker and promoter of Christianity. He was a delegate to the Epworth League Convention, which convened at Sioux Falls, May 3d and 4th, 1898. Before he started for the Philippines, when his mother was pleading with him to remain at home, he said: 'Mother, God is calling me; that is my work. I must go.' He did much good work among the soldiers, and was instrumental in organizing the first Epworth League in Manila, where he was the first American to be baptized, according to the rites of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by Rev. Owen. He was fatally wounded April 25, 1899." At a memorial service held at his home shortly after his death, many words were spoken of the splendid example he had given in braving the dangers of the battlefield in order that he might carry the Gospel into the ranks of the "boys in blue."

LATE CORP. HARVEY M. BREED

Sunday Work

A TRAVELER, writing to Hide and Leather, relates the following incident:

Four of us were sitting in the hotel last Saturday evening, watching the falling snow and listening to the sleigh bells.

"Wish I were home for Sunday," said one of the boys. "I don't," replied another. "If I were, I should probably be hauled down to the office on Sunday morning and bothered and badgered about business."

"This Sunday work is wrong," remarked a quiet and thoughtful man. "No good ever came from it, and none but business fanatics desecrate the sanctity of the Sabbath by letting business cares and responsibilities cripple and disturb the day set apart for rest and reflection."

The sentiments were wise and wholesome. They set me thinking. I know something about Sunday work. Some leading tanners make no secret of attending their office on Sunday mornings to open the mail. To me, the idea is revolting. While it may be absolutely necessary for certain processes in tanneries to receive attention on Sunday, I know beyond all doubt that an office can be run more successfully under six-day management than on the perpetual plan. It is the old story of men fooling themselves. Sad and pathetic foolishness! When man was built of flesh and blood it was never expected he would try and do the work of steel and iron. Human endurance is limited. Vital force and energy are bounded in various degrees in every individual. Business life is an octopus. Its tentacles are widely embracing, and business men have to be careful they are not drawn too closely to the beast and imprisoned for life.

Some Sunday workers make the stupid excuse that by opening the mail on Sundays they can answer their correspondents one day earlier than by waiting until Monday. So they can. What of it! Do the giant corporations insist on their mail being opened on Sundays? I guess not. And yet men doing a comparatively small business are apt to go crazy over it and imagine they are forced to violate the Sabbath. They seem to forget that business men do not expect Sunday answers to letters.

Note the difference between the seven-day worker and the normal man. The former, the fanatic, is a bundle of tired and irritated nerves, unsettled and in a worked-up condition all the time, and one to whom life is a continual nightmare. The Sunday of the six-day worker is spent happily and tranquilly. All business cares are forgotten, and as Sunday evening slowly fades away the sensible man feels strengthened and refreshed and Monday morning sees him jump at his work with avidity, and probably he does more in one day than the tired octopus-ridden fanatic accomplishes in two days.

The Wing Piano

STYLE 29.
CONCERT GRAND UPRIGHT
No other Piano made equals this in style and design of case.

Description of Style 29.

7 1-3 octaves.

Double lever, grand repeating action.

Grand scale, overstrung bass; three strings to each note in middle and treble registers.

The scale is the same as in grand pianos, with the largest size of sound board and strings of greatest length, thus giving the greatest volume and power of tone.

CASE—Double veneered inside and outside.

Choice of superior Circassian walnut, rich figured mahogany, genuine quartered oak and ebonized.

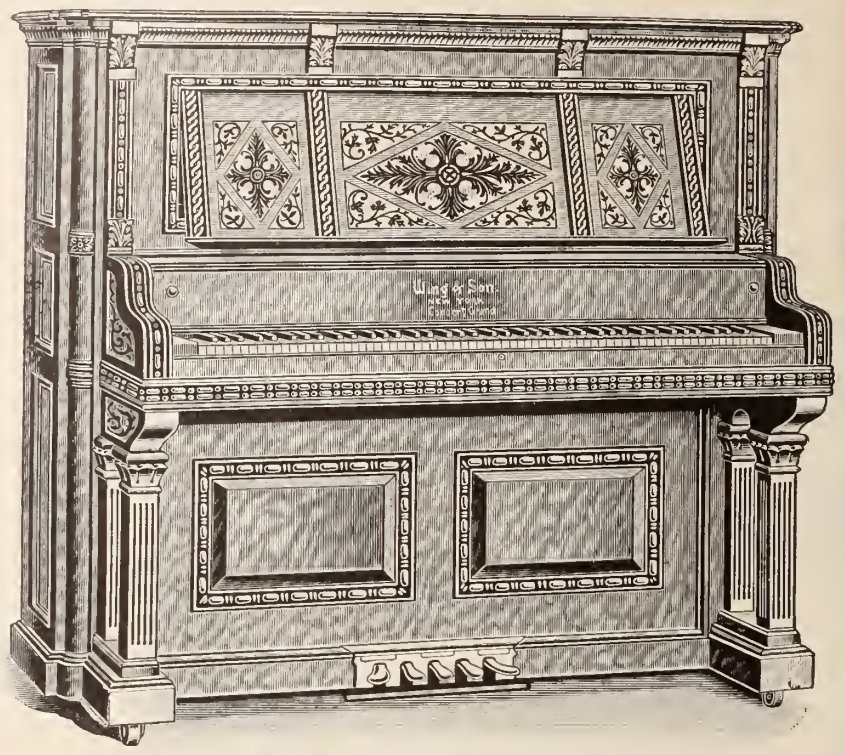
KEYS—Of best ivory and ebony.

IMPROVEMENTS—Wing Pianos have the following improvements, viz: "Built up" wrest plank construction. "Dovetail" top and bottom frame case construction. Full metal plate, with metal depression bar and metal supports for key bed. Improved noiseless direct motion pedal action. Improved practice attachment. Full length duet music desk. Carved panels. Instrumental attachment.

The usual way to buy a piano is from a retail agent or dealer. We do not sell our pianos in this way, but supply our pianos direct from our factory to retail purchasers. There are a great many advantages in buying direct from the factory. The most important is the saving in price. We do not employ a single salesman or agent, and we have no salesroom except our factory. We transact all of our business and ship all pianos direct from our factory and our expenses are small, and as we sell a much larger number of pianos than any dealer or retail firm, a very small profit pays us.

No matter how far away you live, our improved system of doing business makes it actually more convenient and more satisfactory to buy a piano from us than to buy one from a local dealer in your own town or city. Write us and receive full particulars.

We sell the Wing Piano on easy terms of payment and take old instruments in exchange.



We aim to make the best piano possible and to sell it at the lowest price possible. If you wish to buy a fine piano at a low price, write us.

NEW YORK, November 11, 1899.
Messrs. WING & SON,
GENTLEMEN:—

During the past month we have supplied through the medium of our premium department, two Wing No. 29 Upright Concert Grand Pianos to customers. We have received a report in each case which is very flattering to you. Our customers report that the pianos are not only first-class in every respect, but are highly satisfactory, and they are more than pleased with them. It is very gratifying indeed to us that such is the case, and it gives us much pleasure to forward this information to you.

Yours very truly,
(Signed), S. H. MOORE & CO.,
Pub. Ladies' World, N. Y.

SENT ON TRIAL

FREIGHT PREPAID. We will send this piano or your choice of 23 other Wing Pianos on trial, to any part of the United States, all freights paid by us. We will alow ample time for a thorough examination and trial in the home, and if the piano is not entirely satisfactory in every respect we will take it back at our own expense. There is no risk or expense to the person ordering the piano. No money is sent to us in advance, we pay all freights.

THE INSTRUMENTAL ATTACHMENT

imitates perfectly the tones of the Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither and Banjo. Music written for these instruments, with and without piano accompaniment, can be played just as perfectly by a single player on the piano as though rendered by a parlor orchestra. The original instrumental attachment has been patented by us and it cannot be had in any other piano, although there are several imitations of it.

Every Wing Piano is guaranteed for twelve (12) years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material.....

We will send free on request "The Book of Complete Information about Pianos," 118 pages, handsomely bound in cloth. Everyone who intends to purchase a piano should have this book. Sent free on request, with twelve (12) pieces of music.

FRIED ONIONS

Indirectly Caused the Death of the World's Greatest General

It is a matter of history that Napoleon was a gourmand, an inordinate lover of the good things of the table, and history further records that his favorite dish was fried onions; his death from cancer of stomach, it is claimed also, was probably caused from his excessive indulgence of this fondness for the odorous vegetable.

The onion is undoubtedly a wholesome article of food, in fact has many medicinal qualities of value, but it would be difficult to find a more indigestible article than fried onions, and to many people they are simply poison, but the onion does not stand alone in this respect. Any article of food that is not thoroughly digested becomes a source of disease and discomfort, whether it be fried onions or beef steak.

The reason why any wholesome food is not promptly digested is because the stomach lacks some important element of digestion; some stomachs lack peptone, others are deficient in gastric juice, still others lack Hydro chloric acid.

The one thing necessary to do in any case of poor digestion is to supply those elements of digestion which the stomach lacks, and nothing does this so thoroughly and safely as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Dr. Richardson, in writing a thesis on treatment of dyspepsia and indigestion, closes his remarks by saying, "for those suffering from acid dyspepsia, shown by sour, watery risings, or for flatulent dyspepsia shown by gas on stomach, causing heart trouble and difficult breathing, as well as for all other forms of stomach trouble, the safest treatment is to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal. I advise them because they contain no harmful drugs, but are composed of valuable digestives, which act promptly upon the food eaten. I never knew a case of indigestion or even chronic dyspepsia which Stuart's Tablets would not reach."

Cheap cathartic medicines claiming to cure dyspepsia and indigestion can have no effect whatever in actively digesting the food and to call any cathartic medicine a cure for indigestion is a misnomer.

Every druggist in the United States and Canada sells Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and they are not only the safest and most successful but the most scientific of any treatment for indigestion and stomach troubles.

A New Gospel Door Opened

MISSIONARIES' HEARTS GLADDENED BY THE GRANTING OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN ECUADOR

AS we compare the condition of affairs in Ecuador to-day with what existed five years ago, our hearts must cry out, "This is the Lord's doings; it is marvelous in our eyes." Five years ago saw the whole country under the absolute control of the Church of Rome, which through a consecutive government dictated laws and measures to suit the fancy and serve the ends of the clergy. Repeated efforts had been made by colporteurs to establish a work in the land, but the constitution declared the religion of the country to be Catholic, to the exclusion of all others, and every attempt at occupancy failed. One or two workers who managed to gain an entrance were quickly expelled, one of them having to flee for his life. Such was the situation when the liberal revolution in 1895, under General Eloy Alfaro, succeeded in overthrowing the conservative power and the new era began. In 1896 General Alfaro was chosen President and a new constitution was adopted granting religious tolerance. Ecuador, which for more than three hundred years had been a stronghold of the Papacy and had held out till it was the only land in South America where missionaries were excluded, under the hand of God swings open its doors to the messengers of Christ. Even before the signing of the constitution missionaries had landed at Guayaquil, expecting that religious liberty would be granted, and at the very day the final decision was reached they were present in Quito to witness the celebration. The missionaries have been kindly received by the new government and the fullest liberty and protection assured.

THE MARKET PLACE OF QUITO

The stranger landing at the port of Guayaquil finds himself confronted by an active commercial life in a tropical city enjoying many of the conveniences of modern civilization. Journeying inland towards Quito, which lies some six days' hard travel away, a few hours on horseback brings an entirely new change of scenery: and less than one hundred miles away the traveler finds himself in almost another world. The climate has changed into the cool autumn of the temperate zone, the products are altogether different, the houses of another style and structure and the people and customs appear to belong to a past century.

Here the Church of Rome has enjoyed undisputed sway since the time of the Spanish conquest, and the most intolerant fanaticism prevails. Against this mighty opposition the missionaries have had to press themselves in the power of God, and the effort has not been altogether unsuccessful. Although in three different places mobs have been raised, yet no harm has come to any one and the result has been rather a reflex influence in favor of the missionaries. Stations have already been opened in four different towns while the itinerating work has carried Bibles and tracts into many other places throughout the republic. Whole provinces wait for the first coming of the missionary and large towns have not yet seen even a colporteur.

In many ways the people of Ecuador are an attractive race. Naturally they are quiet and gentle, and only when the fires of fanaticism are roused do they display their capacities for wickedness. The larger part of the inhabitants are engaged in farming. The whole republic has less than fifty miles of railroad and the traveler goes either on horseback or afoot with his baggage carried on pack mules or on the backs of men.

The country offers a blessed opportunity for Gospelwork. Away to the east across the Andes lies a vast unexplored region inhabited by Indians, without a single missionary. Who will go?

Anyone desiring further information about Ecuador may address the Gospel Union, Kansas City, Mo.

A Prince Weds a Native Convert

In his history of the American Mission in Egypt, Rev. Dr. Watson relates the fact of the marriage of Bamba, a young Egyptian girl convert from the Cairo Mission School, to the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, son of the renowned Runjit Singh of the Punjab. The young prince, who had been brought up in England, where he had ranked next to the Royal family, and had been a particular favorite with the Queen, was returning to India via Egypt, when he visited the Mission School at Cairo, and first saw Bamba among the other girls. The result of that apparently chance meeting, and of his previous prayers for a Christian wife, was a wedding one June day not long after, and the result to the mission itself was a gift of $5,000, presented by the Maharajah "as a thank offering to the Lord," and a yearly donation of $2,500 as long as his wife lived.

MINISTERS OF THE GOSPEL USE

OXYDONOR

(Trade Mark Registered Nov. 24, 1896)

INSOMNIA.

REV. JOHN H. THOMPSON, D.D., Presiding Elder of Methodist Church, Savannah, Ga., District, writes Feb. 8th, 1899: "Have used OXYDONOR for insomnia and gladly state that a perfect cure was the speedy result."

REV. THOMAS C. MURPHEY, D.D., 3703 Walnut St., Phila., Pa., writes March 11th, 1899: "I have used OXYDONOR with decided benefit."

REV. CHARLES G. ROUSE, Niobrara, Neb., writes Oct. 26th, 1899: "We are still using OXYDONOR as our family doctor, and find it better than all other doctors we have ever found. We used it on our eight-month-old babe for Grippe, which took the form of Pneumonia. It recovered, leaving no trace whatever of the terrible disease."

MR. A. A. SMITH, Broker in Chemicals and Fertilizer Materials, Prudential Building, Atlanta, Ga., writes December 20th, 1899: "I am satisfied I would not be living to-day were it not for OXYDONOR. About fifteen years ago I was badly injured in a railroad accident. I was a complete wreck both in body and mind. After trying noted doctors without any relief, I began the use of OXYDONOR, and am to-day a sound and healthy man."

NEURALGIA.

MR. GEO. C. STEVENS, Phœnix Fire Insurance Co., Danbury, Conn., writes Jan. 4, 1900. "I was seriously afflicted with neuralgia and sleeplessness for some time. After using OXYDONOR according to directions, I am now restored to satisfactory health.

INSOMNIA.

EMILY GRAY MAYBERRY, Alhambra, Cal., writes Oct. 26, 1899: "I procured OXYDONOR five years ago for insomnia, after a close intimacy with it during time specified, my trust in its efficacy and gratitude to the inventor still stands the siege."

ABSORB NEW LIFE

Gently while you rest, unconsciously to yourself, new life teeming with health and vigor steals into your system when you have OXDONOR attached. You then arise feeling a new person. OXYDONOR literally forces disease from the body; it starts into actual and active energy the various organs and compels them to perform the functions for which Nature made them. They permit no waste or morbid matter to remain. Disease is eliminated naturally. No dangerous drugs are needed for this clearance; no embrocations have to be used in an endeavor to draw the useless and dangerous accumulations through the pores; no surgical operations are required to see what is wrong.

There is no difficulty in the use of OXYDONOR—attach one end of the cord to the ankle, drop OXYDONOR, which is at the other end, into cold water, and the treatment is begun.

OXYDONOR will last a life-time, with proper care. There is no periodical outlay required.

OXYDONOR is the result of over 35 years' deep scientific research by Dr. Hersules Sanche, who is the Originator and Inventor. It has been tested and re-tested many times. It is not now on trial. The testimony of tens of thousands of people is conclusive evidence of its great value.

CAUTION.—Beware of Spurious Imitations. Look closely for the inventor's name—"Dr. H. Sanche"—which is plainly stamped on the Genuine.

Miserable Comforters*

THE subject discussed [in the Book of Job] is the mystery of human suffering, and its bearing on the righteous government of the world; this is one of the stock questions of philosophy. Each section of the book is the representation of a different philosophical attitude to this question. The three friends present a cut-and-dried theory of suffering—that it is always penal. They are brought before us as behaving in the usual fashion of persons finally committed to a theory; they pour out stores of facts that make for their view, they ignore and refuse to examine facts that tell against it, and they hint moral obliquity as the real explanation of refusal to concur in their doctrine. Elihu introduces the same theory modified and corrected to date; with him suffering is punishment for sin, but that special kind of punishment which is corrective in character. He accordingly stands for a philosophic school of the second generation; and we are not surprised to find him maintaining his position with as much inflexibility as the friends have shown, and at the same time magnifying his slight difference from them and appearing no less an adversary to the friends than to Job himself.

"Beware lest ye say 'We have found wisdom; God may vanquish him, not man;'
For he hath not directed his words against me,
Neither will I answer him with your speeches."

At the furthest remove from these is found Job, who takes a negative attitude, shattering other theories, but providing none of his own. Of course, no one will understand Job really to accept what some of his words imply, as when he sees in God an omnipotence that judges only to display power. But these wild words are not out of place as a poetically strong representation of the perplexities that encounter one who would explain providential action. Job simply cannot solve these perplexities: he trusts in a divine vindication at some time, but can only pronounce the problem of life insoluble.

Yet another philosophical position is embodied in the Divine intervention. This portion of the book has been often misunderstood. It has been assumed not unnaturally that the Divine intervention must be a final settlement of the question in dispute. When the speeches attributed to God are examined in this light, they are found to be no settlement at all, or what were worse than any settlement, an indignant denial to man's right to question. But such interpretations overlook one important consideration: that in the Epilogue Job is pronounced by the Lord to have said of him the thing that is right, while Job's friends, who maintained the wickedness of questioning, are declared to have incurred the Divine anger. The whole is introduced with the explanation: "The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind." But when we go below this outer form and inquire what is the general drift of the Divine utterance as a whole, we find that its effect is to widen the field of discussion. Job has fastened his attention simply upon evil and successfully maintained to inexplicableness against his friends. The Divine intervention brings out that the good and the great, all that men instinctively admire in the universe, is just as inexplicable as evil. This implies consolation to the human sufferer as well as progress to the discussion. Job had met loss and pain without a murmur; he broke down when long musing made him realize the isolation his ruin had brought him and how he was an outcast from intelligible law. He recovers his self-control when he is led to feel that his burden is only part of the world-mystery of good and evil, for the solution of which all time is too short.

Moulton, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of Literature in the University of Chicago. Pp. 560; price, $2.00. Published by D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, Mass. This extract is taken from the chapter dealing with the literary framework of the Book of Job. The light Dr. Moulton sheds on this difficult book is only a specimen of his treatment of the other books of the Bible, which is singularly lucid and interesting.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Uwanta Snow White Cotton Down Mattress $6.50

If wanted in two pieces, like cut, $7. Freight prepaid to all points north of the south line of Tennessee and east of the Missouri river and of a line drawn directly south from Kansas City. Part of the freight paid to more distant points.

Absolute Perfection. As soft as a $40 hair mattress and to be preferred, because it never packs, is cleaner, more sanitary and never attracts moths. Guaranteed to last a lifetime without making over. They may be returned after thirty days' trial at our expense, if not positively the best mattress that money can buy, and your money will be instantly and cheerfully refunded.

FROM FACTORY TO CUSTOMER. The Uwanta Mattress can be had only of us. If sold by retailers, the price would be from $12 to $15. What is Cotton Down? It is the snow-white selected cotton fresh from the fields, in original bales, made into Cotton Down by being put through our patented process until it is almost as fluffy as feathers. Some call it "felt" when thus treated and it is undoubtedly the best mattress material known to the trade. In ordering give the width of your bed, measuring from the inside of the side rails. All mattresses are 6 feet 3 inches long.

The End at Hand

Signs of the Times Indicating Consummation, by Rev. T. R. Lawrence

IF we look at the accumulated evidence of the signs of the times, we shall see that there is a certain preparation going on in the world for some great change. The nations are more disturbed—more generally disturbed—than ever before. There is a revolutionary spirit in every country in Europe; secret societies, and other societies which are not secret, all animated by the desire to overturn the present order of things. I venture to say that the world cannot go on in its present state much longer without some very important change.

And the preparation for upheaval is clearly seen in the growing secularism, rationalism, and infidelity of the present day. All these things are going hand in hand to prepare the world for the infidel king, for one who will outrage all the laws of propriety, and kill the present ideas concerning true government.

And then, again, there is a preparation manifest in the increasing admiration for all that is clever, learned, and great. If ever the world had a hero after it [illegible] heart fitted to be the idol of this worship of genius, it will be the man whom the Bible calls the Antichrist, for we are told in Revelation of "all the world wondering after him."

Notice, also, the words of our Lord to the effect that the Gospel shall be preached as a witness to all nations, and "then the end will come." That prophecy could never have been fulfilled until within the last six or ten years. It could not have been fulfilled until Stanley and others discovered the great lakes of Central Africa, until missionaries had been sent out to Victoria Nyanza; until explorers penetrated to the heart of Africa, and a band of devoted missionaries established a missionary station there which is going on at the present time.

Observe, too, the parable of the Gospel supper, wherein the invitation went forth and the announcement made, all things are ready, and those who were bidden did not come. Upon this, the invitation went into the highways and hedges, and the people were compelled to come in, that the master's house might be filled, and then the door was shut. Now, the Gospel message went, first of all, to the cities of Palestine, and the Jews rejected the offer; the message went forth through the cities of Europe, and through the streets and lanes of the cities; and the people were invited to come in. But there has been nothing like this present latter half of the nineteenth century for Gospel invitation and preaching by the Salvation Army and other agencies. Emphatically now has the word gone forth, "Go forth into the highways and hedges and compel them to come into my house;" most strikingly do we see that to be a sign of the times, and from it we conclude that the end of the invitation has come and the door will soon be shut.

There was another message which went forth at midnight, just before the coming of the Bridegroom, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." Students of prophecy there have been here and there before, but now the message is repeated again and again. Hundreds of expositors now search the prophetic word and believe the coming of the Lord to be nigh at hand. Never was there such a cry as now, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh."

In Dan. 12:4 we find another sign of the coming of our Lord to be that "many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." Looking at the railway trains and steamers, and the facilities for traveling in the present day we may well say that that prophecy is fulfilled. As it happens, however, there is another meaning to it, which comes out in the Hebrew text, "Many shall run to and fro in the knowledge of the Gospel." Here, then, we see a most distinct sign of the coming of our Lord. The Gospel is being preached on every hand; ministers and lay preachers are running from one end of the world to the other. Conferences are meeting, and from all sides come the fulfillment of the text, "Many shall run to and fro in the knowledge of the Gospel."

The nutritive value of cereal foods lies in the amount of glutenous matter they contain. It is this element which places them in the flesh-forming group of foods. Wheat contains the most and rice the least of this constituent, and the wheat grown in the northwest contains the most of any.

Mrs. J. E. Jewett, of Metuchen, N. J., suffered for nearly half a century from rheumatism, and the manner in which she was cured is best told in her own words. She says:

"The pain was all in my knee joints and was at times almost unbearable. I was unable to get out of doors and could only hobble about the house with a cane.

"I finally bought some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and before I had used the first box I noticed an improvement. After I had taken two boxes I could walk without a cane, and went out of doors freely. Well, I continued using the pills and by the time I had taken thirty-six boxes I was entirely well, and suffered no pain at all.

(Signed) MRS. J. E. JEWETT."

Consumption, Bronchitis and Bronchial Asthma

Diseases which Cause Almost as Many Deaths as Consumption

From Dr. Robert Hunter's Lectures on Lung Diseases

A cold settling on the chest or grippe that goes down to the lungs produces bronchitis, and when it has continued for several months it becomes chronic bronchitis.

There is at first only trifling cough in the morning with slight chilly feelings, followed by a sense of feverishness towards evening. Walking rapidly or going upstairs cause shortness of breath, with a general sense of tightness and oppression in the chest.

As the disease advances the patient begins to raise yellow or greenish-yellow matter; has hectic fever and night-sweats and loses in flesh and strength. From this point, unless arrested by treatment, it goes on rapidly, soon exhausts the vitality and causes death, with symptoms closely resembling consumption and yet not consumption at all.

By careful observation extending through many years, I am confident that fully two-fifths of all the deaths charged to consumption are really deaths by consumptive bronchitis. On examining the sputum and the tissue of the lungs in these cases, we find neither tubercle nor the bacilli germs that are always present in true consumption.

This is a most important fact, for bronchitis is much easier to cure than consumption, every case being curable if properly treated. It is only a seated, chronic inflammation of the mucous lining of the air tubes, and at the worst is as certainly curable in the lungs as such inflammation in any other part of the body.

Consumptive bronchitis is not curable by medicine given by the stomach, nor by those hyperdermically injected, for they never reach its seat. It is only by the direct appplication of medicines to the lining of the bronchial tubes in the lungs that cure is ever effected. The disease is not in the stomach, nor in the blood, but in the lining of the lungs, and there the remedies must be applied.

Nothing but a direct application of healing medicines, antiseptics and germicides to the very seat of the disease will affect the cure of this or any other lung case, and they can be applied only by inhaling them in a gaseous state. The lungs constitute an air cavity, and can be reached medicinally only by medicated air. This treatment was discovered, perfected and first successfully applied by me. It is the only natural, scientific and common-sense treatment ever applied for the cure of bronchial and consumptive diseases. If it fails, nothing else could possibly succeed. But it never does fail, unless mortal injury to the lung structures has taken place before it is applied.

TESTIMONIALS.

ANY WEAK PERSON

Can Gain Strength on Grape-Nuts.

A member of the Chicago Press Club, Mrs. F. M. Black, 76 26th St., Chicago, says she has obtained so much benefit from Grape-Nuts food that she wishes to offer a voluntary testimonial: "Three months ago I had an illness which reduced me greatly, when convalescent I wanted a great deal to eat, but nothing seemed to satisfy me.

"Very soon after a meal I felt that sense of emptiness, 'an aching void' as it were, though really not hungry. The fact is, the food I was then taking was not properly assimilated and I was improperly nourished, which accounted for my lack of vitality and weak condition, constant exhaustion and inability to gain my flesh.

"I started in on Grape-Nuts food, husband laughing good humoredly at the time. I ate it with cream, and the result was most surprising. After the first dish of it I felt a great sense of satisfaction. I have now been using Grape-Nuts but a week; have gained several pounds, the old gnawing has gone entirely. I retire and sleep well at night, whereas I used to awake in the night and was unable to sleep again until I had taken some sort of food.

"Husband is much surprised at the result and I tried Grape-Nuts himself. He is delighted with the food. With best wishes for the great food and its makers, I am, respectfully yours."

Children Helping India

AMONG the contributors to the Relief Fund for starving India are many very young people, whose tender hearts have been touched by the appeal in behalf of the hunger-stricken mothers and children of that unfortunate country. Some of the letters that accompany these offerings are full of earnest Christian feeling. Two good-hearted, dear, little girls in South Dakota last week sent their combined gifts, amounting to $3, in a letter which ran as follows:

CARRIE AND JENNIE HARMAH

ESMOND, S. D.

Dear Editor: We are sorry it is not more, but it will help a little. We send you our photographs also. We thought our friends back East would be surprised to see our pictures in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. From your tal, little Dakota friends,

CARRIE AND JENNIE [illegible] HARMAH.

This noble example [illegible] upon other [illegible] great privilege [illegible] not be lost beside [illegible] little people. It is surely a living [illegible] for [illegible] college, and a very graceful thing [illegible], for an American boy or girl, [illegible] at home cosily with kind parents and among kind friends, to do something for some poor wretched famine child in far-off India, who very likely has neither parents, home nor friends, and who has probably never had quite enough to eat and now has nothing unless strangers give a little. A gift like that of Carrie and Jennie will save a life—yes, probably several lives. If every child in this Union, who is willing to try to save some boy or girl in India, were to send a gift to the Fund—with a little, earnest prayer for a blessing upon it—the good missionaries and distributors (who receive the food and medicines procured with those gifts, sent to them through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD) would be able to feed a great multitude. Thus the children of America would become the providential means of saving many, many precious lives.

Cheer from Armenia

LETTERS from the various mission stations in Armenia, to the support of which the readers of this journal have generously contributed, have been received during the past week and all contain encouraging reports of the progress of the educational work among the orphans. Miss Myrtle Foote writes from Urfa:

Dear Friends of The Christian Herald —Your letter containing draft for the support of orphan boys was received. Miss Shuttuck is now in England, on her way to America. You will probably see her soon and she will be glad to tell you all about the boys. They are a bright promising lot, and well worth educating.

From Harpoot comes a touching letter from a young Armenian girl:

Our Noble and Dear Benefactors —Again and again we express our thanks to you, who, in places thousands of miles away, sent gifts to make us happy. We are sixty-six girls, gathered from many villages, and through Christ we have become dear sisters to one another. We divide into bands and these are the names of the bands: The Rising Sun, the Sweetness Band, the Love-your-Companions Band, the Morning Star, the Truth-Speaking Band, the Faithfulness Band, and the Obedience Band. Every month we review together our subjects and read our reports and thus we continue our work. Now I will tell you the work which we do during vacation: We bring wool, spin it, and knit stockings; we make hoods, crochet edging and sew. Besides this, of course we do the housework. All the girls have loving salutations for you, and we always pray that the Lord will give you a thousand-fold for the good things you do. VARTER SARKISIAN.

Letters acknowledging remittances for the support of the orphans have also been received from Rev. George P. Knapp, Harpoot, and Rev. Willis C. Dewey, of Mardin.

The Bible in Bengal

Rev. N. Madsden, writing from Bengal to the American Bible Society, says: "I find that during these nine or ten years of missionary work I have sent into circulation about three thousand Bibles and Testaments, and over fifty thousand Bible portions."

CORNISH PIANO & ORGAN INSTRUCTOR

NEW 1900 STYLES PIANOS from $155

Every Cornish American Piano and Organ is sold direct from our factory to the ultimate purchaser, without the intervention of the agent, the dealer or the middleman, thus enabling us to sell at wholesale cost. The only profit added to the actual cost of construction is our own, and that is a small one. It is the enormous number of Pianos and Organs we sell every year that enables us to keep the prices so low and to give such value for money that every instrument we sell is almost a gift at the price.

As far as we know, there is no other firm of manufacturers of high-grade Pianos and Organs who sell their goods exclusively to the general public at factory cost. It is possible, of course, to buy a Piano or Organ direct from any firm of piano or organ makers; but as in every other case, agents and dealers have to be protected, the lowest factory cost can never be quoted.

We added 20,000 square feet of floor space to our factory last year

Always Ready

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 1. Luke 12: 35-40

MUCH time is wasted by students of prophecy in the effort to find out the exact, or approximate date of Christ's second coming. If they could succeed they would, to a certain extent, defeat Christ's purpose in concealing the date. His object in stating the certainty of the event and not disclosing the time, was to have his people in a condition of constant readiness, which, in his mind, was better than having them get ready for a definite period. The familiar story of the clergyman and the miller is an illustration of this principle. The clergyman had occasion, one Monday morning, to consult the miller, who was one of his trustees. He, therefore, called at the mill. The miller came out of the cloud of dust, with which the air of the mill was full, to greet his pastor. But when the latter held out his hand to shake hands, the miller drew back and showing his own hands covered with dust, said apologetically: "I did not expect a visit from you, please excuse my dirty condition." The clergyman said: "Do not apologize. I hope that when my Lord comes, he will find me, as I find you, engaged in my duties." Christianity is a matter of condition, of being. The true Christian is not a man concerned about the end of his life and worrying about his own safety; he is a man who has the spirit of Christ, the sweet, loving helpfulness of him who "went about doing good;" and not the servant who has neglected his duties and needs to make a hurried performance of them at the last.

The blessing Christ pronounces on those whom, at his coming, he will find watching, may come upon those who are peacefully asleep in their beds, or engaged in the office, the store, or the factory at the moment of his coming. His injunction to watch is not a command to leave our duties that we may spend our time in church and prayer-meeting. The wakefulness is spiritual alertness, as opposed to spiritual indolence. In the parable of the ten virgins (Matt. 25: 1-13) the wise, as well as the foolish, virgins went to sleep. They were not blamed for doing so. The fault of the foolish virgins was that they were not prepared for the delay in the bridegroom's coming. The fault of those whom the five foolish virgins represent, is that theirs is only a surface religion. They have no reserve of religious principle which would enable them to meet an emergency. We all know such people. After they have made a profession of faith, they go back to their worldly pursuits in their old spirit, find their enjoyment in worldly amusements and perform their religious duties in a perfunctory manner. As a matter of habit, or as a concession to the opinion of their religious associates, they go to church and to the young people's meeting, but their heart is not in that kind of thing; their thoughts are in the world and dwelling on worldly matters. These are the people who are always asking what harm there is in dancing, card playing, or an occasional visit to the theatre. Their questions show that religion does not satisfy them and that they hanker after the world.

Readiness to meet Christ consists in having his spirit, in love of him, in a continuous effort to please him, to do the things that he would do if he were here and that he likes to have his followers do. And this not by spasmodic exertions, but as the natural outflow of the heart. It requires no effort on the part of a loving husband or father for him to make his wife or children happy; he does the things that will please them because of the love that is in his heart. He may not spend all his time with them; there may be hours in the day when he does not think of them at all. His thoughts are on his work, but deep down in his heart the love for them lies secure and his affection never wavers. That is the kind of love Christ expects of his people. Those who love him so, will be always ready to meet him. They keep clear of all entanglements, all associations, all occupations which would separate them from Christ.

THREE BOOKS ABSOLUTELY FREE

Atlas of the World

And City Guide.

This is the most comprehensive and valuable book of its kind ever published. The maps are not cheap prints—they are printed just as finely as those in books 10 or 100 times its size—are all in four and five colors. The maps cover not only the world in a general way, but many of them are in detail, showing the most important points in the whole world which anyone might want to find. In addition to the maps and possibly not less valuable, is a fund of statistical and other facts of great value for daily if not hourly reference. It contains 64 pages 3x6 inches, handsomely bound in imitation leather, and is especially designed for pocket use.

Samantha at Saratoga.

This is Josiah Allen's wife's best book. Contains 272 pages and nearly 100 illustrations, many of the latter by Opper of Puck. Is handsomely bound in stiff paper covers. Is without a doubt the funniest book of the century. Our edition has all the reading matter and illustrations contained in the $2.50 edition.

Comprehensive Webster Dictionary

Contains nearly every word in common usage, and fully answers the purpose of at least three out of every four people. A new device shows the plural forms of all the nouns. Another points out about 5000 especially difficult words; but the greatest of all achievements in modern dictionary making is the addition of 25,300 words to this dictionary by means of a single page, called the "Columbian Word-Builder." It has 12 departments, including a Gazetteer of the World, Letter Writer, Social Etiquette, Punctuation, Postal Guide, etc. It contains 192 pages 3x6 inches, bound in imitation leather covers, and is especially designed for pocket use.

OUR UNPARALLELED OFFERS.

The following offers are absolutely unparalleled in the history of publishing. Farm and Home, our national semi-monthly, now in its twentieth year, is published in four editions—Eastern, Western, Southern and Canadian. The regular subscription price is 50 cents a year, and it is the brightest farm and family paper published. A year's numbers make a volume of over 500 pages. It now has nearly 300,000 subscribers, but in order to introduce our paper into thousands of homes where it is not now taken, we make the following propositions:—

50 cents for 15 cents. We will send Farm and Home six months with either the Atlas or the Dictionary as above described for 15 cents, the books being sent postpaid.

75 cents for 20 cents. We will send Farm and Home six months with both Atlas and Dictionary as above described for 20 cents, the books being sent postpaid.

$1.00 for 25 cents. We will send Farm and Home six months with the Atlas, the Dictionary and Samantha at Saratoga as above described for 25 cents, the books being sent postpaid.

In payment for the above you may send silver or stamps. Each of the books retails for 25 cents postpaid, and Farm and Home alone for six months costs regularly 25 cents.

Address all orders to FARM AND HOME, Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, Ill.

The Mormon Tablets

A READER of this paper, Mrs. Emma D. C., of Potter Hollow, N. Y., writes concerning the copper plates said to have been found by Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism: "In what language were they," she asks, "and where are they supposed to have originated?" This is not a new question, but one that has been asked a great many times, especially during the recent anti-Mormon agitation on the Robert's case. The plates were claimed to have been found on the west side of a grassy hill, about four miles from Palmyra, Wayne Co., N. Y. They had lain in the ground, the Mormon leaders mendaciously declared, in a box formed of slabs of stone, tightly cemented together, for some fourteen hundred years. Joseph Smith visited the place after being informed of the exact spot in a revelation, and secured the plates on September 22, 1823. The records were engraved on plates which had the appearance of gold. Each plate was about seven by eight inches, being not quite so thick as common tin. They were covered on both sides with engravings of something like a jumble of Egyptian, Chaldaic, Hebrew and Mexican characters, bound together in a volume, as the leaves of a book, and fashioned at one edge with three rings running through the whole. This volume was about six inches in thickness, and a part of it was sealed. The characters or letters upon the unsealed part were small and finely engraved. The whole book exhibited many marks intended to indicate antiquity, and the work showed much skill in the art of engraving. With the record, it was claimed that there were also found two transparent stones, clear as crystal, set in the two rims of a bow.

These were in use in ancient times by persons called seers, and by their use they received revelation of things distant or things past or future. Nobody but a few of the inner Mormon circle of leaders have ever claimed to have seen the plates. It has been asserted that the whole Book of Mormon, so-called, was copied or adapted from a MS. written by Solomon Spalding, of Ashford, Conn., in 1872, the adaptation being made by Sidney Rigdon, afterward the associate of Joseph Smith. It is universally accepted as a wilful imposture, except by the Mormons themselves.

Finding Spiritual Comfort

Our daily mail contains many letters, of which this is a fair illustration. It is from a reader in Chicago:

It is one of the greatest delights of my life to give my testimony of approval for your enterprise in giving to the public such cheap and in every way satisfactory editions of the Book of books. I speak as one who knows, as I have a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Indexed Revised Version, a copy of the Red Letter New Testament, and also a copy of the London Art Bible, all of which are in constant use. I refer to the Indexed Bible when I want the Revised Version and a ready reference; to the London Art Bible when I want my subject illustrated by a superb picture, and to the Red Letter New Testament when I want a "comforter." This Book I find a unique and satisfactory effort, being just the correct size to carry "abroad," as dear grandma used to express it. One certainly gets their "money's worth" from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. You have my sincere thanks, and my prayers for your future success and usefulness.

Chicago, Ill. MRS. E. C. REESE.

Cathedral Bells on a Tree

The cathedral in Pietermaritzburg, South Africa, a correspondent writes, has no belfry, so the bells are set up in primitive fashion upon trees at the back, and the ringers are natives. For a long time it has been known as "Colenso's Cathedral," in memory of the first Bishop of Natal, who now lies buried within its walls. Bishop Colenso was the author and editor of many books in the Zulu language. The natives, amongst whom he was deservedly a great favorite, knew him best as "Usobantu" ("Father of the people"). He died in 1883. What was until very recently but a small hamlet close to the banks of the Tugela, the town of Colenso, is also called after the Bishop. A few weeks ago it was the scene of an important battle.

NEW HOME RUPTURE CURE

Remarkable Method that Heals Any Rupture Without Pain or Danger

No Operation or Detention From Work —Is Cheap, Safe and Sure.

Dr. W. S. Rice has backed up with convincing facts his statement that rupture can be cured at the patients' home without pain, danger operation or detention from work. He has invented a cheap and reliable method that has met with marvelous success and thousands of people ruptured for years have been permanently cured. It cured R. M. Wilsie, of Brandon, Wis., who had been ruptured 20 years. Mrs. M. E. Smith, Rockingham, Vt., was badly ruptured and cured herself by Dr. Rices' method. Wm. Bigford, Bishop Mills, Ont., tried various trusses with no success and finally cured himself by the Rice plan. Jacob Lindner, Drums, Pa., owes his cure to Dr. Rice. G. Nilson, Sogn, Minn., has a double rupture and calls Dr. Rice's method a God-send.

Several thousand cases are reported cured by this remarkable method and as it is very low in price, easily used, adapted to either sex, adults or children, every ruptured person should at once investigate it. Write to Dr. W. S. Rice, 392-D, Main St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a full description, so you can cure yourself in a few weeks, long before the heavy work of the springtime begins. Do not fail to write to-day and if you know of others afflicted, send their names for this wonderfully valuable information. They will appreciate your kindness.

How a Sunday School Was Founded

A READER of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—Mrs. M. A. B., who resides in Utah—recently wrote to this journal, setting forth the great need of Sunday School work in her immediate neighborhood. Her letter was referred to the American Sunday School Union, whose New York manager—Rev. E. P. Bancroft, 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.—communicated with her and gave the necessary supplies and full instructions for "planting" the proposed Sunday School. The sequel is told in the following letter from the lady herself to Mr. Bancroft:

The books and all other literature were received some time since, but I did nothing about organizing till after the receipt of your letter. Last Saturday I sent a note to each family, inviting them to meet at the school house for the purpose of organizing a Union Sunday School. I was greeted by about twenty. We read John 14 and sung a hymn, then united in the Lord's Prayer. I then told them of the Society and its work, and what had been sent me for this place. After this they elected their officers, selecting my unworthy self as their superintendent. I would so much rather some one else had been chosen; but I shall do my best, leaving the rest to God. There were nine adults and eleven children present. We called the Sunday School the "State Line Union Sunday School," and Mrs. Carrie McBurney is our secretary. This is just a small place, and there has been existing among the people here quite a little spirit of unfriendliness; but all are glad of the Sunday School, and think it will do more to unite the people than anything else. I am a stranger, having only been here since November, so have no such feelings, and it may be that that fact will help a little, too. Pray God's blessing to rest upon the work and that it may bear good fruit. Later on I will endeavor to send you a donation toward the help rendered; at present we will have to get some song books and the next quarter's supplies. MRS. M. A. B.

This lady is one of a large number who have been enabled, through the aid of the A. S. S. U., to establish Sunday Schools in sections where the people were absolutely without any religious privileges whatsoever. In nearly every instance the schools have thriven wonderfully, and not a few have developed into live evangelical churches. There are many localities in the thinly populated States and on our frontiers where Sunday Schools are surely needed, and this fact opens opportunities for many to become personally identified with such a work. Thus a donor in some village town or city, by a gift of $25, can be the means of starting a new and much needed Sunday School, and it can be supported on a yearly gift of from $15 to $30. It is a work which many a Christian man or woman, desiring to do something for the Master, can undertake through the American Sunday School Union, and the school so started will be his or her own special and exclusive benefaction or gift. A hundred needy localities are appealing for just such schools.

Cod Liver Oil is a food and the greatest care should be exercised in its selection.

Peter Moller's Cod Liver Oil is the best oil that fifty years of continued scientific research has produced. By the process now employed the oil is kept from contact with the atmosphere from the beginning of the process of manufacture until it is safely corked up in bottles, thus preventing contamination of any kind and excluding all impurities.

Give this new oil a trial. Ask for Peter Moller's Oil, and see that the bottle—a flat, oval one—bears our name as agents. Notice the date in perforated letters at bottom of the label.

Tartarlithine Cures Rheumatism

The editor of the New Albany (Ind.) Medical Herald recently published an article on Rheumatism in which he said:

"But not until recently, when Tartarlithine has been employed by us, have we attained results that were even fairly satisfactory in the treatment of gout and rheumatism. By the employment of this drug I have been able to relieve some of the most distressing afflictions of this class, and now regard Tartarlithine as the most valuable remedy at our disposal in the treatment of this class of affections. In rheumatism and in gout Tartarlithine can be administered with confidence."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail.

THE GREATEST OFFER EVER MADE

To Bible Students Comprising 6 STANDARD BIBLE-STUDY BOOKS FOR ONLY $6

All New and Perfect.

IS NOW LIMITED TO ABOUT 3,500 SETS

The late great advance in the cost of paper and all book-making material compels us to give notice that we cannot agree to furnish a single set beyond the number advertised at the present marvelously low price.

Ministers, Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students will surely make no mistake in securing a set of these great books before the edition is exhausted.

We have had a Wonderful Sale of over 75,000 of these Bible-Study books, and the continual voluntary testimony is: "Do not see how you can furnish such great books printed so clearly and plainly, and bound in such an excellent and handsome manner at so small a price."

CHRISTIAN HERALD readers alone have lately purchased of us over 5,000 of these books, and we have yet to learn of ONE not fully happy, grateful and satisfied.

Take Notice! Edersheim's great Life of Christ is worth alone the price of the full set to every Sunday School Worker, as the International Lessons will be on the Life of Christ for eighteen moths, commencing with the beginning of the year. It is in two large volumes containing 1,524 pages, very clearly printed on fine white paper, and is handsomely and durably bound in silk Cloth. It is considered by some of our most thorough Bible Scholars as the best Life of Christ published and is having a very large sale. It formerly sold for $6.00.

Order at Once So As to Be in Time. You run no risk, as we guarantee safe delivery of every box of books, either by express or freight, and also guarantee that the books will be just as represented and perfect in paper, printing and binding.

CHOICE OF TWO PLANS AS GIVEN BELOW. . . . .

We have never asked for a testimonial, but are receiving them by the thousands from wholly satisfied purchasers. Notice what they say:

CONEMAUGH, Pa.
SIRS:—I have received your books all right; they are a wonder for the money. I am more than pleased with what I got; you did everything you said in your advertisement.
Respectfully,
REV. GILBERT NEILSON.

MT. MORRIS, Ill.
GENTLEMEN:—The six great Bible study books have arrived in excellent condition. I am delighted with them. I found the paper, the type and the binding all better than my expectations.

ATHENS, O.
S. S. SCRANTON & Co., Hartford, Conn.:
GENTLEMEN:—The Bible study books are certainly a genuine bargain. The wonder is that they can be sold for the price. I have certainly appreciated the value of the books as helps in Bible study, and shall not fail to recommend them to my friends, Very truly,
A. A. ATKINSON.

YPSILANTI, Mich.
MESSRS. S. S. SCRANTON & CO.:
DEAR SIRS:—The set of books are at hand, and I have carefully examined them. I wish to say for the benefit of anyone interested in books that this is another marvel of the nineteenth century.
Yours very truly, L. L. JACKSON,
State Normal College.

HARRIMAN, Tenn.
S. S. SCRANTON & Co., Hartford, Conn.:
GENTLEMEN:—We received to-day the six "Bible Study Books." They are all right. We have bought a great many books, but are forced to say that this is the most satisfactory purchase ever made. Yours truly, (Rev.) J. E. STUART.

WAKARUSA, Ind.
S. S. SCRANTON & Co., Hartford, Conn.:
GENTLEMEN:—The set of "Bible Study Books" which I ordered some time ago were received all O. K. I am greatly pleased with them. Cannot see how you can sell books so cheaply. The books are worth three times the amount you ask for them. Have shown them to some of my friends, who have signified their intention of ordering. Yours truly, JACOB K. BIXLER.

STREATOR, Ill.
S. S. SCRANTON & Co., Hartford, Conn.:
GENTLEMEN:—The books arrived safely this dale. They are, indeed, splendid—much better than I expected. They would be a decided bargain to the purchaser at twice the price. Your books have my most hearty recommendation.
Yours truly. JAMES GEE.

BILLERICA, Mass.
S. S. SCRANTON & Co., Hartford, Conn.:
GENTLEMEN:—I am much pleased with the books, as they are superior to what you advertised them to be. With such good printing and binding, they are worth more than twice the price you ask. Yours respectfully,

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

By Alexander Cruden, M. A. Complete in two parts.

Contains 750 large, octavo pages, handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Christians of all denominations know that Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture, and, next to the sacred writings, no volume better deserves a place in the library of the Bible student than Cruden's Concordance to the Holy Scriptures.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, AND BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's, Glasgow, Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's, York, and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen.
A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testament—1380 pages, bound in cloth.

It is enriched with the results of learning, the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shone, and the expository labors of scholars and critics. Far in advance of the older works now in use, this explanatory and practical commentary has been prepared by three eminent divines, distinguished alike for their scholarship and their piety. While this is the most practical, suggestive, scientific and popular commentary yet published in this country, its compact form and convenient size, together with the immense amount of matter it contains, forming an encyclopædia of biblical knowledge, render it also at once the cheapest and most economical.

Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor of The Sunday School Times: "I do not know of its equal, within its scope and cost, and I believe it will have, as it merits, a very wide circulation, and will do great good."

Rev. John H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "This immense book deserves a place on the table of every Bible student. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars."

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH (2 Vols.)

The Authorized American Edition. By Alfred Edersheim, M. A., Oxon, D.D., Lecturer Oxford University.

Two volumes, regular price $6.00. Royal 8vo, 1,524 pages, handsomely bound in silk cloth.

A famous book for clergyman, student or general reader. Its long continued success and the many favorable notices are sufficient evidence of the popularity this new edition will achieve. Gives a full account of the society, life and development intellectual and religious—in Palestine, to serve as a frame and background for the picture of Christ. The fresh study of the text of the Gospels makes the book a historical commentary on the Four Gospels.

This great life of Christ will prove particularly valuable to every Sunday School worker, as the International Lessons will be on the life of Christ for eighteen months.

The Sunday School Times recommends it: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time. The book is written not for the learned alone, but rather for the generally intelligent Christian reader."

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

By the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, M. A., of Cambridge; and J. S. Howson, D.D., of Liverpool.

Contains 1,014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc., is printed on the same quality of paper, and is the same in size as "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," and bound in uniform style. There is no work that will compare with this in giving a life-like picture of the great apostle and the work which he did.

SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE

Edited by William Smith, LL.D., Classical Examiner of University of London.

Contains 1,024 large octavo pages printed on excellent paper, finely illustrated and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. An indispensable aid to ministers, teachers, families, Sunday School superintendents and Bible readers generally. This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language.

8. Address all communications intended for this department, EDITOR THE MAIL BAG,
The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

These Questions Will be Answered April 25

1. What is probably the greatest distance at which lightning may be seen from a cloud just above the horizon?
2. Of how many stars is the Southern Cross composed? What is its form and how far north is it visible?
3. How far may law properly interfere with a man's injury to himself?
4. What is supposed to be the origin of the bridal veil?
5. What is the meaning and origin of the proverb, "A miss is as good as a mile"?
6. What is the difference between liberty and license, and can there be personal liberty where there is law?
7. What is the meaning of the word "wisdom" as used in the Old Testament?
8. Since we are divinely taught to pray day by day for the forgiveness of our sins, of what avail is the exhortation "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect"?
9. What is the origin of the term Yankee?
10. Is the teaching of Scripture about the final judgment intended to convey the idea that there will be one set time of judgment for all mankind, or is it warrantable to believe that each man is judged separately? Can one hold the latter theory consistently with Bible teaching?

Questions of the Week

1. Were the character, career and destiny of Judas known to Christ, and, if so, why did he choose him as one of his twelve disciples?

Christ knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man (John 2: 24, 25). He himself says: "I speak not of you all; I know whom I have chosen; but that the Scripture may be fulfilled, "He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me" (John 13: 18). This latter passage gives the Scriptural reason for the choice. W. P. ANDREWS.

2. Does hypnotism or personal magnetism bear any relation to the spirit of divination, cast out by Paul (Acts 16: 16), or the unclean spirit, cast out by Christ (Luke 4: 33)?

There is no necessary relation between hypnotism or personal magnetism and the evil spirits mentioned in the foregoing question. Evil persons may use their hypnotic or magnetic powers for evil purposes. On the other hand good people can and do use such powers with good effect. C. S. SHORT.

3. What was the first war of the human race of which we have any record?

The conquest of Chaldea by the Elamites, 2286 B.C. Kudur Nakhunta, an Elamite king, overran Chaldea, taking all the cities founded by Sargon and his successors, and set up the Elamite Dynasty. JAY W. ELLSWORTH.

4. Where on the earth's surface does the day begin?

The day begins on the meridian of 180 degrees east or west from Greenwich. Practically, the line zig-zags at a few points so that places near each other but on opposite sides of the meridian, may have the same date for any given day. In this way, the Friendly Islands, about 170 degrees west longitude, are the first lands to see the light of each new day. The Island of Attu, 170 degrees east longitude, the most westward of the Aleutian Group and belonging to Alaska, is the last place to see the sun set on any given day.
MINERVA MANNING.

5. What are we to understand by the land of Nod, spoken of in Genesis 4: 16?

The land east of Eden, to which Cain fled after he had murdered his brother Abel. The Hebrew word is translated Naid in the Septuagint. It means "the land of flight or exile." It would be fruitless to undertake to point out its exact locality in Asia because great scholars differ as to the location of Eden. Its location is unknown other than that it lay east of Eden.
ADA L. MCJUNKIN.

6. Seeing that God said after creating Adam that it was not good for man to be alone, and inasmuch as Christ upheld the marriage institution, why did St. Paul, in I. Cor. 7: 27, advise the man who had been loosed from a wife not to seek a wife?

Marriage is not mandatory but voluntary. St. Paul's advice to the ex-husband, to "not seek a wife," is grounded on expediency. "It is good for a man to be as he is" (unmarried), he says, because: (1) The rising persecution affects him alone, while the persecution of the married man is intensified by the sufferings of his family. "Such (as marry) shall have tribulation in the flesh" (ver. 28). Their domestic responsibilities would become grievous burdens in the following troublous times; (2) his personal consecration is unhindered by the marriage tie. We can readily understand that just such advice might have been given by a wise and faithful pastor among the Covenanters or Huguenots, to a member of his flock contemplating marriage in a season of sharp persecution. Paul had no disposition to speak ill of the marriage relation.
HIRAM KING.

7. What was the origin of the Apostles' Creed?

In its present form it is first found in the Psalter of Pope Gregory the Great (540-604 A.D.). The greater part of its contents, however, was known to the fathers of the Church, and most of its expressions are quoted by them. It clearly originated in an expansion of the formula of baptism into a baptismal confession. Since the second century its essential features have been fixed. The legend that each apostle supplied a clause of the creed has no foundation in fact, though its contents are "apostolic truth taken from the Bible and summarized" (Luther).
G. E. KRAUTH.

8. What is the origin of the expression, "The power behind the throne?"

Pitt, Earl of Chatham, in his speech of March 2, 1770, said: "A long train of these practices has, at length, convinced me that there is something behind the throne greater than the King himself." Dr. Samuel Johnson, who reported the proceedings of Parliament at that date, states that he wrote this in a garret, on Exeter street, London.
S. M. CAMPBELL.

9. Which is the most costly metal known to man?

Gallium, according to the highest scientific authority. One pound of this metal is valued at $68,000. Its properties are said to have been predicted, by Mendelejeff, in advance of its discovery. The metal was actually discovered by a Frenchman in 1875, while examining zinc-blende under the spectroscope. It is found in very small quantities in some German zinc mines. It is very hard; melts at 86° fahrenheit. When melted it is silvery white. The values of metals, from gallium down to gold, as said to be accepted by the highest scientific authorities, are as follows: Gallium is worth $68,000 a pound avoirdupois; rubidium, $9,500; thorium, $8,300; indium, $4,400; arium, $3,600; rhodium, $2,500; barium, $1,900; osmium, $1,000; uranium, $980; palladium, $560; chromium, $490; gold, $300.
HY. RICHTER.

10. Is it right to take for religious purposes the money of a thief or a murderer or a trust, paid to the lawyer for striving to defeat the ends of justice?

If the lawyer take the money for an improper purpose, it should not be accepted for religious purposes. If otherwise, there can be no valid objection. Every criminal, no matter how low and vile he may be, and no matter how violent public clamor may be against him, has certain plain legal rights which must not be infringed. He has the right to a fair and impartial trial by a jury of his peers, and to this end reputable counsel is necessary, who is to see that such proceeding is conducted according to the law of the land, improper evidence rejected, and the defense, if there is any, presented in logical and legal form. Money received for such service, though it be from a criminal, is honestly earned. Even a trust has legal rights which must not be infringed, and a lawyer defending those rights is not open to censure. If, however, an attorney receives money for the purpose of corruptly influencing a court or legislature in behalf of a criminal or a trust, or in any other manner debauches the law of the land, and receives compensation therefor, such money is not honestly gotten.
LOUIS H. KILBOURNE.

Miscellaneous Questions

Constant Reader, Starke, Fla. It was stated by our pastor that when the American army entered Manila there were six saloons, and when the commissioners left last fall there were 300. Is that so?

What he said was substantially correct.

Ninnie. Can a man, who is not a soldier, nor in any way connected with the Army or Navy, be court-martialed?

Only a military man is subject to court-martial. A court-martial is a military court; a military court is not necessarily a court-martial. In places temporarily under martial law a military court is established and a civilian is subject to trial by this court, which in such instance applies the civil law. A soldier on trial would be dealt with under military law. The military and civil codes are not the same, and the penalties of the former would not be imposed upon a civilian; as, if a soldier strikes his superior officer, he may be shot, while a civilian for the same offense would simply incur the penalty for an assault.

Reader, Brooklyn, N. Y. Does not the statement in Matt. 28: 1, "In the end of the Sabbath," prove that Christ rose on Saturday, which is the Jewish Sabbath?

The next few words dispose of the suggestion. They are: "As it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." As at the Passover, when Christ was executed, the sun rises about six o'clock in the morning, it is obvious that this was the time referred to. The first words of the verse should read: "Now after the Sabbath was past."

John Shomber, Lightsville, O. God bless you and the entire staff of the good CHRISTIAN HERALD, so that it may become a still greater blessing to the world. In reading over the names of the contributors to the India Relief Fund, I find that most of the names begin with "Miss" or "Mrs." Why is this? Are our sisters and wives and mothers more liberal-hearted than we of the sterner sex, or are they by nature more sympathetic than we? Or do they love their Saviour and those for whom he died more than we do?

It is unquestionably true that woman is by nature more tender and sympathetic than man where human suffering is concerned; but we do not think this wholly explains the disproportion which our correspondent has noted. The famine in India is a calamity unlike any other in that its terrible effects are most acutely felt in the homes, and the unhappy mothers and children are the greatest sufferers. This is shown by the letters from our good missionaries, who have pictured in the most touching language the scenes in peasant villages where mothers and babes are perishing in appalling numbers. It would be strange indeed if the hearts of our American women did not respond to the appeal of these helpless ones. It is a life-saving campaign for all of God's people, but especially for the mothers and daughters of Christian America.

W. E. B., Harlem, N. D. Was Pastor C. H. Spurgeon a close or open-communion Baptist?

He welcomed to the Lord's table Christians of other denominations, even if they had not been baptized by immersion; but no one could become a member of his church without being immersed. You probably know better than we do, now that you have these facts, whether he would be considered a close or open-communion Baptist.

Young Minister, Ohio. What ought I to do with members of my church who are living in sin? Is it my duty to expose them and have them expelled, or should I keep them under Gospel influence, in the hope that they will reform? If I expel them they will become open enemies of the church. Money considerations have no weight in the question.

If your earnest sermons against the sins in question have no effect, you should seek a private interview with the offenders and point out to them their danger of condemnation at God's judgment bar. You should plead with them and pray with them. Your first duty is to try to save them from their sins. They will probably be glad of a plain, personal talk, for their consciences are doubtless reproaching them. You will be doing a good work in restoring the backsliders. If you find there is no hope of that result your plain duty is to ask them to withdraw or to move their expulsion. No church can afford to retain flagrant sinners among its members.

Subscriber, Marselles, Ohio. Was the baptism of John the Baptist, Christian baptism?

No, John belonged to the old dispensation. His was a revival, a preparation for Christ. He did not preach the Gospel, but only repentance and reformation. He perceived that a greater than he was to come, who would do more than he could and when he recognized Jesus he pointed his disciples to him. You will see from Acts 9: 1-5, that Paul did not regard John's baptism as Christian baptism.

Repentant. A person belonging to the church unintentionally witnesses and takes part in a crime which is never brought to light. This person has secretly grieved over the matter almost constantly since, and is in doubt whether he should withdraw from the church or continue therein. Can there be salvation for such an one and what course should he pursue, believing that no good would come by exposing the matter now, and doubting if those the most guilty would be punished as they deserve, if at all?

If reparation or restitution be possible, it is your duty to make it, at whatever personal cost, through loss or exposure; otherwise, penitence will be unavailing. If the matter is beyond recall and the injury cannot be undone by any act of yours, you can still labor for the repentance of the others by whom you were led into involuntary complicity in the act, and by living a clean, upright and prayerful Christian life yourself, demonstrate the sincerity of your own repentance as well. Possibly a quiet talk with your pastor might be a great aid in guiding you to a right conclusion.

Schoolboy, Oxford, N. C. What is the origin of the eagle as a national symbol and was Rome the first power to adopt it as such?

Ancient Etruria, a county of Italy, west of the Apennines, first used the eagle as a symbol of royal authority. The Romans, 87 B. C. followed their example, and the silver eagle on the top of a spear, grasping a thunderbolt in its talons, became the terror of the world. After Hadrian's time, the eagle was made of gold. The two-headed eagle of the Byzantine emperors was to symbolize control of both east and west. From Rome the custom of using eagles on standards spread to all other European nations, and from European nations to America.

Dr. A. P. Brown, Fort Worth, Tex., sends this hint which may be of service to some:

Your article on the mistake of throwing carbolic acid in the face of a fainting lady, prompts me to suggest to you to say to your million readers that common table vinegar is a prompt and efficient antidote and neutralizer of carbolic acid.

C. R. R., Worcester, Mass. Is not your picture in issue of Feb. 28, page 168, an anachronism? People did not dress like that in Christ's time, nor did they have the modern tools there represented.

We are aware of the fact, but the picture is a contribution to the effort now very general in the Church to bring Christ's life and work into touch with modern life. There has been a tendency to regard all such incidents as belonging to a remote past, whereas Christ's work was for all time. The pulpit is showing how Christ's principles apply to modern life; now art comes in and shows how the events and incidents would appear in modern garb.

Lizzie R., Sing Sing, N. Y. Do the pictures with Samantha's story give one a correct idea of the country and customs in which the travelers are at the time of the story?

Yes, all the pictures, even the drawings, are from photographs of the actual places, and the portraits of the leading characters as well as many others are from life.

C. A. B. B., New Lisbon, Wis. Do you think it right for a pastor and his wife to prepare a banquet at the parsonage, send out printed invitations to a few of his congregation, some Catholics, some that make no profession, but all in the high circle of society, and leave the faithful members out because they are not so popular?

A pastor in his private capacity has the right to choose his own society, just as any other person would do. If the occasion was related to church affairs, it would obviously be ill-advised, if not wrong, for him to do as you describe; if nowise connected with church matters, he did not exceed his privileges. Whether he used them wisely or not is another question, which, in the absence of all the facts, we cannot presume to decide.

S. E. R., Boston, Mass. My wife and daughters are members of a church but I have never joined because I know of no church holding a creed to which I could subscribe. Ought I to join some church even if I cannot agree with all that the church stands for?

We do not see why you should not join a Congregational church or the Church of the Disciples. In both instances the creed is one you could accept if we understand your letter aright. If you could not accept the whole creed we think you would be received if you stated frankly the points on which you differed. When you consider how small is the minority of Christians as opposed to the world, you will see that it is the duty of the follower of Christ to put himself on record as belonging to his army. The Church is not so much an organization for the expression of theological dogmas as an association of individuals who love the Lord Jesus Christ and are treading in his steps. Christ has done so much for you that you ought to make public acknowledgment of your allegiance to him and this is done best by uniting with his people.

... A CHAPLAIN'S EXPERIENCE IN MANILA ...

Chaplain Pierce Tells How the First Protestant Church was Organized in the Philippines and Sketches His Future Plans

A DINNER IN CAMP

IN THE TRENCHES IN PHILIPPINE JUNGLES

A GROUP OF INSURGENTS

NEED of Gospel work in the Philippines is now of a two-fold character. The "boys in blue" far away from home influences, especially need the restraining and supporting power of religion, while the native people whose development is now a matter of national concern, need above all things to learn what Christianity really is. It is therefore gratifying to know that earnest and consecrated men are laboring in the islands with both objects in view. One of these, Chaplain Charles C. Pierce of the U. S. Army, has recently come to America on the sad duty of bringing home the remains of Gen. Lawton and is now about to return.

In the course of a visit Chaplain Pierce paid to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a few days ago, to express his gratitude for the help this journal has rendered in the work, and to tell us of the appreciation the soldiers show of the copies that have been sent to the troops in the Philippines, he said: "I was the first chaplain of the regular army to be stationed in the Philippines, but I found that chaplains of the volunteer regiments had already done excellent work and had held preaching services. No church, however, had been organized, and it therefore fell to my lot to organize one, and I believe that it is the first church of the Protestant faith ever established in the islands. It had its beginning in a service held on September 4, 1898, in the mansion of Mr. Frederick Wilson, an English gentleman residing on General Solano Street, Manila. The sala or hall of his palace runs right through the building and will easily accommodate 500 persons. If I am as successful during my visit home as I hope to be, I shall take back with me funds to erect a modest church edifice. I am anxious that it shall be large enough to serve not only for our soldiers and European residents, but for all the Filipinos whom we can get to come.

"Our soldiers have been very reverent and attentive attendants, so far. All those stories you hear of their iconoclasm, their desecration of Roman Catholic churches, are gross exaggerations. I do not believe that any of them have done wilful and unnecessary injury to the churches, or have done any more desecration than is always involved in a military campaign. On the other hand, I do know that the insurgents were hostile to the Roman Catholic priests and friars and would not allow them to perform their rites. The friars have no fault to find with the treatment of Protestant America. They have under our rule a freedom and a security they would not and did not have under insurgent rule.

"The priests and friars have themselves to thank for their unpopularity. Their proceedings have been utterly unlike those of the Roman Catholic church as we see them in America. An American Catholic would repudiate and denounce such men as have represented the church in Manila. Their greed and rapacity are shocking. I was disgusted one day to see a poor woman whose child was dead, going from place to place begging pennies to make up a fee without which the priest would not conduct the burial service. I learned, too, that there are numbers of couples, living together as husband and wife, who have never been married because they could not afford to pay the sums demanded by the priests for performing the marriage ceremony. When I said in the hearing of an official that in such cases I would be quite willing to marry them without a fee, he said: 'Then I can bring you more than a hundred couples that I know of.' I have also officiated at funerals, at the request of the bereaved families, when there was no money to pay the priests the amounts they required. This greediness is largely responsible for the lack of enthusiasm the people have in their religion. I am sorry to say that it has prejudiced many of them against the very name of religion. But shortly after the funeral I have mentioned, a delegation of Filipino officials waited on me and asked me to hold a service for them. I did so, beginning on Christmas morning, 1898, and have continued them on Sunday mornings since then. We have had fifty-six regular applications from natives for membership since we began and more are coming soon. There has been in former times so complete an absence of sympathy, so utter a disregard for their welfare, that when they find out that we wish to promote their interests and raise them in the scale of civilization, I believe they will be delighted with our rule and will prove a loyal, law-abiding people.

"There is one other matter about which I am deeply interested, and which I should like to present to the generous readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am anxious to establish a club in Manila. A large number of our soldier boys come from good homes and are well brought up. If they had some place to which they could go to read the papers, to write their letters, to drink a cup of coffee, to enjoy a pleasant evening in social talk, they would prefer it to the canteen. So long as the canteen is the only place in which they can have society and cheerful association, so long will the canteen be patronized. Even if that were abolished the remedy would not be found, because the sutler would take its place, and I have learned that, bad as the canteen is, the sutler is worse, in stripping the men and defrauding the Government. The really effectual way of getting rid of the canteen is to have a comfortable club in which no liquor shall be sold. I believe such a rival to the canteen would soon denude it of its patronage. But money is necessary to buy or build and furnish such a club, and it is this I am desirous of getting. The experiment might be made on a very small scale at first, but its success would be so signally and clearly demonstrated that it would be extended. Having been so long a regular reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and having seen how Christlike and generous its readers are when they are shown an opportunity for doing good, I have confidence in explaining my project to them, that they will help me to realize it."

A MILITARY FUNERAL—THE LAST SALUTE

The pictures on this page have never been published before. They are supplied to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD through the courtesy of Chaplain Pierce. Since March 29, 1899, he has been in charge of the Office for the Identification of the Dead, the duties of which involved many sad labors, besides that of seeing that all our poor fellows had religious burial. One of our pictures shows how sorrowful a thing a military interment may be, involving, as it does, wholesale burial. "Siesta time" is particularly interesting, inasmuch as one of the gentlemen (the one in the foreground) is Mr. Wilson, whose dwelling housed the first Protestant church in the Philippines. The midday heat in Manila is intense, and when possible, the residents make a point of taking a rest at noon. The other photographs are characteristic of many scenes which the chaplain has witnessed and in some of which he has borne a part, for it has been his duty to rough it in the camp and trenches with his comrades, so that he might the better know and minister to their spiritual and physical needs.

Scenes in Home-Life

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Prov. 10: 1, ... A wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother

IN this graphic way Solomon sets forth the idea that the good or evil behavior of children blesses or blights the parental heart. I know there are persons who seem to have no especial interest in the welfare of their children. The father says: "My boy must take the risks I took in life. If he turns out well, all right; if he turns out ill, he will have to bear the consequences. He has the same chance that I had. He must take care of himself." A shepherd might just as well thrust a lamb into a den of lions, and say: "Little lamb, take care of yourself."

Christ comes through all our households to-day, and he says: "You take care of the bodies of your children and the minds of your children; what are you doing for their immortal souls?" You see I have a subject of stupendous import, and I am going, as God may help me, to show the cause of parental solicitude, and then the alleviations of that solicitude.

The first cause of parental solicitude, I think, arises from the imperfection of parents on their own part. We all somehow want our children to avoid our faults. We hope that if we have any excellences they will copy them; but the probability is they will copy our faults, and omit our excellences. Children are very apt to be echoes of the parental life. Some one meets a lad in the back street, finds him smoking, and says: "Why, I am astounded at you; what would your father say if he knew this? where did you get that cigar?" "Oh, I picked it up on the street." "What would your father say, and your mother say, if they knew this?" "Oh," he replies, "that's nothing, my father smokes!" There is not one of us to-day who would like to have our children copy all our example. And that is the cause of solicitude on the part of all of us. We have so many faults we do not want them copied and stereotyped in the lives and characters of those who come after us.

Then solicitude arises from our conscious insufficiency and unwisdom of discipline. Out of twenty parents there may be one parent who understands how thoroughly and skilfully to discipline; perhaps not more than one out of twenty. We, nearly all of us, err on one side or on the other. Here is a father who says: "I am going to bring up my children right; my sons shall know nothing but religion; shall see nothing but religion, and hear nothing but religion." They are routed out at six o'clock in the morning to recite the Ten Commandments. They are wakened up from the sofa on Sunday night to recite the Westminster Catechism. Their bedroom walls are covered with religious pictures and quotations of Scripture, and when the boy looks for the day of the month, he looks for it in a religious almanac. If a minister comes to the house he is requested to take the boy aside and tell him what a great sinner he is. It is religion morning, noon and night. Ah! you stuffed that boy with religion; you had no sympathy with innocent hilarities; you had no common sense. A man at mid-life said to me: "I haven't much desire for religion; my father was as good a man as ever lived, but he jammed religion down my throat when I was a boy until I got disgusted with it, and I haven't wanted any of it since." That father erred on one side.

Then the discipline is an entire failure in many households because the father pulls one way and the mother pulls the other way. The father says: "My son, I told you if I ever found you guilty of falsehood again I would chastise you, and I am going to keep my promise." The mother says: "Don't; let him off this time."

A father says: "I have seen so many that make mistake by too great severity in the rearing of their children; now, I will let my boy do as he pleases; he shall have full swing; here, my son, are tickets to the theatre and opera; if you want to play cards, do so; if you don't want to play cards you need not to play them; go when you want and come back when you want to; have a good time; go it!" Give a boy plenty of money, and ask him not what he does with it, and you pay his way straight to perdition. But after a while the lad thinks he ought to have a still larger supply. He has been treated and he must treat. He must have wine suppers. There are larger and larger expenses.

Now the father and mother are waiting for the son to come home at night. It is 12 o'clock, it is half-past 12 o'clock, it is 1 o'clock. The son comes through the hallway. The father says: "My son, what does all this mean? I gave you every opportunity; I gave you all the money you wanted, and here in my old days I find that you have become a spendthrift, a libertine and a sot." The son says: "Now, father, what is the use of your talking that way? You told me to go it, and I just took your suggestion." And so to strike the medium between severity and too great leniency, to strike the happy medium between the two and to train our children for God and for heaven is the anxiety of every intelligent parent.

Another great solicitude is in the fact that so early is developed childish sinfulness. Morning-glories put out their bloom in the early part of the day, but as the hot sun comes on they close up. While there are other flowers that blaze their beauty along the Amazon for a week at a time without closing, yet the morning-glory does its work as certainly as Victoria regia; so there are some children that just put forth their bloom and they close, and they are gone. There is something supernatural about them while they tarry, and there is an ethereal appearance about them. There is a wonderful depth to their eye and they are gone. They are too delicate a plant for this world. The heavenly gardener sees them and he takes them in.

But for the most part the children that live sometimes get cross, and pick up bad words in the street, or are disposed to quarrel with brother or sister and show that they are wicked. You see them in the Sabbath School class. They are so sunshiny and bright you would think they were always so: but the mother looking over at them remembers what an awful time she had to get them ready. Time passes on. They get considerably older, and the son comes in from the street from a pugilistic encounter, bearing on his appearance the marks of defeat, or the daughter practises some little deception in the household. The mother says: "I can't always be scolding and fretting and finding fault, but this must be stopped." So in many a household there is the sign of sin, the sign of the truthfulness of what the Bible says when it declares, "They go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies."

Some go to work and try to correct all this, and the boy is picked at, and picked at, and picked at. That always is ruinous. There is more help in one good thunderstorm than in five days of cold drizzle. Better the old-fashioned style of chastisement, if that be necessary, than the fretting and the scolding which have destroyed so many.

There is also a cause of great solicitude sometimes because our young people are surrounded by so many temptations. A castle may not be taken by a straightforward siege, but suppose there be inside the castle an enemy, and in the night he shoves back the bolt and swings open the door. Our young folks have foes without and they have foes within. Who does not understand it? Who is the man here who is not aware of the fact that the young people of this day have tremendous temptations?

Oh, how many traps set for the young! Styles of temptation just suited to them. Do you suppose that a man who went clear to the depths of dissipation went down in one great plunge? Oh, no! At first it was a fashionable hotel. Marble floor. No unclean pictures behind the counter. No drunken hiccough while they drink, but the click of cut glass to the elegant sentiment. You ask that young man now to go into some low restaurant and get a drink, and he would say, "Do you mean to insult me?" But the fashionable and the elegant hotel is not always close by, and now the young man is on the down grade. Further and further down until he has about struck the bottom of the depths of ruin. Now, he is in the low restaurant. The cards so greasy you can hardly tell who has the best hand. Gambling for drinks. Shuffle away, shuffle away. "What!" says the young man, "time to shut up." Push them all out into the night air. Now they are going home. Going home! Let the wife crouch in the corner and the children hide under the bed. What was the history of that young man? He began his dissipations in the bar-room of a Fifth avenue hotel, and completed his damnation in the lowest grog-shop.

Sometimes sin does not halt in that way. Sometimes sin even comes to the drawing-room. There are leprous hearts sometimes admitted in the highest circles of society. He is so elegant, he is so bewitching in his manner, he is so refined, he is so educated, no one suspects the sinful design: but after a while the talons of death come forth. What is the matter with that house? The front windows have not been open for six months or a year. A shadow has come down on that domestic hearth, a shadow thicker than one woven of midnight and hurricane. The agony of that parent makes him say, "Oh, I wish I had buried my children when they were small!" Loss of property? No. Death in the family? No. Madness? No. Some villian, kid-gloved and diamonded, lifted that cup of domestic bliss until the sunlight struck it, and all the rainbows played around the rim, and then dashed it into desolation and woe.

The statistic has never been made up in these great cities of how many have been destroyed, and how many beautiful homes have been overthrown. If the statistic could be presented, it would freeze your blood in a solid cake at your heart. Our great cities are full of temptations, and to vast multitudes of parents these temptations become a matter of great solicitude.

But now for the alleviations. First of all, you save yourself a great deal of trouble, oh, parent, if you can early watch the children and educate them for God and heaven! "The first five years of my life made me an infidel," said Tom Paine. A vessel puts out to sea, and after it has been five days out there comes a cyclone. The vessel springs a leak. The helm will not work. What is the matter? It is not seaworthy. It never was seaworthy. Can you mend it now? It is too late. Down she goes with 250 passengers into a watery grave. What was the time to fix that vessel? What was the time to prepare it for the storm! In the dry dock. Ah, my friends, do not wait until your children get out into the world, beyond the Narrows and out on the great voyage of life! It is too late then to mend their morals and their manners. The dry dock of the Christian home is the place. Correct the sin now, correct the evil now.

Just look at the character of your children now and get an intimation of what they are going to be. You can tell by the way that boy divides the apple what his proclivity is and what his sin will be, and what style of discipline you ought to bring upon him. You see how he divides that apple? He takes nine-tenths of it for himself, and he gives one-tenth to his sister. Well, let that go, and all his life he will want the best part of everything, and he will be grinding and grasping to the day of his death.

Two young men came to a door of wickedness. The one entered. The other turned back. Why? Difference of resolution, you say. No. The one had a Christian influence, the other had no pious training. The one man went on his evil way. He entered and went on. No early voice accosted him, but the other heard a voice whose tones may have died from the ear twenty years before, saying, "Don't go there; don't go there!" I think it was almost the first time I ever made a religious address—it was in Dr. Bethune's church, Brooklyn—it was an anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association—I came in from my village home, and I remember nothing of that anniversary, except that one of the speakers that night said: "Many years ago two young men stood at the door of Park Theatre, New York. They were discussing whether they had better go in or not. There was an immoral play to be enacted that night. One of them said, 'I will not go in.' The other said: 'Don't be afraid; let us go in; who cares?' The one who entered went on from sin to sin, the terminus of his life delirium tremens, with which he died in a hospital. The other man turned back, came to Christ as his Saviour, entered the Gospel ministry, and he stands before you to-night. What was it that stopped me at the door of Park Theatre, New York, so many years ago. It was a pressure of a hand on my shoulder—the pressure of my mother's hand."

Begin early with your children. But, O, my friend, be careful to make a line, a distinct line between innocent hilarity on the one hand and vicious proclivity on the other. Do not think your children are going to ruin because they make a racket. All healthy children make a racket. But do not laugh at your child's sin because it is smart. If you do, you will cry after a while because it is malicious. Remember it is what you do, more than what you say, that is going to affect your children. Do you suppose Noah would have got his family to go into the ark if he stayed out? No. His sons would have said, "I am not going into the boat; there's something wrong; father won't go in; if father stays out, I'll stay out." Lead, if you would have them follow. Have a family altar. Do not with long prayers wear out your children's knees. Do not have the prayer a repulsion. If you have a piano, or an organ, or a melodeon in the house, have it open while you are having prayers. If you say, "I cannot construct a prayer; I am slow of speech and never could construct a prayer," then take Matthew Henry's prayers, or take the Episcopal Church prayer-book. There is nothing better than that. Put it down on the chair, gather your children about you, and commend them to God. You say it will not amount to anything. It will, long after you are under the soil. That son will remember father and mother at morning and evening prayers, and it will be mighty help to him. And above all, in private commend your children to God. Say, "Here, Lord, I am—all my imperfections of discipline and government—here are these immortals—make them thine forever. The angel that redeemeth us from all evil, bless the lads."

I wonder if the subject strikes a chord in the heart of any man who had Christian parentage, but has not lived as he ought? God brought you here this morning to have your memory revived. Did you have a Christian ancestry? "Oh, yes!" says one man, "if there ever was a good woman, my mother was good." How she watched you when you were sick! Others wearied. If she got weary she nevertheless was wakeful, and the medicine was given at the right time, and when the pillow was hot she turned it. And oh, then when you began to go astray, what a grief it was to her heart!

All the scene comes back. You remember the chairs, you remember the table, you remember the doorsill where you played, you remember the tones of her voice. She seems calling you now, not by the formal title with which we address you, saying, "Mr." this, or "Mr." that, or "Honorable" this, or "Honorable" that. It is just the first name, your first name she calls you by this morning. She bids you to a better life. She says, "Forget not all the counsel I gave you, my wandering boy; turn into paths of righteousness; I am waiting for you at the gate." Oh, yes, God brought you here this morning to have that memory revived, and I shout upward the tidings. Angels of God, send forward the news. Ring! Ring! The dead is alive again, and the lost is found!

India's Bitter Cry

HOW THE MISSIONARIES AND CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN INDIA ARE STRUGGLING TO SAVE THE STARVING PEOPLE FROM DEATH

(SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE)

OUR picture on the first page tells its own sad story of hunger and privation and its blessed story of Christian compassion. It was received by a recent mail from an officer of the Salvation Army at Ahmedabad, India, who sent it to Commissioner Booth-Tucker in New York, to whom we are indebted for the privilege of publishing it. The officer is Miss Case, a lady of culture and refinement, who gave up an excellent position to devote herself to the service of Christ among the people of India. She adopted the native garb, lives on the native food and dwells in a hut like the natives. She even took a native name and is called Col. Nurani, that, following the example of her Lord, she may become of no reputation, that she might lead the poor creatures to him. With the picture she has sent the following graphic description of the situation in her district, which is like that in the other famine districts:

"According to the prognostications of the newspapers, the famine is month by month increasing in severity. It is calculated, however, that it has not yet reached its worst point. Rain cannot be expected until June, therefore distress will grow greater daily. As the resources of the people fail, the number of the starving must necessarily increase. The Government have a terrible problem to solve—the famine is the worst they have ever had to grapple with. In the famine of 1897 and 1898 they received 150 lakhs of rupees [five million dollars] from Great Britain and the Colonies, the contributions of the charitable; but this year, through the sad war in South Africa, they have not been able to receive such help. Yet in the 1897 famine, on New Year's Day only one million persons were in receipt of relief; this year at the same date two million and three-quarters were on the hands of the Government, and since that time the number has nearly doubled. The prospects are gloomy and terrible indeed.

"The high caste people are selling their wives' silver ornaments, and starving themselves in a weary struggle to try and keep some of their bullocks alive, or what can they do next monsoon, if they have no animals to plough with? And yet how fruitless and weary this struggle is, is too plainly seen by the skeletons of the poor, dead cattle to be seen on every hand in the villages. A few low caste people who have managed to get a little capital have been able to do a good trade in skins and bones, but they are only a few, and it is a ghastly thought, reminding us of the vultures we constantly see in the fields holding their carnival of death. Sad sights and sounds are all around us. Yesterday a poor, desolate woman with five children came here, having walked fifty miles to beg us to take her children. She was formerly a woman in respectable circumstances. Daily people come asking us to buy their little ones for a pound or two of grain. A young woman died outside our house a few days ago of starvation.

A Whole Family Dead

"What has increased the sufferings of the poor, is that for the last ten days the most terrible cold snap has set in. We Europeans, in our good houses and with sufficiency of clothing and food and bedding, do not know how to keep ourselves warm—what must be the sufferings of these starving masses? What pitiful stories we hear! In one village, where our people needed a house, one poor starving family to secure the eight pence a month rent, turned out to live on the road.

"One dear European officer of the Salvation Army, who has been laboring heroically among the tribe of Bhils cannot speak of what she sees without tears. Every day as she visits her villagers, she sees poor dead bodies by the roadside. What filled her first with horror is now the common daily sight. Dead and dying people everywhere. A short time since she came across a whole family by the roadside. The father dead, and a little dead child near, and, still alive, the poor mother with a little dead infant in her arms. The dear girl with her heart full of compassion, laid the poor woman's head on her shoulder, and spoke some words of sympathy, but its sudden weight alarmed her, and, looking down into her face, she found the woman had died in her embrace.

"We have twenty grain shops in as many different centres. In these we weekly sell to our over $500 worth of cheap grain at a loss to ourselves of $125 a week. In connection with our grain shops also the very poorest are given free tickets and receive weekly free grain. But the pressure and appeals for this free grain are something sickening to contemplate, and our poor workers are often compelled to withdraw in tears; they are so distressed not to be able to do more.

"In the last famine we were able to do much more, but even the amount of relief we are now giving is a great strain We have so far expended something like $500 in giving weaving work to our Christian people. Now, however, I am thankful to say I have received permission to considerably extend this, and for the next six months we shall have a hundred families regularly kept in work. If we reckon this at five to the family, it will be five hundred people employed and supported. We are thankful to do this, but oh, how small the number, compared to the need and the starving thousands.

"With some few donations from some personal friends, we have sought especially to help the little children. We have now at this time 163 day schools, with an attendance of 4,825 children. Our great desire was to keep these little children from starvation, and hoped to have been able to have given them grain at regular intervals. The numbers, however, are too large to make this of practical assistance to the children, and we have arranged, therefore, that four hundred of the very worst cases shall receive every week enough grain to keep them alive. If only enough help comes in, the four hundred children will become six or eight hundred, always taking the worst cases. They are all in need; none can get sufficient, but we must take the worst first.

"In addition to the orphans under our care in India in the last famine, there is accommodation in our various homes for two hundred more. We have already received about forty under our care, and are believing and hoping that sufficient means will come in to increase these to two hundred. We are also already passing many children to other orphanages.

"As an illustration of the way these little children are thrown upon our hands, I may mention that only this morning an officer of the Salvation Army has written to me to say that last evening a police inspector inquired if the army was willing to take orphan children. The officer inquired what would become of him if she did not take him. The inspector said: 'In a few days through hunger or run over by a cart.' The little fellow pathetically said that his father and mother were both dead, and his sister, had lately died.

"A district officer also came to inform me that a few days since a poor woman with two tiny children came asking relief. He gave her some food, and she ate it, but almost immediately expired. The officer, who is a single man, had the two little children left on his hands—one about two years old and the other about four—without the least knowledge of where they came from, or anything about them. Such little orphans we feel God sends to us, and even if it were our last crumb we must share it with them."

Such problems are presenting themselves in every mission station in the famine districts of India. Through the generosity of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD many of the missionaries are able to solve them. There are now hundreds of children orphaned in the famine of 1897, who were mere skeletons when they were rescued, but are now through the help rendered by our readers, healthy children, with a knowledge of Gospel truth and many of them sincere Christians. On this page is a picture of an assemblage of such children. They are orphans in Mrs. Haig's kitchen in Ahmednagar. Seated on the floor according to Oriental custom, they are about to partake of dinner. Their intelligent faces show how well worth saving such children were.

ORPHAN CHILDREN AT DINNER IN MRS. HAIG'S REFUGE AT AHMEDNAGAR, INDIA

The Relief Ship

We are glad to acknowledge the receipt of many contributions toward the corn for the Relief Ship which will soon be on its way to India. Our readers will be happy to know that we have secured the help of Rev. R. G. Hobbs, of Springfield, Ill., who rendered such efficient service in the former famine. It will be remembered that Mr. Hobbs went to India on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Steamer City of Everett, and personally superintended the distribution of the corn with which that vessel was laden. Mr. Hobbs has undertaken to visit the five great corn States of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas, and arrange for the collection of corn toward the cargo of the ship. Our readers and friends in those States will render a service by communicating with him and reporting to him what arrangements they can make toward the completion of the cargo. Do not wait until the corn is ready, but write Mr. Hobbs at Springfield, Ill., what he may hope to receive. The following appeal which he is issuing will show how earnestly and enthusiastically he is entering into the project:

REV. R. G. HOBBS

"If one hundred people in each of these States will raise the price of one hundred bushels of corn in New York, the work will be done. Will you be one of them? If so, send me your name at once, so that we may know that some one is looking after this matter in your community. You need not raise all the money yourself; you can get others to help you. Start three or four to canvassing for small subscriptions, and the work would be done in a very few hours. Forty dollars will buy one hundred bushels of corn in New York. I appeal especially to ministers of the Gospel! Others can do the work, but pastors will find it especially easy to complete the task. Do not wait, but lend a hand at once. Is it not possible that at least five hundred people in these great States will have sympathy enough with dying people to put bread into their mouths when it is as easily possible as now. Prompt action on your part will put you among the life-savers.

"The starving man in India, receiving bread for his body, will have a heart open to receive the Bread of Life. You will, therefore, help him in two ways. I learned one word in India—julda—hurry. This is the word for this campaign which, if God's people will, may be completed in thirty days. In Christ's name I lay the burden on the shoulders of those who read this. If you can voice the cry of India to the people in your community, some starving people will live who otherwise would die. If the pastor cannot do this work will not you, Christian worker, take it up at once. We are asking for the money to buy the corn in New York so as to get the ship away as quickly as possible. If grain is contributed it can be turned into money."

If there is a prompt response to this appeal, it will be possible to begin loading the ship in a few days, and before the end of April, it will be on its way with the blessings and prayers of God's people to Bombay, on its Christ-like mission. The offer of the government of India to pay all expenses of transportation and to provide the ship, insures the completeness of every gift. Every bushel of corn thus becomes available and is not taxed with the cost of sending it across the sea. The giver will feel that he is as surely relieving hunger as when he gives a loaf to some starving applicant. Who can tell what blessing may come upon his head, in answer to the prayers of the women and children whose lives it may save. And at the last, when the great Judge divideth the people as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats, he may hear the welcome words: "I was an hungred and ye fed me. Inasmuch as ye did it unto these ye did it unto me."

Living the Golden Rule MADE POSSIBLE THROUGH PRAYER

PRECEPTS AND PROMISES

BY DR & MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for April 8. Matthew 7: 1-14.

Golden Text, Matthew 7:12: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"

IN studying the lives of successful men of the past and present, the writer found that many attributed no small part of their success to some motto or watchword that came into life like an influence. With one the motto was, "Do the next thing." With another, "If you undertake to do a thing, do it." With another, "Always in haste, never in a hurry." This lesson contains the mightiest watchwords that have ever been spoken, which have changed not only individuals, but nations also, and the world. Let us store them in our memories this week, two a day as breakfast mottoes, and live, as well as learn them.

Lesson Setting Where? Mount of Beatitudes. When? Year 28, about the middle of the second year of Christ's ministry. Who? Jesus, apostles, multitude.

What? Sermon on the Mount continued. This lesson shows the meaning of the Golden Rule, and the difficulty of living it, which drives us to prayer for divine help.

Why? The underlying principle of the lesson is that worship and humanitarianism are fountain and stream. There can be no true brotherhood of man except among those who feel the Fatherhood of God. This double law of love to God and man, James calls "the royal law," the king of all laws, and its essence is love, for law is but the expression of love. In the words of Miss Frances E. Willard, "Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man." The Golden Rule in modern phrase is, "Put yourself in his place."

Sceptics point to a negative version of the Golden Rule in the Talmud, "What is hateful to thee do not to another," and to another negative version in Confucius, as if to intimate that Christ borrowed from one or the other. But the Talmud is more recent than the New Testament, and Confucius more recent than "the law and the prophets," whence Christ expressly declares that he derived the substance of the Golden Rule, whose positive form is in any case a vast advance on the negative version. Confucius urges men not to harm others, while Christ bids us help them, as we would wish to be helped.

The Golden Rule Unfolded I. Harsh judgment to be avoided, vs. 1-5. 1. Often in judging others we show a character calling for judgment. 2. It is the man with a beam in his own eye who is most likely to become an eye doctor to the neighbor who has only a splinter in his. Other Bible illustrations of wrong judging: Luke 13: 1-4; Romans 14: 1-3; I Corinthians: 8.

II. Lack of judgment is also condemned, v. 6. What kind of judgment is enjoined in the Bible? (Lev. 19: 15; John 7: 24.)

III. To avoid these faults, turn to prayer, vs. 7-11. God's ways with us to be imitated in our ways with our fellows.

IV. Because God is our Father we are to live the Golden Rule of brotherhood, v. 12. "Wherefore," links the Golden Rule with God, who alone can give power, through prayer, to practise it. (See application of Golden Rule to capital and labor, Eph. 6: 5-9.)

V. Only by earnest effort can we practice it, vs. 13-14. Conduct not to be determined by majorities. The right way always narrow, and followed by the earnest few.

Illustrative Personations "Judge not, that ye be not judged." I am a king who has doubly sinned. I have caused a soldier, whose wife I desired, to be set in the front of the battle, so causing his death. A preacher stands before me and tells of a rich man with great flocks, who has taken the one ewe lamb, which is the only possession of a poor man. I order the rich man brought before me to be punished. The preacher says, "Thou art the man." Who am I? David. II Sam. 12: 1-7. (Illustrate other mottoes in the lesson by similar Biblical or historical personations.)

The Unlocked Door of Mercy "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." A poor widow living near Glasgow had an only daughter, who, while greatly beloved, was the source of much pain and anxiety to her mother. She was inconsiderate, giddy, and fond of gay company. Affectionate entreaty and warning were alike unavailing, and at length the sorrow of the unhappy mother culminated in her daughter's leaving home abruptly and going to a disreputable neighborhood in Glasgow, refusing to return. For more than a twelvemonth the Christian mother carried her grievous burden every day to God in prayer. While doing mechanically her work in the household, the prayer was ever in her heart and upon her lips, "Bring back my wandering child, O Lord!" An officer who was well acquainted with the woman, and with her grief, was riding in a procession in Glasgow, when, in the crowd lining the sidewalk, he recognized the face of the girl.

"WITH WHAT MEASURE YE METE, IT SHALL BE MEASURED TO YOU AGAIN"

He at once left his place, and, dismounting, said to her, "Are you not Sarah M——?" "Yes, that is my name," was the reply. "Well, let me say to you that your mother hasn't fastened her door since you went away. I have told her many times that it was unsafe and imprudent for her not to fasten it, but she always says, 'Perhaps my Sarah may come back, and while I live I will leave my door unbolted.'" The sad, dejected child burst into tears, and said, "I will go to my mother this very hour." She returned at once and was received with love and tenderness, not only by her mother, but also by the Christ to whom she turned in penitence.

"Strait is the gate." In another place Jesus says, "Strive, agonize to enter in." A liquor dealer in New York, on the witness stand, asked as to his religion, said, "I have none but the Golden Rule, 'Do as you have been done by.'" That is the easy way, with David Harum's supplement, "Do to another as you expect to be done by, and do it to him first." To do to others as we would be done by does not mean that we will do what we might wish should be done if the case were reversed, but to do what our best judgment would dictate in such case. I have heard of a foolish father who, when one of his girls was fourteen or fifteen years old, gave her the choice of a pony or remaining another year or two at school. The child naturally elected to have the pony, and most children of her age would naturally do the same. The father's conduct was ruled by the child's wishes, and he inflicted on her a grave injustice. It was not a golden, but a tinsel rule that he followed.

Question Points Does Jesus' injunction to "judge not," mean that we shall not make estimates of the character of others? What kind of judging did Jesus condemn? How does a person who judges censoriously bring judgment upon himself? What parable did Jesus afterwards speak that illustrates this principle? Why do we fail to recognize in ourselves the faults which seem to us so great in others?

What kind of people may be classed as "dogs" and "swine"? Why does this injunction not lessen "the white man's burden" and so discourage missionary enterprise? What three states in the suppliant did Jesus represent when he said: "Ask," "Seek," "Knock"? If unwittingly "a stone" is asked for, what answer will the Heavenly Father give? Why should we not wish to have our prayers always answered in just the way we ask them? How is self-love elevated by the Golden Rule? Is it easier to do wrong than to do right? Is self-denial helpful to godliness? What are the pleasures of self-denial? Why is the "broad road" so full of danger? Why does self-indulgence end in disappointment, and self-denial in joy?

Living the Lesson Mrs. Ransom had a delightful habit of selecting some Bible verse to be repeated at the breakfast table and lived through the day. This time it was one form of the Golden Rule: "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." "Now let us make the text work," she said. About three o'clock in the afternoon, Mrs. Ransom found her little Mamie, twelve years old, sitting on the floor and looking thoughfully at six sheets of fancy paper, three of red and three of blue, which she had been wishing for a long month and had just received. Her poor father had not felt he could afford it before, but at last he had given her the money for it that morning, and she was now able to make the paper dolls and dresses and toys which she had been planning. But her half-opened scissors remained motionless in her hand, and her head was in a posture of deep thought.

"Well, Mamie," said her mother, after watching her unobserved for a few moments, "what are you thinking about?"

"O, mother, that's a hard one."

"What?"

"The text."

"What text?"

"The one you gave us for to-day, 'With what measure ye mete.' You told us to make it work, but it's a hard one. You see these six pretty sheets of paper. I've been wanting just six sheets ever so long to make some clothes for my paper dolls and to cut out some stars and crosses and hearts to write texts on the back, and give them away as my Sunday School teacher does. But there's two other little girls just round the corner that are in my class, and they have been wanting some blue and red paper just as much as I have, but they have no father, and their mother is too poor to buy any. Do you think I ought to give them a part of my pretty paper to make the text work? I have waited for it so long and I need it so much."

"I am not going to tell you anything about what you ought to do," said the wise mother. "You must think it all out yourself. It is all between you and God."

"Mother," said Mamie, "they don't know I've got the paper; but I heard them say the other day when we were looking into a store window how much they wished for just one sheet of the pretty red paper. And they haven't near as nice dolls as I have. Oh, that text is a hard one to work. Mother, do you think it would be very wrong if I didn't divide the paper with them?"

"I have nothing to say about it," said the mother. "The paper is yours."

Mrs. Ransom sat down at the window and went to reading, often lifting her eyes to watch the battle between selfishness and duty which was going on in her little Mamie's heart, and lifting her heart also to God in prayer that the right might be victorious.

About half an hour after her conversation with her mother, Mamie suddenly jumped up and ran toward the door. Her mother was just then absorbed in one of Adelaide Proctor's poems and had forgotten the battle for a few moments, and so she said in surprise, "What's the matter?"

"Don't stop me," said Mamie eagerly. "Don't stop me. If I stop to think any more I may not do what I ought to do."

She had learned already that there is a time when deliberation is dangerous, because duty is clear and delay makes room for temptation. Away she ran with two of the red sheets and two of the blue in her hand. She was soon back again with a very happy face, exclaiming, "I made it work and it paid me, for they were so happy and thankful to get a sheet of the red paper and a sheet of the blue for each of them. And the poor mother was so grateful. I was ashamed to think how unwilling I was to give them a part of the paper. O mother, that is a splendid text. I'll try to make it work as long as I live."

A sudden crash in the kitchen below brought a quick flush to Mrs. Ransom's face, as she hurried down to see what sort of destruction her sometimes careless servant had wrought this time. Angry words came to Mrs. Ransom's lips as she saw several broken plates on the floor that had fallen on the way to the tea table. But she thought, I would not like to have my husband speak angrily to me when I break a dish, and this girl is far away from friends and home, and of course did not do this from malice or intention. So she swallowed the angry words and said as calmly as she could, "Never mind this time. Only try and be more careful next time. I will bring down another set of tea plates."

The girl had expected some rebuke and was prepared to receive it in the same spirit, but the kind words were a surprise that touched her far more deeply, and as she said "Thank you, I will be more careful," and turned to hide a tear; she resolved to do her utmost for so kind a mistress. She was a Protestant Swede, and had repeated the text with the rest, as she stood behind Mrs. Ransom's chair, and now she saw with delight how that lady had made the text work, and resolved that her part in measuring back again the kindness she received should not be lacking.

"The text was a great bother to-day," Mr. Ransom said that evening. "It is surely a hard one to work in the fruit business. As I took up a box of strawberries with a raised bottom, which made it really only two-thirds as large as it seemed, and so a full third less than a quart, which the people suppose the baskets to hold, that text popped into my mind, 'With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again.' I said to myself, 'I didn't make the false boxes. All of them are short measure.' But I concluded to-day I wouldn't keep up the lie any longer, even if everybody else did, and I have decided to sell fruit hereafter by weight. Let us call our text the Golden Measure, and as a carpenter carries his rule always about him, carry this golden measure all our lives."

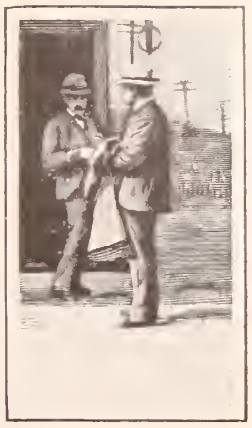
HIS EXPERIMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN NEWSPAPER REVIEWED— AN EARNEST EFFORT WHICH HAS NOT BEEN WITHOUT RESULT



A REPORTER TRIES IN VAIN TO INTERVIEW HIM

ALTHOUGH Pastor Sheldon's experiment in religious daily journalism is now a thing of the past, the influences which spring, in ever-widening circles, from those six days of sincere effort on the part of the Christian pastor, will be felt for sometime to come. Looking at the result of the effort, while it must be pronounced a disappointment in many respects, it is by no means to be set down as a failure. Perhaps the chief element which the paper lacked, under his control, was that boldness and vigor of treatment in dealing with the great evils of our times, which multitudes had been led to expect, and which would have invested each issue with a power and authority that must have commanded the widest attention and respect. But it is now generally admitted that in the limited term of his editorship, it was impossible for Pastor Sheldon to develop fully such plans and purposes in connection with a Christian daily as have been revolving in his brain for years past. To conduct, even with moderate success, a moral campaign through the press, would require many weeks and possibly months, and to effect results in a few days would be unreasonable. All agree that his sincerity and deep earnestness were visible in everything he did in connection with the experiment, and that, with a longer trial and larger experience much permanent good might have been accomplished.

The first autograph copy of the first issue, Tuesday morning, was sent to Mr. Louis Klopsch, marked, "With best wishes. Charles M. Sheldon."

During the whole week of the trial, Mr. Sheldon did not once show a sign of impatience, annoyance or vexation. Innumerable questions came up for instant discussion. "What would Jesus do?" was the test of his judgment in every perplexing problem. At two o'clock each afternoon the sixteen editors and reporters assembled in Mr. Sheldon's room for conference and instructions. Whenever he could not reach a decision on any particular matter on the spur of the moment, he would say: "Leave this. I shall have to think about it."

In a number of cases he was absolutely unable to reach a decision before the week's end; and this was the reason that a number of important questions were not touched upon in his paper. "I know I have made blunders," he said, "but if I have accomplished one good thing—if I have suggested one good idea to any editor for the bettering of his paper, I shall be satisfied."

The initial issue of the Sheldon Edition has already been described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and succeeding issues had the same general characteristics, with the sole exception of the Saturday evening issue, which was exclusively devoted to religious articles, and contained not a line of current news. India Famine Relief work received a good deal of attention from Pastor Sheldon in nearly all the issues, and the great need of the starving people was set forth in eloquent appeals. In the edition of Wednesday there appeared a telegram from Mr. Amos R. Wells, editor of The Christian Endeavor World, explaining the famine needs, and adding these words:

The care and faithfulness displayed by the Interdenominational Committee of Missionaries in 1897, when $189,000 and 90,000 bushels of grain was sent for distribution by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is pledge of like fidelity now. No charge or deduction is made for expenses of distribution, the Missionary Committee giving their services freely. Contributors may therefore rest assured that every cent given to feed the starving will be applied to the purpose for which it is given. This statement is the basis of the appeal which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is now making.

Among the many topics discussed by Pastor Sheldon during his editorial week were these: The Union of the Churches; Tax Dodging; Mormon Propaganda in the Different States; Infidel Bohemian Societies in America; Regenerated Humanity the World's Greatest Need; The Use of Narcotics and Alcoholics Among Children; Temperance and Prohibition; Against Cigarettes; The Ethics of Socialism; Sunday Observance; Prison Reform; Government Ownership in New Zealand; Improving Topeka's Morals in Politics and Business; The Evils of Trusts; The Canteen, and many other subjects of current interest. To no one topic was overshadowing prominence given, and those who looked confidently for a crusade against public vice, infidelity, corruption and other evils in high places, or an attack in any special direction were disappointed. In printing news he occasionally followed the example of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its Bible and Newspaper department and gave the items a moral characterization, though not a text.

There has been nothing sensational in Pastor Sheldon's experiment. Like his preaching, his editorial work has been modest almost to unobtrusiveness, and has aimed to quietly arouse serious reflection in the minds of its readers rather than to excite by denunciation or convince by indulgence in sweeping assertion. Its treatment of all topics has been characterized by fairness and justice, and the great moral principles underlying the subjects discussed have been indicated clearly, yet with moderation.

No estimate of Pastor Sheldon's experiment would be complete without a reference to his leader in Thursday's issue, in which he discussed "The World's Greatest Need." The answer he takes to be "A Regenerated humanity. . . . Selfishness is at the bottom of all the world's trouble. There is not a social wrong, not a ruined home, not a tangled condition of life anywhere, that does not have for its real cause a selfish life. The greatest need of the world is to get rid of this horrible selfishness. It is the sin of all the generations. And as fast as it is taken away by the power of Christ, as he is allowed to come into the daily life, so fast will the life of men on the earth become the happy, strong, beautiful life that God loves to have it." These words are the keynote of the whole experiment.

How Pastor Sheldon himself views his work can only be conjectured, as he is extremely reticent on the subject. He would not even mention the newspaper experiment while addressing his congregation on the following Sunday. He began and ended each day's work with earnest private prayer. It is beyond question that the week was to him one of severe nervous strain. Twice he broke down, the first time being when he tried to tell the assembled correspondents how important to his life the work was. He said the first few words of the sentence—then paused long, amid intense silence, over come with emotion, keeping back tears with difficulty, and breaking the silence at last with an effort and in a trembling voice. The second occasion was when he stood by the presses as the first copy came into being. This time he could not restrain the tears which streamed down his face, though he turned away in an attempt to hide them. Everyone in that room became his friend in that moment. Tears were shed by several of the pressmen, the result of their sympathy for Mr. Sheldon and their appreciation of his earnestness.

It is very evident that the Topeka pastor has the cause of suffering India deeply at heart. From his pulpit, on the Sunday after his famous experiment, he made an appeal to the people of Kansas to contribute a million bushels of corn for Indian relief. He referred to the magnificent corn crop and emphasized what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had already urged, viz.: that the people of the State, from their stores of plenty, ought to give liberally to relieve these starving people. He urged the press of the State to aid in the movement, and expressed the belief that the million bushels could be raised and made ready for shipment within thirty days.

"I do not wish to speak about the paper experiment," he said to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD correspondent, "until I have had time to think and to see for myself what the effect has been."

When asked if he thought the time ripe for the ideal Christian newspaper, he replied: "Yes; decidedly, yes!"

"If I were to run a newspaper permanently," he added, "I would certainly employ only professing Christians. From my managing editor to the galley-boy, every one would be in sympathy with me, through living a truly Christian life, acknowledging the kingdom of God and the necessity of his guidance in the practical work of life."

As to the distribution of the profits of the venture, Mr. Sheldon said: "I could not name the charity to which a part of the profits should be given, until I learned how much the profits would amount to." Hence he was not able to indicate any particular cause to which the money might be devoted, until after the venture was over and an accounting completed.

Attenuating the Man-Christ Jesus

DR. JAMES STALKER predicts a great, imminent warfare upon the present estimate of Christ, as a result of the recent higher criticism. Just before the period of this criticism, especial attention was given by such writers as Renan (French), and Gerkie (English), and Dr. Andrews (American), to the human life and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth. Renan's work was, perhaps, the least consistent and satisfactory, beautiful as it was in literary and descriptive power; Dr. Andrews', probably, the strongest and best. But these books antedated the higher critic. If his positions are regarded sustained as to facts, miracles and teachings of the Saviour, there is to be a new estimate of his character and work. This is Dr. Stalker's view.

As Dr. Stalker says, "The total result of the critical processes, as they are usually applied on the continent, is, doubtless. to attenuate the figure of Christ. His mightiest works and grandest sayings are taken from him; what is left reduces him to a size very different from that in which he appears to the faith of the church; to a man, who was merely the son of Joseph and Mary; merely healed a few sick people, mainly of nervous disorders, by the influence of his imposing personality, and perhaps, with the help of some simple remedies of which he possessed the secret; merely rose from the dead, in the same sense in which all souls of men, at death of the body, pass to God, and can claim the worship of the world merely by a title a little higher than that under which, in the Roman Catholic Church, worship is rendered to the saints."

There is something almost pathetic in this statement, should it prove true. The Man, Christ Jesus is to have a new via doloris. Men are to hide their faces from him again. Men are to forsake him, and crucify him afresh. And thousands, alas, may be left to reject him to the loss of their souls. But, notwithstanding all, he is to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Even from his enemies, every fresh analysis and reconstruction of his character will result in the universal exclamation, "Truly this Man was the Son of God."

A patient, reverent and consistent study of God's Word; hiding that Word in the heart; returning to it after every excursus of wandering in critical study; and especially the prayer of faith, is the only way of safe-guarding the soul of man and the Church of the living God; of learning what is the truth, and of unlearning errors, rectifying mistakes, and meeting the coming issues of this fresh battle for the Lord. To these we commend every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Indigestible Religion

IT requires a great deal of ingenuity to build a house or fashion a ship; but more ingenuity to build the temple of a child's character and launch it on the great ocean of time and eternity. Where there is one parent that seems qualified for the work, there seem to be twenty parents who miserably fail. Here is a father who says, "My child shall know nothing but religion; he shall hear nothing but religion, and he shall see nothing but religion." The boy is aroused at six o'clock in the morning to recite the ten commandments. He is awakened off the sofa on Sunday night to see how much he knows of the Westminster catechism. It is religion morning, noon and night. Passages of Scripture are plastered on the bed-room wall. He looks for the day of the month in a religious almanac. Every minister that comes to the house is told to take the boy aside and talk to him, and tell him what a great sinner he is.

After awhile the boy arrives at that period in life when he is too old for chastisement and too young to know and feel the force of moral principle. Father and mother are sitting up for the boy to come home. It is nine o'clock at night—ten o'clock—it is twelve o'clock—it is half-past twelve o'clock, and they hear the night key jingle in the door. They say he is coming. George goes very softly through the hall, hoping to get upstairs before he is accosted. The father says, "George, where have you been?" "Been out!" Yes he has been out and he has been down, and he is on the broad road to destruction for this life and the life to come. Father says: "There is no use in the ten commandments; the catechism seems to me to be an utter failure." Ah, my friend, you make a very great mistake. You stuffed that child with religion until he could not digest it; you made that which is a joy in many households, an abhorrence in yours.

Trying to do Too Much

SOME of our young people have read till they are crazed of learned blacksmiths who at the forge conquered thirty languages, and of shoemakers who, pounding sole leather, got to be philosophers; and milliners, who, while their customers were at the glass trying on their spring hats, wrote a volume of first-rate poems. The fact is, no blacksmith ought to be troubled with more than five languages; and instead of shoemakers becoming philosophers, we would like to turn our surplus of philosophers into shoemakers, and the supply of poetry is so much greater than the demand, that we wish milliners would stick to their business. Extraordinary examples of work and endurance may do as much harm as good. Because Napoleon slept only three hours a night, hundreds of students have tried the experiment; but instead of Austerlitz and Saragossa, there came of it only a sick headache and a botch of recitation. We are told of how many books a man can read in the five spare minutes before breakfast and the ten minutes at noon; but I wish some one would tell us how much rest a man can get in fifteen minutes after dinner, or how much health in an hour's horseback ride, or how much fun in a Saturday afternoon of cricket. He who has such an idea of the value of time that he takes none of it for rest, wastes all his time.

THE ART OF DIVINATION

THE desire to look into futurity is an instinct in the heart of mankind not to be easily eradicated; and is probably coeval with the sinful curiosity which prompted Eve's desire to "know good and evil." It is certain that in every age and among all races, men have presumptuously endeavored to anticipate time; they have reduced this presumption to a study; divided it into sciences and systems; and upon no subject has it been so easy to deceive. In the Bible alone, eighteen different kinds of divination are mentioned, most of which are in use, in widely distant parts of the world, at the present day. Thus the divining cup common in ancient Egypt—and used by Joseph for the purpose of divination—is yet common in Hindostan. When Seringapatam was stormed by the English, Tippoo Saib retired in the heat of the conflict to gaze into his divining cup; then rushed desperately to the breach, and fell covered with wounds.

The mingling of arrows mentioned in Ezekiel 21 : 21, as practised by the King of Babylon, is still used as a means of divination in Arabia, only that in the latter country but three arrows are used, one bearing the inscription, "My Lord hath commanded me"; the other, "My Lord hath forbidden me," and the third left blank.

Undoubtedly Assyria was the mother of occult science. The earliest instance mentioned in the Bible refers to the images of Laban, a native of Padan Aram, part of Assyria. But divination had always for the Jews a peculiar fascination; and in spite of the laws of Moses punishing such practices with death on theocratic grounds, it was universally sought after. Even in Christ's time such men as Simon Magus, Bar-jesus, the "Vagabond Jew exorcists" and others of this class drove a lucrative business.

It is true that in numerous cases God sanctioned divination and prophecy; but there is this remarkable difference in the true and false agents of it. In all sinful divination, there was insensibility, foaming mouth, streaming hair, and a general distraction of behavior; but the prophets of the Lord, even in their most passionate and irresistable declarations, were calm and reasonable, without any of the distortions common to pretenders. There was also another great distinction—false diviners demanded, and received money for their skill; the true prophets were not to be bought by the richest promises or gifts.

The art of divination is older than the settlement of Europe. Augury existed before Rome, for the name of the new city was decided by it. Cicero says that Romulus was skilled in the art; and Fæsulæ—the modern Florence—was the nurse of all who desired to penetrate into the future. There was no possible event of nature, or of daily life, that was not pressed into the service of augury; and the system ended in such stupendous deceit that Cato said: "It is strange how two augurs can meet without laughing in each other's face."

The imaginative character of the Greeks gave an early and warm welcome to divination; but they were an inquisitive and disputatious people, and their statesmen and generals were always ready to dispute the decisions of their oracles, if they thought it to be to their advantage to do so. Indeed, after exhausting the subject of the Grecian oracles and soothsaying, Professor Clasen says: "All that can be positively affirmed is their uncertainty."

Divination, driven from pagan temples, quickly found a new home in Christian monasteries; and though the instruments of delusion were changed, the system was the same. The lying miracles of the saints, the incantations of the necromancer, the forgeries of the alchemists, and the old, old, old delusions of astrology, proved fatal to European civilization for at least three centuries. As to astrology, it has been from time immemorial a definite system—a science as universally acknowledged as geometry. All attribute its mystic secrets to Chaldea; and it certainly came from the East, where it preserves at this day, all its primitive influence. The royal astrologist is one of the most important officers of the Shah's court; and no Persian minister concludes a political treaty, or a state ceremonial, without the sanction of the stars. The warlike Khans of Central Asia are particular to ascertain the precise hour when the planetary influences will be propitious to murder and robbery; and even the prowling thugs are scrupulous to commit their habitual atrocities with exact astronomical propriety.

Indeed, astrology in Europe under the sway of the Romish church was preached and practised with liberal rewards. For many generations in France, kings, statesmen, generals, publicly consulted, and relied on it; and Catherine de Medici, who ridiculed the Gospel, listened with devout docility to the jargon of Nostradamus. But in England it was quite as popular. Even as late as Elizabeth's time, it was a lucrative and very honorable profession; and the devout puritans of Cromwell's and Fairfax's armies did not scruple to seek promises of victory from the stars; while on one occasion, two eminent astrologists were entertained with great distinction at Parliamentary headquarters.

The wandering race called the Gypsies brought with them from the East the art of palmistry; a method of foretelling the future which they alone practised. It is very common in eastern nations where even the lines on the brow are regarded as equally significant, and their proverb, "every man's destiny is written on his brow," is believed by modern Orientals to be literally true. And if any one thinks that the West is free from such superstitions, they are very much mistaken. We have only to look at our own daily newspapers to find that both palmistry and astrology are recognized among Christian Americans at this very hour; and only to visit the apartments of the pretenders to these arts, to wonder at the luxury with which their practice of them enables them to live. And one thing in connection with this practice is very remarkable—that it is women, who in all ages and in all nations, that have been the great pretenders to the art of divination. Evidently the desire for forbidden knowledge, which so fatally tempted Eve, has been inherited by her daughters.

But nothing is more certain than this fact—the attribute of foreknowledge can never be commanded by any mortal. It is always miraculous, and limited to a particular object or subject. Mankind, as a whole, knows not what a day, an hour, a moment may bring forth; and the concealment is Godlike in its wisdom and kindness. How would our hearts have failed had we perceived beforehand the trials and sorrows through which we have passed! Yet when they came, we were able to bear them, and had been—though perhaps unconsciously—prepared for them. If the disciples were rebuked for wishing to know "the times and seasons," surely "our strength is to sit still."

But though some things are hidden from us, we are told enough to make us secure in God's providing care. We know that "while the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night shall not fail." We know that in social matters "the thing that hath been, is that which shall be." We know that in spiritual matters, God will never change. He will always be the hearer and answerer of prayer. We know that he will never leave nor forsake us; that "as our days, so our strength shall be;" that he will "guide us with his counsel, and afterwards receive us to glory." If we take God on his word, we shall not ask for signs, which are only a way of seeing our own faith; for even spiritual signs are only good when sent by God, unsought by us; those spiritual favors "which no one knoweth, saving he that receiveth them."

"We know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
We only know, we cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.
And thou, oh God! by whom are seen
Thy children as they be,
Forgive us, if too close we lean
Our human hearts on thee."

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. Geo. C. Needham has been conducting evangelistic services in Cortland, N. Y., Camden, N. Y., and Grove City, Pa. Churches of various denominations have co-operated in the movement.

The churches of Hempstead, N. Y., are enjoying quite a revival, union meetings being held every evening with great blessing. Major Lamb, with a brigade of six members of the Salvation Army, are doing a successful work.

Rev. B. W. N. Simms, of Missouri, has gone to Havana, Cuba, where he has taken charge of a Baptist Church under the superintendence of Dr. A. J. Diaz. The church is on the corner of Drgones and Zulueta streets, and we are informed that it will accommodate two thousand hearers.

Rev. H. M. Wharton's meetings at Rockford, Ill., have yielded a large harvest of souls. Twelve churches of different denominations united in the revival. All are receiving additions to their membership. Mr. Wharton proceeded to Worcester, Mass., on leaving Rockford, and goes thence to Kansas City, Mo. Readers of this journal who have written him in reference to the article from his pen that we published recently on "The Model New Testament Church" may obtain further information by addressing Mr. James H. Parrish, Owensboro, Ky.

The War in South Africa

ONE of the combatants in the deplorable conflict in South Africa appears to be weary of its course and to be preparing for submission. When Lord Roberts was marching on Bloemfontein, the capital of the Orange Free State, he was met two miles from the town by a deputation of its inhabitants headed by Mr. Fraser, a member of the Boer government, who handed him the keys of the public offices and informed him that his entry into the capital would be unopposed. President Steyn had been urged to yield to the British, but he made his escape and left the pro-British party to welcome Lord Roberts. The reception was cordial, the British flag being saluted when it was run up over the Presidential mansion, and the soldiers were cheered as they marched through the streets. Lord Roberts issued a proclamation assuring the people that all who would give up their arms and return to their farms would be free from molestation and would receive compensation for their property. He also gladdened the Boer wounded in the hospital by promising them that on their recovery they would be allowed to go home and would not be held as prisoners. Large numbers of Boer rifles are now being brought into camp and the men are returning to their homes. The seat of the Boer government is now at Kroonstadt, one hundred and thirty miles from Bloemfontein. Preparations are being made for the invasion of the Transvaal which is certain to be desperately resisted. There are signs, however, that even President Kruger is beginning to realize the hopelessness of the struggle. The most important of these was his request, presented through Mr. Hay, the American Consul at Pretoria, for the intervention of President McKinley. He probably meant mediation, as the President would be little likely to intervene. The President duly forwarded the message to London, but Lord Salisbury replied that the only basis for negotiations was the submission of the two Republics to British rule. As Mr. McKinley was not authorized to offer such terms, the kindly attempt to end the war failed. President Kruger and his officers now declare that they will fight to the bitter end and are apparently preparing for a life and death struggle. The British forces are eager to advance, especially the Irish regiments, which, having suffered most severely in the early months of the war, are thirsting for revenge. The courage and fortitude of these regiments are being generously recognized by the Queen and the government. The Queen has announced her intention of paying a visit to Ireland and has been assured of a cordial welcome. A remarkable concession, which only Irishmen fully appreciate, was the issue of an edict permitting them to wear the long-tabooed shamrock on St. Patrick's day. Time was when "the wearing of the green" could be done only at the risk of severe punishment, as it was regarded as the badge of disloyalty, but the behavior of the Irish regiments in this time of trial has changed the attitude of the British government and it is now rumored that even the Coercion act may be repealed. There is therefore one good result among the evils of the war in removing the hostility between England and Ireland, or at the least, in allaying it. Our illustration on this page shows one of the strange contrasts of this war. A correspondent of an English journal says that after one of the fiercest battles, he saw some of the English soldiers looking for the dead and wounded. They found ten wounded Boers lying near together. They propped up their heads and gave them water out of their bottles. It was hard to believe that these same men had only a few hours before been trying to kill one another. They were giving practical obedience to the Apostle's injunction:

If thine enemy hunger, feed him if he thirst give him drink (Rom. 12: 20).

BRITISH SOLDIERS GIVING WATER TO THE BOER WOUNDED

An Involuntary Journey

A little newsboy in New York had an unpleasant experience last week. He is thirteen years old and is one of ten children whom he helped to support by selling newspapers. Once a week he went over to Jersey City where he earned a quarter by sweeping out freight cars on the West Shore Railroad. He was there on his usual day last week and was sweeping out a car when the door was suddenly slammed to and locked. He thought some one was playing a joke on him, but when the car began to move he realized that he had been shut in by mistake. He was alarmed and suffered from hunger and thirst. At last, after what appeared an interminable time the car stopped and the door was opened. He learned that he was then at Ravena, thirteen miles south of Albany. He begged some food and being penniless he boarded a freight train which he thought was going to New York. But it branched off to the west and made no stop till it reached Schenectady. There he told his story, and some compassionate railroad men bought a ticket for him and put him on the train for New York. They did a kindly thing for him. One may wish that there were always people around to take similar measures when young people having been led away from the home of their Heavenly Father, and having failed in their efforts to return, put them in the right way. To all such a special reward is promised.

Let him know that he who converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins (James 5: 20).

The Washington Statue

One of the most conspicuous figures in the approaching Exposition at Paris will be a heroic statue of Washington, the work of two American sculptors, Mr. Daniel C. French and Mr. Edwin C. Potter. The Washington Statue Association, composed of the leading ladies of Washington, D. C., originated the idea of the statue and collected the funds amounting to about forty thousand dollars for its execution. The statue is being cast in bronze and when completed will be fifteen feet in height and will weigh over twenty-two thousand pounds. The moment selected for representation is when the hero was receiving command of the army at Cambridge and shows him mounted on horseback, his hat and reins held in his left hand, while in his right he holds aloft his sword. The face will be an excellent likeness of Washington, modeled from the best portraits. It will be placed on a site at the intersection of the Trocadero and the Avenue de Jena, where it will be seen by every visitor to the Exposition. It is sure to be admired by the French people as a work of art and it would be a good thing if its presence induced them to study the character of the man whom it represents and to emulate the noble and generous qualities which distinguished him. During the recent trial of Captain Dreyfus, revelations were made which showed that there were many Frenchmen high in the national service who need such an object lesson.

THE WASHINGTON STATUE

They had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes and polluted my Sabbaths and their eyes were after their fathers' idols (Ezekiel 20: 24).

A Long Search Ended

A press dispatch to New York journals from Terre Haute, Ind., reports the death of a woman well known in that locality. Her elder daughter disappeared suddenly one day twenty years ago and from that time the solution of the mystery of her fate occupied the whole life of the mother. The daughter left the house as usual in the morning and when she did not return at her customary hour in the evening the mother became alarmed. She began her search the next day, looking carefully at the banks of rivers and lakes. Then she went into the towns and villages scrutinizing the face of every girl she met. She searched the woods, too. After several years spent in this way she began visiting asylums, and poorhouses, and morgues. Then she turned her attention to cemeteries, examining the registers and tombstones to see if her daughter's name was there. Not a trace of her could she find For several years past she had been very poor, but the people who knew her story pitied her and gave her food and clothing. She did not allow the most severe weather to prevent her going on with her search. Not until a week before her death, and when she was utterly worn out, would she accept the hospitality of a kind woman who knew her. She went to bed and for the first time in twenty years did not spend her day in searching for her daughter. A week afterwards she was dead. If any one had known where that missing girl was and had told her of her mother's search for her, what a kindness it would have been to both mother and daughter, for the daughter would surely have returned when she heard of her mother's devotion. This is what ministers and Christian workers are doing for sinners. Their message is that Christ is seeking them.

As though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God (II. Cor. 5: 20).

A Bride by Lot

A justice of the peace, at Hoboken, N. J., performed the marriage ceremony, a few days ago, in a case that was decided by lot. The bride was an orphan girl whose hand had been sought by two suitors. She appears to have encouraged them both and with strange heedlessness had given each of them her promise that she would marry him. When one of them began to press for the fulfilment of the promise, and the other hearing of the projected marriage, reminded her of his claims, she was in a difficulty. She sought the advice of the lady with whom she boarded, who, having heard her story and the story of each of the suitors, recommended that the rival claims should be decided by lot. All agreed to the suggestion, and she cut two slips of paper, one shorter than the other and held them in her hand, concealing the length. He who drew the shorter was to be the successful suitor. The elder of the two suitors drew the shorter strip, but the younger protested and demanded that the trial should be repeated with the future bride holding the slips. The elder consented and again drew the shorter slip. That settled the matter and the party proceeded to the justice's court, where the marriage ceremony was performed. The suitor who missed the prize is the one who deserves congratulation. A girl whose affection was so shallow that she was willing to have a husband chosen by lot is not likely to prove a good and faithful wife. There are many people in the world who miss salvation through like indifference. It is those who are of the mind of the Psalmist, loving God above all, that God loves and admits to his favor.

Whom have I in heaven but thee? And there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee (Psalm 73: 25).

SAMANTHA IN CHINA

WELL, the time come when we wuz obleeged to leave Manila. Robert Strong, for Dorothy's sake as well as his own, left detectives to help on the search for the lost ones, and left word how to communicate with him at any time. Waitstill Webb, bein' consulted with, promised to do all in her power to help find them, but she didn't act half so shocked and horrified as I spozed she would, not half so much as Arvilly did. She forgot her canvassin' and wep' and cried for three or four days most all the time, and went round huntin', actin' more'n half crazy, her feelin's wuz such. But I spoze the reason Waitstill acted so calm wuz that such things wuz so common in her experience. She had knowledge of the deadly Canteen and its twin licensed horror, dretful things was occurring all the time, she said.

The detectives also seemed to regard it as nothing out of the common, and as to the Canteen keeper, so much worse things wuz happenin' all the time in his profession, so much worse crimes, that he and his rich pardner, the American Govermunt, sees goin' on all the time in their countless places of bizness, murders, suicides, etc., that they evidently seemed to consider this a very commonplace affair; and so of the other house kep' by the two pardners, the brazen faced old hag and Christian America, there too, so many more terrible things wuz occurrin' all the time that this wuz a very tame thing to talk about.

But to us who loved her, to us whose hearts wuz wrung thinkin' of her, mournin' for her, cryin' on our pillers, seekin' with agonized, hopeless eyes for our dear one, we kep' on searchin day and night, hopin' aginst hope till the last minute of our stay there. And the moon and stars of the tropics looked in night after night to the room where the old father lay at death's door, mourning for his beautiful innocent daughter who wuz lost—lost.

The Shadow of Sorrow

But the hour come for us to go and we went, and right by us, day or night, in sun or shade, from that hour on a black shadder walked by the side on us in place of the dimpled, merry face of the little maid. We didn't forgit her in the highest places or the lowest. And after days and days had passed I felt guilty, and as if I hadn't ort to be happy, and no knowin' where she'd drifted to in the cruel under world, like sea-weed driftin' in the ocean current. And when we wuz out evenin's, no matter where I watched, the faces of every painted, gaudy dressed creeter I see, flittin' down cross streets, hoping and dreading to see Aronette's little form. Arvilly and Miss Meechim openly and loudly, and Dorothy's pale face and sorrowful eyes told the story that they too wuz on the watch and would always be. But never did we catch a glimpse of her; never, never.

As we drew nigh to the city of Victoria on Hongkong island we see that it wuz a beautiful place. Big handsome houses built of gray stun, broad roads tree-bordered, leadin' up from terrace to terrace, all full of trees, covered with luxuriant tropical foliage. It wuz a fair seen clear from the water's edge, with its tall handsome houses risin' right up from the edge of the bay, clear up to the top of Victoria mountain, that stands up two thousand feet, seemin'ly lookin' over the city to see what it is about. And this is truth and not clear simely, for the Governor General and Chief Justice have houses up there which they call bungalows, and of course they have got to see what is goin' on. The hull island is only nine milds long and three wide. And here we wuz ten thousand milds from home. Did the Hongkongers ever think on't, that they wuz ten thousand milds from Jonesville? I hope they didn't, it would make 'em too melancholy and deprested.

"WE WUZ CARRIED THROUGH THE NARRER STREETS"

We all went to a comfortable tarven nigh by, and after partakin' of nourishin' food, though kinder queer, and a good night's rest, we felt ready to look round and see what we could. Josiah and I, with little Tommy, wuz the first ones up in the mornin', and after breakfast we sallied out into the street. Here I proposed that we should take a jinrikisha ride. This is a chair some like a big willow chair, only with a long pole fastened to each side and two men to carry you round. Josiah wuz real took with the looks on 'em, and as the price wuz low we got into the chairs, Tommy settin' in Josiah's lap, and wuz carried for quite a ways through the narrer streets, with shops juttin' out on each side makin' 'em still narrerer.

Picturesque Scenes

Josiah gin orders that I overheard to "go at a pretty good jog past the stores where wimmen buy sooveneers," but I presoomed that they didn't understand a word he said, so it didn't do any hurt and I laid out to git some all the same. But what a sight them streets wuz; they wuz about twenty feet wide and smooth and clean, but considerable steep. To us who wuz used to the peaceful deacons of Jonesville and their alpaca-clad wives and the neighbors who usually borry sleeve, and skirt, and coat, and vest patterns, and so look all pretty much alike, what a sight to see the folks we did in goin' through just one street. Every sort of dress that ever wuz wore we see there, it seemed to me—Europeans, Turks, Mohomadeans, Malays, Japanese, Javanese, Hindoos, Portuguese, half castes, and Chinese coolies. Josiah still called 'em "coolers" because they wuz dressed kinder cool, but carryin' baskets, buckets, sedans, or trottin' a sort of a slow trot hitched into a jinrikisha, or holdin' it on each side with their hands, with most nothin' on and two pigtail braids hangin' down their backs, and such a jabberin' in language strange to Jonesville ears; peddlers yellin' out their goods, bells ginglin', gongs, firecrackers, and all sorts of work goin' on right there in the streets. Strange indeed to Jonesville eyes! Catch our folks takin' their work outdoors; we shouldn't call it decent.

We went to the Public Gardens, which wuz beautiful with richly colored ornamental shrubbery. I sez to Josiah:

"Did I ever expect to see allspice trees?"

And he sez: "I can't bear allspice anyway."

"Well," sez I, "cinnamon trees; who ever thought of seein' cinnamon trees?"

An' he looked at 'em pretty shrewd and sez: "When I git home I shan't pay no forty cents a pound for cinnamon. I can tell 'em I've seen the trees and I know it ort to be cheaper." Sez he, "I could scrape off a pound or two with my jack-knife if we could carry it."

But I hurried him on; I wuzn't goin' to lug a little wad of cinnamon ten thousand milds, even if he got it honest. Well, we stayed here for quite a spell, seein' all the beautiful flowers, magnificent orchids—that would bring piles of money to home, jest as common here as buttercups and daisies in Jonesville, and other beautiful exotics, that we treasure so as houseplants, growin' out-doors here in grand luxuriance — palms, tree-ferns, banian trees, everything I used to wonder over in my old gography I see right here growin' free. Tommy wuz delighted with the strange beautiful flowers, so unlike anything he had ever seen before. We had got out and walked round a spell here, and when we went to git into our sedan chairs agin, I wuz a little behind time, and Josiah hollered out to me:

"Fie tea, Samantha!"

"Tea?" sez I. "I hain't got any tea here." And I sez with dignity, "I don't know what you mean."

Josiah Talks Chinese

"Fie tea," he sez agin' lookin' clost at me.

And I sez agin with dignity, "I don't know what you mean." And he sez to me: "I am talkin' Chinese, Samantha; that means 'hurry up.' I shall use that in Jonesville. When you're standin' in the meetin' house door talkin' about bask patterns and hired girls with the female sisters, and I awaitin' in the democrat, I shall holler out, 'Fie tea, Samantha;' it will be very stylish and uneek."

I didn't argy with him, but got in as well as I could, but havin' stepped on my dress and most tore it, Josiah hollered out, "See sum! see sum! Samantha!"

And I, forgittin' his fashionable aims, sez to him, "See some what, Josiah?"

"See sum, Samantha That means "be careful." I shall use that too in Jonesville. How genteel that will make me appear to holler out to Brother Gowdey or Uncle Sime Bentley, in a muddy or slippery time, "See sum, Brother Gowdey; see sum, Uncle Sime! Such doin's will make me sought after, Samantha."

"Well," sez I, "we'd better be gittin' back to the tarven, for Arvilly will be wonderin' where we are and the rest on 'em."

"Well, just as you say, Samantha," and he leaned back in his chair and wav'd his hand and says to the men, "Fey tea, fey tea; chop, chop."

I expect to see trouble with that man in Jonesville streets with his foreign ways.

Well, as we wuz passin' through one of the narrer streets, through a perfect bedlam of strange cries in every strange language under the sun, so it seemed, and seein' every strange costoom that wuz ever wore, when, happy sight to Jonesville eyes, there dawned on my weary vision a brown linen skirt and bask, made from my own pattern.

Invited to "Tiffin"

Yes, there stood Arvilly conversin' with a stately Sikh policeman. She held up the Twin Crimes in a allurin' way and wuz evidently rehearsin' its noble qualities. But as he didn't seem to understand a word she said she didn't make a sale. But she wuz lookin' round undaunted for another subscriber when she ketched sight of us. And at my request we dismissed the jinrikishas and walked back to the tarven with her.

Dorothy and Miss Meechim and Robert Strong come back pretty soon from a tower of sight-seein', and they said we'd all been invited to tiffen with the Governor-General the next day. Well, I didn't have the least idee what it wuz, but I made up my mind to once that if tiffenin' wuz anything relatin' to gamblin' or the opium trade, I shouldn't have a thing to do with it. But Josiah spoke right up and sez he had rather see tiffen than anybody else in China, and mistrustin' from Robert's looks that he had made a mistake, he hastened to add that tiffenin' wuz sunthin' he had always hankered after: he had always wanted to tiffen, but hadn't the means in Jonesville.

Sez Robert, "Then I shall accept this invitation for breakfast for all our party." And after they went out I sez: "I'd hold myself a little back, Josiah. To say that you'd never had means to take breakfast in Jonesville shows ignorance and casts a slur on me."

"Oh I meant I never had any tiffin with it, Samantha; you'll see it don't mean plain breakfast; you'll see that they'll pass some tiffen, and we shall have to eat it no matter what it's made on, rats or mice or anything. Whoever heard of common breakfast at twelve M."

Well, it did mean just breakfast and we had a real good time. We went up in sedan chairs, though we might have gone on the cars. But we wanted to go slower to enjoy the scenery.

I had thought the view from the hill back of Grout Nickleson's wuz beautiful, and also the Pali at Honolulu, but it did seem to me that the seen we looked down on from the top of Victoria mountain wuz the most beautiful I ever did see. The city lay at our feet embowered in tropical foliage, with its handsome uneek buildin's, its narrer windin' streets stretchin' fur up the mountain side, runnin' into narrerer mountain paths covered with white sand. The beautiful houses and gardens of the English colony clost down to the shore. The tall masts of the vessels in the harbor looking like a water forest with flowers of gayly colored flags. And further off the Canton or Pearl river, with scores of villages dotting its banks; glittering white temples, with their pinnacles glistening in the sunlight; pagodas, gayly painted with gilded bells, rising up from the beautiful tropical foliage; broad green fields; mountains soarin' up towards the blue heavens and the blue waters of the sea.

A fair seen, a fair seen! I wished that sister Henzy could see it, and told Josiah so.

And he sez with a satisfied look, "Wait till I describe it to 'em, Samantha. They'd ruther have me describe it to 'em than see it themselves." I doubted it some, but didn't contend.

The breakfast wuz a good one, though I should have called it dinner to home. Josiah wuz on the lookout, I could see, for tiffen to be passed, but it wuzn't, so he ort to give up, but wouldn't; but argyed with me out to one side that "they wuz out of tiffen, and hadn't time to buy any and couldn't borry."

Well, the Governor-General seemed to be greatly taken with Dorothy. A relation on his own side wuz the hostess and Miss Meechim acted real relieved when it turned out that he had a wife who wuz visiting in England.

I sot at the right hand of the Governor-General and I wanted to talk to him on the opium question and try to git him to give up the trade, but concluded that I wouldn't tackle him at his own table. But I kep' up a stiddy thinkin'.

That very mornin' I read in the daily paper that two missionaries had arrived there the day before, and on the same steamer three hundred chests of opium.

SIGHT-SEEING IN CANTON

Poor creeters! didn't it seem mockin' the name of religion to help convert the natives and on the same steamer send 300 chests of the drug to ondo their work and make idiots and fiends of 'em.

The Opium Iniquity

It seemed to me some as if I should read in the Jonesville Augur or Gimlet that our govermunt had sent out three or four fat lambs to help the starvin' poor and sent 'em in the care of thirty or forty tigers and wild cats.

No doubt the lambs would git there, but they would be inside the wild cats and tigers.

Such wicked and foolish and inconsistent laws if made by women would make talk amongst the male sect and I wouldn't blame 'em a mite; I should jine with 'em and say, "Sure enough it is a proof that wimmen don't know enough to vote and hain't good enough; let 'em drop the political pole, retire into the background and study statesmanship and the Bible, specially the golden rule." But to resoom.

Arvilly tried to turn the conversation on the Twin Crimes of America, but didn't come right out and canvass him, for which I wuz thankful. They all paid lots of attention to Tommy, who had a great time, and I spoze Carabi did too.

We had fruits and vegetables at the table, all gathered from the Governor-General's garden—fresh fruit and vegetables in February, good land! Pickin' berries and pineapples while the Jonesvillians' fruit wuz snowballs and ice suckles; jest think on't!

Well, Robert Strong thought we had better proceed on to Canton the next day and we wuz all agreeable to it.

After we all went back to the tarven and I had laid down a spell and rested I went out with Arvilly and Tommy for a little walk. Miss Meechim, and Dorothy, and Robert Strong havin' gone over to Maceo, the old Portuguese town on the mainland. They wanted to see the place where Camoens wrote his great poem, "The Lusiad," and where he writ them heart-breakin' poems to Catarina. Poor creeter! they had to be separated. King John sent him off from Lisbon, wantin' the girl himself, so I spoze. Catarina died soon of a broken heart, but Camoens lived on for thirty years in the body, and is livin' now and will live on in the Real Life.

Yes, his memory is jest as fresh now as it ever wuz in them streets he wandered in durin' his sad exile, while the solid stun his feet trod on has mouldered and gone to pieces, which shows how much more real the onseen is than the seen, and how much more indestructable. Iron pillars and granite columns aginst which his weary head had leaned oft-times had all mouldered and decayed. But the onseen visions that Camoens see with his rapt poet's eye wuz jest as fresh and deathless as when he first writ 'em down. And his memory hanted the old streets, and went before 'em and over 'em. How much more real than the tropical birds that wheeled and glittered in the luxuriant tropical foliage, though they couldn't lay hands on 'em and ketch 'em and bring a few to me, much as I would liked to have had 'em. But these bein' the real, as I say, they wuz also with me way over in Hongkong. I thought a sight on him all the time they wuz gone and afterwards I thought of the honor and dignity his noble verse had gin to his country, and how princely the income they had gin him after they let him return from his exile. Twenty-one dollars a year! What a premium that wuz upon poesy; the Muse must have felt giddy to think she wuz prized so high, and his native land repented of the generosity afterwards and stopped the twenty-one dollars a year.

But then after his starved and strugglin' life wuz ended his country acted in the usual way, erected monuments in his honor, and struck off medals bearin' his liniment. The worth of one medal or one little ornament on the peak of one of his statutes might have kep' alive the broken heart and starved body and gin him some comfort. But that hain't the way of the world; the world has always considered it genteel and fashionable to starve its poets, and stun its prophets, with different kinds of stuns, but all on 'em hard ones; not that it has done so in every case, but it has always been the fashionable way.

Dorothy and Robert talked quite a good deal about the sad poet and his works, their young hearts feelin' for his woe; mebby sunthin' in their own hearts translatin' the mournful history; you know plates have to be fixed jest right or the colors won't strike in, it is jest so in life. Hearts must be ready to photograph the seens on, or they won't be took. Some hearts and souls are blank plates and will always remain so. Arvilly seemed lost in thought as they talked about the poet (she hain't so well versed in poetry as she is in the license laws and the disabilities of wimmen), and when she hearn Robert Strong say, "Camoens will live forever," she sez dreamily:

"I wonder if he'd want to subscribe for the Twin Crimes?" And sez she, "I am sorry I didn't go over with you and canvass him." Poor thing! she little knew he had got beyend canvassin' and all other cares and troubles of life two hundred years ago. But Miss Meechim wuz dretful worked up about the gambling going on at Maceo, and she sez it is as bad as at Monte Carlo. (I didn't know who he wuz, but spozed that he wuz a real out and out gambler and black leg.) And sez she, "Oh how bad it makes me feel to see such wickedness carried on. How it makes my heart yearn for my own dear America!" Miss Meechim is good in some things; she is as loyal to her own country as a dog to a root, but Arvilly sez:

Arvilly's Plain Talk

"I guess we Americans hadn't better find too much fault with foreign natives about gambling, when we think of our stock exchanges, huge gamblin' houses where millions are gambled for daily; thousands of bushels of wheat put up there that never wuz growed only in the minds of the gamblers. Why," sez Arvilly, warmin' up with her subject, "we are a nation of gamblers from Wall Street, where gamblin' is done in the name of greed, down to meetin' houses where bed-quilts and tidies are gambled for in the name of religion. From millionaires who play the game for fortunes, down to poor backwoodsmen who raffle for turkeys and hens, and children who toss pennies for marbles."

Sez Miss Meechim, "I guess I will take a little quinine and lay down a spell." Arvilly tosted her head quite a little after she retired and then she also went out to canvass a clerk in the office. Arvilly is dantless in carriage, but she is too hash. I feel bad about it.

... Under the Evening Lamp ...

By Margaret E. Sangster

The Pauncefote-Bromley Wedding

WHOEVER is familiar with our country's capital knows the old Saint John's Episcopal Church, where, a short time ago, a very brilliant and notable wedding took place. Lord Pauncefote, who has for more than ten years been at the head of the British Embassy in Washington, and who is the Dean, by reason of long service of the foreign diplomatic corp, gave his daughter, Lillian, in marriage to Mr. Robert Bromley, of Stokes, England. It is a proof of the home feeling entertained by the Pauncefote's, after their long residence in Washington, that they did not go across the water for the performance of this function, but that her lover came to America to obtain and carry back his bride. Lord and Lady Pauncefote are deservedly popular in Washington, and with their four daughters, of whom the Honorable Lillian is the first to marry, they have been leaders in the most exclusive set. Many of us have feared the withdrawal of Lord Pauncefote from the post of British Ambassador, because two years ago he arrived at the usual retiring age; but, in view of the intimate and friendly relations now existing between the two great countries, and the need of extreme tact and wisdom on the part of the English minister, while feeling is so strongly aroused in regard to the South African situation, it has been hoped both in London and on this side the ocean that no change will at present take place. Lady Pauncefote's gracious presence and the hearty, cheery manner of her bright-faced girls would be sorely missed.

The husband of Lillian Pauncefote is the son of Sir Henry Bromley, fifth baronet of his family, and owner of vast possessions and ancestral wealth. To us in America titles count for little, comparatively, and when a nobleman seeks one of our own daughters, we scan his claims very carefully, but good blood and clean lineage are never to be discounted, and it is a credit to be born of good stock. The wedding of these young people seemed especially auspicious, so well suited to each other, socially and in age, were the contracting parties. It was a very beautiful pageant, the bride radiant in white satin gown with a sweeping court train carried by a picturesque little page, Master Sidney Kent Seger, of Washington. Two of the bride's sisters are seen in the picture standing next the bride; they are the Honorables Sybil and Audrey Pauncefote; Miss Esther Bromley, sister of the groom, and Miss Hettie Sargent, of Boston, the two other bridesmaids, stand just beyond them, while in the rear is the best man, the groom's brother, Mr. Maurice Bromley-Wilson.

This strikingly beautiful picture was taken in the ball room of the British Embassy, just before the bridal party went to the church; it is reproduced exclusively in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Family Jars

A family jar of any sort is a mortifying occurrence and a token that the family itself is only partly civilized, not to mention its lack of a Christian spirit. Really civilized people have good manners, and good manners imply self-restraint, and an ability to refrain from unkind speech, as well as a habit of being obliging. If, for example, in the ordinary intercourse of the family life, everybody were as polite as he or she is in company, how seldom would there be friction. And, advancing a step farther, if we were always as considerate and loving as those should be who have learned the ways of the Master, in gentleness, in charity, and in self-effacement, what a heaven on earth every home would be.

A family feud is sometimes the outgrowth of a family quarrel, and is of all difficulties the hardest to settle. I heard of a sister the other day who said, "If my brother Dan were lying in the road beside my door, helpless and ill, I would not lift a finger to assist him. I would lock my door and leave him there." Dan had offended his sister by a marriage of which she disapproved, and the current of her love had turned to implacable hatred in consequence. Can anything be more dreadful in the sight of God and man than a temper of this variety, so bitter, so unkind, so monstrous? Yet it is indulged in by those who have bent the knee to God from their cradles, read their Bibles, and heard the Gospel every Sabbath through many years.

Friends, we must watch ourselves lest the adversary of souls implant in us the seeds of such possible wickedness. Let us determine that no family jar, family friction or family feud shall ever mar our life story and grieve the blessed One who came to save us from our sins. And, as our own strength is often weakness, and we may not trust it to help us in the hour of trial, let us ever pray to One who is mighty, remembering that his grace is sufficient for us in every emergency.

A Mother's Meeting

I am asked to tell inquiring mothers how to begin regular meetings in their church or town. First: call a meeting, either by a public announcement in the local paper or by a word from the pulpit, inviting every mother to attend at a given place on a certain day and hour. Let the pastor's wife, or some interested woman, call the meeting to order. Begin the proceedings with prayer for the divine blessing. Then name a secretary pro tem to keep the record of the meeting. Elect a president, vice-president and secretary, who may also be a treasurer. The object of the organization should be stated by the chair, and clearly understood by those who signify their intention to become members. In successive meetings, you may consider problems which all mothers meet in daily life—the best education of children, their playmates, their perils, whatever you wish to discuss. Above all, pray earnestly and unitedly in such a meeting, that America's motherhood may be consecrated and America's childhood taught of God.

The next National Congress of Mothers will convene in Des Moines, Iowa, May 21st to 25th. Full particulars will be given on this page later.

Letters and Visiting Cards

Plain white unruled paper is in the best taste for ordinary letters. Avoid all novelties and eccentricities. In calling on a friend who is visiting a lady whom you do not know, etiquette requires you to send a card to your friend's hostess, and you should consult her convenience in making engagements with your friend and for her. A gentleman's ordinary visiting card is much smaller than that of a lady. Husband and wife as a rule use separate visiting cards. You may, on occasion, write "Mr. and" before the "Mrs." on your own card, if you are making calls together.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—DORRIS. Announcement cards are sent out as soon as possible after a marriage.

—ETHEL. Consult the geography of the United States, selecting whatever book is in use in the nearest public school.

—NOVICE. It is always courteous to acknowledge cards of invitation by your own card, but in the case of a large wedding where you are invited only to the church and not to the succeeding reception, this is not necessary.

—D. C. I advise your seeking information from a specialist. Any prominent undertaker in a large city, such as Chicago or St. Louis New York or Boston, could advise you as to burial robes.

—J. J. D. It is impossible to give trustworthy statistics, but the efforts of the Audobon Society, and the formation of a better public sentiment are operating to prevent the wearing of birds as ornaments on millinery.

—MARJORIE. In this country, a young man's mother calls on his fiancee. Abroad, it is quite frequently customary for him to bring her to call upon his mother. The really needful thing in the case is for her to receive a cordial welcome from her lover's family.

—MRS. B. S. How rich and full is your life, with your eight children, "every one in the fold of Christ, every one loving father and mother." Far superior seems this full quiver than a childless home, in which old age and lonliness must be faced, without filial ministries to cheer the westerning slope of life.

—GERTRUDE B. Aunt Patience is too old-fashioned to understand your subtleties. When she was a girl, young people were less complex. One thing is certain, my dear. Either you do love your suitor or you are averse or indifferent to him. In any case marriage can be right for you if you truly love and honor the man you marry. To marry without love for a mercenary consideration, is degrading, and in my opinion, criminal.

—A CANADIAN GIRL. I know of no special school which an aspiring author can attend to advantage. Something to say and the ability to say it in a clear and agreeable manner are needful pre-requisites, and these cannot be imparted by any school. A knowledge of one's own tongue, gained chiefly by much reading of good books, is invaluable. Finally, the young writer must possess pluck, precision and perseverance.

EVENING PRAYER FOR A CHILD

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me:
Bless thy little lamb to-night;
Through the darkness be Thou near me,
Watch my sleep till morning light.

Let my sins be all forgiven,
Bless the friends I love so well,
Take me when I die to heaven,
Happy there with Thee to dwell.
Amen.

Preventible Illness

"DO not kiss that little girl," said the wise physician to the tender mother, who was bending over her fevered child. "The kiss will do her no good, and it may give you her sickness. You can care for her just as well, and neither inhale her breath nor take up the air about her by approaching too closely with your caresses."

The doctor was right. Great as is the desire on the mother's part to hug and kiss her little pain-racked girl or boy, she must resolutely deny herself the gratification. It was forgetfulness of this sort which destroyed the life of the Princess Alice of Hesse, a very noble woman and a favorite daughter of Queen Victoria. She passionately kissed her little one who was tortured by diphtheria, caught the dread disease herself, and died its victim. In obscurer homes and places this tragedy has been often repeated, so, dear mother, reading this paper, take the counsel of prudence to yourself in the matter.

Modern science shows us that no malady is more contagious than the familiar scourge consumption, which slays its tens of thousands every year all round the globe. Yet medical and, above all, preventive aid is constantly lessening its evil powers, and the number of its victims does not increase; is indeed perceptibly diminishing, as we understand that pure air and good food are the best weapons with which to fight it. In days which I remember, if consumption gained an entrance into a family, it often swept like a devouring flame straight through it, one young life after another falling an easy prey to its relentless terrors. Now, we know that we must wage war upon the noxious germs, that a consumptive patient must be kept out of doors, that a cold bracing climate is often better for him than a sultry warm one, and that no well person must on any pretext sleep with one whose lungs and throat are morbidly affected.

There are preventible colds and other illnesses which we take through deliberate heedlessness. The list is long. Can we not shorten it in our own case by common sense?

School Cruelties

Twice recently I have been deeply pained, as has many another woman, by reports of shameful cruelty to a child by a school-teacher, resulting in both instances in the child's death at the teacher's hands, or through the teacher's agency. One school-master, a man, so harshly beat a small boy that the boy died a few days afterward from an injury to the brain and spine. One young woman, enraged because a little girl of nine had written a line too many in her exercise book, slapped and shook the poor little culprit, and must have been very much confounded when death stepped in and snatched the victim from her grasp, on the spot. The child had a weak heart, and between the violence of the teacher's attack and the shame of the treatment, succumbed, and went to a merciful heaven, where instruments of torture and thoughtless executioners do not enter.

I long for the day when at home and in school a better way of discipline shall be found than that of maltreating children by rods and straps. The child who is thus punished is inevitably hardened, and nine times out of ten the person who does the whipping does it to gratify a sentiment of revenge, not because he wishes to do the child good. A mother once said to me, "I wouldn't let John see me whip one of the children for the world. It would be laying off the angel and laying on the rod in his eyes," and she was right.

"Christ the Equal of God"

Helen M.'s Famous Question Elicits Many Replies From Our Readers

WHEN a reader of this journal, signing herself simply "Helen M." wrote a letter sometime ago in which she asked the question: "Does Jesus anywhere claim to be the equal of God?" the first impulse was to reply, quoting for the inquirer's benefit all the Scriptural passages in support of the Divine equality of the Son and Father. It seemed, however, to be a question so certain of interesting a very large number of other readers that, on consideration, it was decided to submit the matter to the readers themselves for answer. The result has been an avalanche of letters on the subject which till now we have had little opportunity to publish, owing to lack of space. We give below a general summary of the answers:

Mrs. N. P. A., Sanford, Me., writes:

I answer yes. He says, "I and my Father are one" (John 10: 30). "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14: 9). The Jews sought to kill him because he made himself equal with God (John 5: 18). In Jesus' prayer for his apostles, he declares himself one with the Father (John 17 · 21-22). Jesus says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28: 18). And "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father" (John 5: 22, 23). There is one God, the Father, one Lord the Saviour, and one Holy Spirit, three in one (I. John 1: 7). I do not think this is as mysterious as many other things in the Bible; the new birth, for instance, which cannot be explained but must be experienced, to be understood.

J. H. B., Lancaster, Pa., writes:

I believe Christ to be equal with God, but I do not understand it. There are many other things about God and eternity that I do not understand. I just believe them and trust the Lord that it is all right. It is, however, right to search and see if these things be so. If we look up the following texts, we will get light on the subject. John 1: 1-3; 10: 30, 38; Phil. 2: 6; Gen. 1: 26.

Thomas Henshall, Kansas City, Kan., writes:

Is Jesus God? Yes; because Jesus said so. That settles it with me. The high priest asked: "Art thou the Son of the Blessed?" Jesus said: "I am." He said: "Before Abraham was, I am." "He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation." "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last." "All things are delivered unto me of my Father." Paul says: "In him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." "The express image of his person." Millions of saints throughout all the generations have offered him their adoration and praise and worship. Him because "He thought it not robbery to be equal with God." "I and my Father are one."

F. J., Strathroy, Ont., Canada, writes:

"The question seems to be a very debatable one. I might be permitted to refer to I. Cor. 16: 24-28, where it is intimated very clearly that Jesus is to give up all authority to God, even the Father (24th verse), that God may be all in all (28th verse), and the Son himself shall be subject unto him who did put all things under him. Can a subject be equal to the one under whom he serves? The following passages of Scripture might be read with profit on this subject: Matt. 20: 23; Mark 10: 40; John 5: 19, 20, 30; 6: 38; 7: 16, 28, 29; 8: 28, 42, 54, 55; 10: 32; 12: 49, 50; 14: 10, 24, 28, 31; 15: 15; 17: 4, 8, 18; I. Cor. 3: 23; 9: 3.

J. H. Y., Indiana, Pa., writes:

1. Christ says: "I and the Father are one," and, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father" (John 10: 30; 14: 9).

2. His miracles of healing, raising from the dead, and his creative power in the wedding wine, and feeding the multitudes, imply divinity.

3. The main events of his life—birth, works, character, suffering for others, death and resurrection—are all subjects of prophesies, extending over centuries. In these he is called Messiah, Shiloh and Immanuel (God with us); and in Is. 9: 6, "the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

Rev. F. W. A., Marysville, Ohio, writes:

Christ is equal with God: 1. Because names pertaining to God only are ascribed to him (John 20: 28; Rom. 9: 5; I. John 5: 20, and many others). 2. Because attributes which pertain to God only are ascribed to him. He is eternal (Micah 5: 20; Isaiah 9: 6; John 1: 1, 2; Heb. 13: 8; John 8: 58). He is omnipresent (Matt. 18: 20; Matt. 28: 20). He is omnipotent (Matt. 28: 18). He is omniscient (John 2: 25; John 21. 17). 3. Because he performed divine works of his own power (John 1: 3; Heb. 1: 3; Col. 1: 16, 17; Luke 7: 14; John 2: 11; Matt. 9: 6). Notice especially in Luke 7: 14 that he says, "I," not like the disciples in Acts 3: 6, 12, 16, "in the name of." 4. Because the greatest divine honor is given him (John 5: 23; Phil. 2: 10; Heb. 1: 6). 5. Because he expressly affirms his equality with God (John 10: 30; John 14: 9). In John 5: 18 the last five words are especially to be noted. As to the incontrovertible truth that there is but one God, see John 10: 30, where Christ solves the questioner's difficulty. And as to the equally incontrovertible truth that Christ acknowledged the divine authority of the Father and offered up prayers to him, let it be remembered that the Son of God became man—was God and man in one person and humbled himself, and in the days of his flesh or in the state of humiliation ordinarily did not make use of his divine majesty and glory (see Phil. 2: 5-8 and also II. Cor. 8: 9; II. Cor. 5: 21; Gal. 3: 13), in which last three passages the purpose of his lowliness and humility is shown, namely that of being a perfect substitute for the fallen human race and a satisfactory atonement.

Eli K., Clarksville, Ohio, writes:

Before he was crucified he prayed that the cup might pass from him, which was not granted. He then exclaimed: "My God, my God, why hast thou deserted me?" Again, he lay dead in the sepulchre three days and of course powerless during that time. And although he was given all power in heaven and earth, it was only a gift of God. God created the heavens and the earth and all things therein, whereas, Christ is the Redeemer of the people and King over all.

H. D. writes:

God himself revealed Jesus to the world as the "Well beloved Son," on two important occasions, viz.: His Baptism and Transfiguration, and commanded us to "hear him."

Why should we believe that God kept back anything, which is essential to our faith?

Jesus repeatedly told his apostles that all he had he received from the Father, and on his day of ascension sent this message by Mary to his disciples: "Go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God and your God." St. Paul answered this question in I. Cor. 8: 5, 6: "Though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth," etc. "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him: and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him."

A large proportion of the affirmative answers take the ground that "Jesus is God manifest in the flesh," and therefore not only equal but identical with the Father. Some make the distinction that while metaphysically Jesus acknowledged his subordination to the Father, morally and spiritually he claimed equality.

C. W. M., Carlisle, Ark., writes:

I believe that Christ was none other than Adam himself, because Luke in his genealogy of Christ traces his lineage back to Adam, who, he says, "was the son of God." In many places Christ is spoken of as the Son of God and only begotten of the Father. Paul speaks of Adam as being the "figure of him that was to come," Rom. 5: 14; that is, figuratively they were the same; really Christ was a new person; the mortal had put on immortality and the corruption incorruption. And again in I. Cor. 15: 45, "and so it is written the first man Adam was made a living soul; and the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." Also in Heb. 1: 6, "and when he bringeth again the first begotten into the world," signifying that he must have been in the world before. In Revelations Christ is spoken of as "The First and Last;" "The Beginning and the End." Now, if Christ was Adam, then he is our Creator and Father of us all. As to Christ's equality with God, he is equal in sentiment, in love and in action, executing the Father's will as a trusted earthly son does his father's will. Illustrated by the willingness of the Father that he should, and the willingness of the Son to come into the world again to make an atonement for the sins of the people. Of course, the Father first created the Son, therefore the Father is greater in that respect.

Peter O., St. Peter, Minn., writes:

There is only one place in the whole Bible indicating that the Son is not all in all with the Father; it is about the time of the final judgment. He says regarding that, himself, Mark 13: 32. "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." But we may also believe that Christ had given up that knowledge for the time being, while he was in the body, and that to-day sitting at the right hand of the Father, he is all and all in him.

F. Carpenter, Berlin, Ont., writes:

1st. Jesus was a man like all men, as to his person; that is, he had a father and mother as we all have. He was the man for the time, the promised Saviour, the wonderful Councillor, the perfect man, the revealer of the Father's nature, so that those who see him see the character of God.

2d. There is only one God. If the Bible teaches anything it teaches this.

3d. Christ gave his life, a willing sacrifice from first to last, for the good of his fellow men.

4th. The only true manhood and womanhood, that which will elevate man above the beasts that perish and make us worthy of life eternal is to follow in the steps of Jesus, by always striving, with God's help, to do what we believe Jesus would do in our place.

L. R. B., Leroy, Minn., writes:

Gen. 1: 1: "God created;" 26th verse, God said: "Let us make man," revealing the triune God in creative work. In the Gospel of John: 1, 2, 3, 10 and 14, declares this of him "who was made flesh and dwelt among us;" Paul in Heb. 1: 1, 2, 3, 10 and in Col. 1: 16, 17, ascribes to Jesus all-creating power. The title Jehovah, "I Am," is the most august title of God, Ex. 3: 14 and 6: 3. Jesus claims this august title, John 8: 53-59. He claims also equality with God, the Father, John 10: 30, 33-38. For this he was condemned, John 19: 7. The Jews considered sonship equality. Jesus repeats this to his disciples in John 14: 7, 11 and 17: 1, 2, 5. The accepted worship, John 8: 38. He declared himself the coming Judge in Matt. 24: 30, 25, 31-46.

Dr. R. Hamilton, Ill., writes:

As a human son Christ would say: "My Father is greater than I"; as a divine son he could say: "I and my Father are one."

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

THE BEGGAR TRAMP TRANSFORMED

A Marvelous Story of God's Saving Grace at the Old McAuley Mission

HE was without doubt the most thorough-paced tramp that ever came into our old mission, where the lost congregate in such numbers. No pen can adequately describe him, but may be able to give a faint idea of how he looked. He was over six feet tall and sixty years old, but he looked a hundred.

THE OLD COLONEL

His beard was a dirty gray and a foot long. His hair, the same color, hung down his back over a foot long. His eyes were bleared and the hue of his face showed that water and he had long been strangers. He had on a ragged old overcoat, probably picked out of some ash barrel, and fastened with a nail; an old coat and vest completed his wardrobe. Of course he had neither a shirt nor undershirt. His trousers were simply indescribable; they consisted of holes tied up with strings and a little cloth here and there. On his feet were pieces of carpet wrapped up with strings.

I had known him for years as a common beggar. It was thirteen years ago last June when he came to see me, one Sunday night, and he stood up for prayer in the middle of the service. Peering forward, he asked if I was present, and when I said "Yes," he said, "Mr. Hadley, pray for me. I am contrite." At the invitation he came up with twenty others and prayed like a man in dead earnest. When we rose from our knees he stood up and said, "Well, I am saved! there is no doubt about it." At the close of the service he put his arm around my neck and said:

"Brother Hadley, what ye going to give me?"

"Oh," said I, "you will get a night's lodging."

"Yes," said he, "that's right; what else?"

"I will give you a quarter for your breakfast," said I.

"That's right," said he again, "that's right. I always knowed you was a Christian," and with his quarter and a ticket for bed, he tottered off.

As he left me he said: "I'll come every night."

"Oh don't," I said, "just come occasionally."

But he said again: "Yes, Brother Hadley; I'll come every night."

Who was this man—this finished work of Satan's cruel power? He was from one of the best Ohio families, from a wealthy, prosperous, Christian home. After college he studied law in the office of Edwin M. Stanton, the great war secretary under Lincoln. He married and began to practice law, but in college he had learned to drink whiskey. He entered the army at the outbreak of the war, served through that fearful struggle with credit, and was mustered out a colonel of cavalry in an Illinois regiment, but a confirmed drunkard. He tried to struggle against that deadly habit which had securely fastened itself upon him, but it was useless. At last, when home was destroyed and wife and children gone, he became utterly discouraged. He came to New York, assumed another name, never went near the post office, and ultimately became a common beggar on the streets. For over a quarter of a century he had been a confirmed drunkard.

This was the man who came up for prayers at the Water Street Mission. He was on hand early the next night, and when the invitation was given he came up with the rest, and, after praying very unctuously, rose up and said he was saved—sure this time! He tried to put his arm around me again, but I repelled him with much more vigor than grace, I fear. I pointed him to the door.

"Do you mean it?" said he.

"If you linger much longer," said I, "you'll see if I mean it."

He went slowly out, cursing me and the mission and everybody else, and swearing he would die in the street rather than come in again.

I had been sorely tried that night. I had to put out three longshoremen, who came in drunk looking for a fight, and I was clearly a backslider. My heart smote me as I saw the miserable, hopeless figure go out into the night. I went to bed, but not to sleep. I could think of nothing else, pray for nothing else. I felt he must be saved or I would be lost.

Two weeks from that day we had a monthly meeting of rescue workers. Our speaker had disappointed us and someone said, "Call on Brother Hadley." I said, "Yes, I have something to say today," and with shame and weeping, I told them about the old colonel and how I had treated him. While I spoke, it seemed as if the Holy Ghost fell on us all. No one said "pray," but all fell on their knees. They prayed for the colonel and they prayed for me, that God would deliver my soul. While they prayed the light broke. "Get up," said I, "you need not pray any more." They gathered around me and said, "Oh, Brother Hadley, have you got your answer." "I have," said I, as I wrung their hands. I hastened to the elevated road and came down to the mission, and there on the back bench sat the colonel. It was my turn now and I put my arms around his neck and burst into tears.

I got him a beefsteak, bread, butter, potatoes and coffee, and he ate like a famished animal. I got a tub of hot water, a bar of soap and plenty of towels and clean clothes, and with the hands that pen these lines I washed this poor outcast. I dressed him from head to foot and took him over across the street to the barber's, and soon his long hair and beard disappeared. He stayed to the meeting and came forward; but how changed! His whole frame trembled with emotion and tears fell from his eyes to the floor as he cried, "Oh, Lord, if it ain't too late forgive this lost sinner."

For six nights this was repeated, and on Saturday night he arose at the close of our service, and said with heaven in his face, "Oh, Brother Hadley, I am saved." I said, "I believe you," and then we did have a hug.

From that instant the old beggar tramp was turned into a child of God. He fairly loathed rum and all its works. God restored to him his intellect, which was so sadly impaired; his youth returned, and he became a tall, dignified, handsome Christian gentleman.

Thousands have heard him, during the last thirteen years, tell in the most convincing manner how Jesus had reached down and saved him and kept him. For some time past his health had been failing, and at last we put him in the Presbyterian Hospital. On February 28th he went to see Jesus, whom he loved so well. He was buried from our dear old Water Street Mission.

"For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Heb. 8: 12.

BRONCHIAL CONSUMPTION

From Dr. Robert Hunter's Lectures on Lung Diseases

Of the many forms of Bronchitis, the one most alarming of all is that in which the symptoms closely resemble those of consumption, and hence called consumptive bronchitis, or bronchial consumption. You must not, however, understand from this name that it is really tuberculous in character, or produced by the bacilli which cause true consumption. In all lung cases, I require a portion of the expectorated matter coughed up by the patient to be brought to me, or sent in a small bottle by express, before giving a definite opinion of the disease. If, on examination, I find the tubercle bacilli present, the case is consumption; and if no bacilli—Bronchitis. A large percentage of those who die of lung diseases, supposed to be consumption, are really deaths by chronic bronchitis resembling consumption.

A remarkable instance in verification of this recently occurred. A lady was brought to me in what appeared the last stage of consumption. Her physicians had told her husband that she could not live a week. She had a bad cough, puriform expectorations, night sweats, and was wasted almost to skin and bone. Judging by her symptoms and appearance, it was impossible not to fear that she had come too late. On sounding her chest, however, I was surprised to find no solidification by tubercles, and on examining her sputum a total absence of the bacilli. The history, too, of her sickness, revealed that it had followed an attack of whooping-cough and grippe. So, although her pulse was 120 a minute, and so feeble as to be hardly perceptible, and the wasting of her body so extreme that she could not stand without support, I did not hesitate to pronounce the case bronchial, and give it as my opinion that, if we could sustain her strength long enough for remedies to act, she would be saved. She was immediately placed under medicated air treatment, with tonics to impart appetite and digestives to help the enfeebled stomach to transform nourishments into chyle and blood. Within a week she showed signs of amendment. Her progress was necessarily slow, as the healing powers of the body were nearly exhausted before the first inhalation was given, but she gradually acquired more and more strength, and within six weeks was able to take short walks in the open air. She recovered perfectly in about six months, and is alive and well to-day.

This case shows the importance of a correct diagnosis and proper adaptation of the treatment of the conditions to be remedied. Had the true nature of her disease not been discovered just when it was, she would have lost her life through wrong treatment, and been recorded as another death by consumption.

Every form of bronchitis is curable by local antiseptic and healing remedies applied directly to the lungs by medicated air inhalation, but none of them by stomach treatment. The stomach is not the part affected. The air tubes and cells of the lungs are the seat of every bronchial disease, and unless remedies capable of changing their bad secretions and healing the inflamed tubes are applied to them, cure is impossible. To treat bronchial and other lung diseases through the stomach and hold out a hope of cure by that treatment is malpractice, and ought to be punished as a crime against the sick.

The First Philippine Preacher

FROM Rev. T. G. Steward, Chaplain 25th Infantry now stationed at Manila, we have received a very interesting letter concerning the career of Nicholas Zamora, the first native preacher outside the Romish church. Zamora is a young man whose parents were Catholics. His father became a Protestant in heart years ago, and was banished from home and family by priestly influence, but afterward permitted to return to Manila. "This circumstance, with others," writes Chaplain Steward, "filled the heart of Nicholas with a detestation of the doctrines of the Romish Church. He passed several years in a Jesuitical college. Now that he has become a Protestant, he preaches every Sunday to an earnest congregation of his brethren. He is by nature warm-hearted and genial, and God will yet give him to his people as a preacher of love. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pray for him that God may give him a glorious baptism of love. He is a Methodist, and his address is Calle Batario, No. 13, Manila."

NICHOLAS ZAMORA

French Mothers and the Gospel

An excellent work among the women of France is being done by Madame Dalencourt, of Paris. Brought up as a strict Roman Catholic, she was much impressed by some words spoken to her by a Christian lady, who was her fellow teacher in a public school. Madame Dalencourt had become very anxious about her father and the teacher was sympathizing with her. She mentioned some passages of Scripture that might help her; but Madame Dalencourt replied that as a Catholic she read only such extracts as the Church recommended. The teacher said: "Suppose your good father, believing he was going to die, and not wishing to leave you without his counsel, wrote a letter for his children; and, that after his death, some of the elder brothers should take possession of the letter and say: 'We will not let you read it all, but we will let you read some extracts,' would you be satisfied? Well, your priests do that: they keep from you your Heavenly Father's letter."

These words, "Your Heavenly Father's letter," lead Madame Dalencourt to read the Bible, and were the first dawn of light on her soul, though it was not till some years later that she publicly left the Church of Rome. She spent some months in England, and whilst there became interested in the working and influence of some of the mothers' meetings in London; and on her return to Paris she began to gather the women together in her own home. The work thus started has extended to about twenty other towns and villages in France; other Christian women being encouraged by her example to try and teach their poorer sisters about the love of Jesus. It consists, in most places, besides the mothers' meetings, of classes for children and temperance work; and while there is frequent opposition to it and many efforts are made by priests to draw away those who come to the meetings, there is proof that God is blessing his message, in the changed lives of many, both old and young.

Would Not Part With It

BODE, IOWA.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—The Red Letter Testament is convenient in size, and the exact words of Christ, being printed in red, makes it exceedingly convenient for reference. It seems to me it presents those sayings more prominently than is done in ordinary print, thus arresting attention and accomplishing much more good than could otherwise be done. I would not part with my copy for many times the cost. T. M. M. H.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL MARVEL OF THE AGE.

You can play it. Not the slightest knowledge of music required. Hum into the mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest. It is a money-making and music-supplying feature for churches and all other entertainments.

CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND, PATERSON, N. J.

The above photograph represents the Church Choir Zobo Band of Paterson, N.J., which was organized by the church choir and organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for church purposes. It was a great success. Hundreds of church choirs have Zobo bands and find them of great value. Zobo Concerts always draw large audiences.

READ WHAT PASTORS AND ORGANISTS SAY ABOUT ZOBO:

Chas. W. Diehl, 107 West 127th Street, New York City, Music Director of S. S. Class of Harlem Presbyterian Church, says:

"I have used the Zobo Instruments in my Sunday School Class for the past year with big success."

Miss Hattie E. Kountz, of Springfield, S. D., organist, choir leader, says: "Zobo instruments received, and are all right, and we want more of them."

Rev. James C. Mitchell, of North Easton, N.J., says: "I have just received the Zobo cornet, and I am delighted with it; will organize a band."

Wm. F. Miller, organist and director of church choir of Park Ave. Baptist Church of Paterson, N. J., says: "I find the Zobo brass instruments to be first-class, and just what we needed. We have a 14-piece Zobo band and intend to enlarge it. We have had one Zobo concert and would say it was a big success."

Mac Blance Winfield, instructor of music at Gallaway Female College, of Searcy, Ark., says: "I am much pleased with the Zobo band instruments. I could not and would not do without them, either in my orchestra or in my clubs, as they give much beauty and volume to the orchestral parts." (This orchestra plays only high-class music.)

Also refer you to Rev. A. G. Stewart, of Raymond, S. D.; Rev. C. McKibbin, of East Grand Forks, Minn.; Rev. W. H. Sampson, of St. John, West New Brunswick, Canada; Rev. A. S. Willoughby, of Moorland, Ia.

Had we space we could quote thousands of such letters from pastors and prominent citizens who have Zobo instruments. With a full Zobo band A GRAND PIPE ORGAN EFFECT can be obtained. To Churches that have no pipe organ Zobo supplies the want at a small cost. Churches without a paid choir should organize a Zobo Church Choir band. It is a money-making and music-supplying feature. To you personally a Zobo cornet affords unlimited pleasure in your home, as you can play it with forcible effect without the aid of other Zobo instruments which usually constitute a complete Zobo band. The Zobo cornet is also an excellent accompaniment to a piano, organ, or any string instrument. We especially call the attention of vocalists to Zobo instruments, as they open up new possibilities for the improvement and high cultivation of the voice.

We were awarded first prize, Gold Medal, at the Greater American Exhibition, Omaha, Neb.

$1. SPECIAL OFFER. To introduce the new Musical Wonder, and to give you a chance to test our instruments and prove all our claims, we will send the Zobo Cornet, solid brass, highly polished and lacquered, 11 inches long, 5½ inch bell, with full instructions how to play, and our illustrated catalogue by mail, prepaid, for $1.00. This is an exceptional offer, and you should not miss it. We warrant each instrument just as represented, or money refunded. Send money by registered letter, post-office money order, a bank draft payable to our order, or have your store-keeper order for you.

MOODY'S LAST APPEAL*

The Great Revival Which Closed the Evangelist's Earthly Career

MR. MOODY left home for the last time on November 8, 1899. His family had no suspicion that he was not enjoying his usual health and strength. He had engaged to conduct a week's meetings in Kansas City, Mo. He reached Kansas City a sick man.

The great auditorium in which the meetings were held is estimated to hold easily 15,000 people. Friends say that fully that number attended his first Sunday meetings, while thousands were unable to gain admittance. "It was a thrilling spectacle. The great arena, like a valley filled with upturned faces, and the balconies, thronged like receding hillsides covered with a countless multitude—and a solemn silence hovering over them all! Alone in that great assemblage stood Mr. Moody, at the front end of the extended platform. His voice sounded as though he was talking confidentially to a man in the eighth or tenth row.

Thursday, November 16th, was the day on which he preached for the last time. On the afternoon of that day, his subject was "Grace in a Three-fold Aspect" (Titus 2:11-14).

That last night Convention Hall was well filled. Mr. Moody showed no signs of exhaustion. His last sermon on earth was on "Excuses." He read the parable as found in Luke 14:16-24, beginning: "Then said he unto him: A certain man made a great supper, and bade many: and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come: for all things are now ready. And they all with one consent began to make excuse."

Had he known that this was to be his last sermon could he have made a more urgent and characteristic appeal in closing:

"Suppose we should write out to-night this excuse. How would it sound? 'To the King of Heaven. While sitting in Convention Hall, Kansas City. Mo., November 16th, 1899, I received a very pressing invitation from one of your servants to be present at the marriage supper of your only-begotten Son. I pray thee have me excused.'

"Would you sign that, young man? Would you, mother? Would you come up to the reporter's table, take a pen and put your name down to such an excuse? You would say, 'Let my right hand forget its cunning, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, before I sign that.' I doubt if there is one here who would sign it. Will you then pay no attention to God's invitation? I beg of you, do not make light of it. It is a loving God inviting you to a feast, and God is not to be mocked. Go play with the forked lighting, go trifle with pestilence and disease, but trifle not with God.

"Just let me write out another answer. 'To the King of Heaven. While sitting in Convention Hall, Kansas City, Mo., November 16th, 1899. I received a pressing invitation from one of your messengers to be present at the marriage supper of your only-begotten Son. I hasten to reply. By the grace of God I will be present.'

"Who will sign that? Is there one here who will put his name to it? Is there no one who will say, 'By the grace of God I will accept the invitation now?' May God bring you to a decision now. If you would ever see the kingdom of God, you must decide this question one way or the other. What will you do with the invitation? I bring it to you in the name of my Master; will you accept or reject it? Be wise to-night, and accept the invitation. Make up your mind that you will not go away till the question of eternity is settled."

Day by day passed in much the same way. Mr. Moody found it impossible to walk, although it did not trouble him to stand for an hour twice daily before those large audiences, and preach. On Thursday he had quite a chill, and had to summon a doctor on Friday. Under the doctor's advice he decided to relinquish all further attempt to proceed with the mission.

A beautiful incident occurred on the homeward journey—illustrative of what used to happen very frequently of late years.

When the train pulled into Detroit it was over an hour late, and unless at least half of this time should be made up, the eastern connection at Niagara for the through Boston train could not be made. As the train was standing in the station at Detroit, waiting for the signal to start, the engineer, a grizzled old veteran of the rail, came back along the car until he reached the special car.

"Whose car is this?" he asked one of the party who was standing outside.

"It's a special, taking Mr. Moody to his home," was the reply.

"We are about an hour late, and if we don't make up the time we won't make the proper connections for Boston."

"Look here," said the engineer, his voice choking as he spoke, "fifteen years ago I was converted by Moody, and I have lived a better and a happier life ever since. I didn't know Moody's car was on to-night, but if you want me to make up the time for you, I'll do it. Just tell Mr. Moody that one of his friends is at the throttle, and then hold your breath."

As soon as the train got clear of the city the engineer pulled open the throttle, and it is said that he made the fastest time ever made over his division.

SIX CHOICE ROSE PLANTS FREE

We will give, absolutely free and postpaid, six choice Rose plants, assorted, one each, red, white, yellow and pink, two of intermediate colors, to any person who will send us twenty-five cents for a six months' trial subscription for our great monthly magazine, HOW TO GROW FLOWERS. This offer is good for a limited time only. These Roses are sold by florists for ten cents each The plants we send out are vigorous and thrifty. They are on their own roots, AND WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER. The kinds will be specially selected to suit your climate. This offer may be taken advantage of only by persons not already subscribers for HOW TO GROW FLOWERS. Order today.

HOW TO GROW FLOWERS is by far the best floral journal published. Each number contains 36 large pages, printed on fine book paper, beautifully illustrated. It tells when, how and what to plant, when and how to prune, when and how to mulch, how to protect in Winter, how to get rid of insects, water and heat needed, how to bed out plants, the best varieties, about floral decorations, and gives complete directions for having success with flowers. It is the only floral paper not run by commercial florists. Worth a dollar a year.

HOW TO GROW FLOWERS is a work of art, all the illustrations made from photographs, thus showing flowers as they actually are. The great merit of our magazine, though, is its practical helpfulness to all who love and grow flowers. It is an indispensable aid, whether you have a single plant or a large collection. No flower lover can afford to be without it. We want you to try HOW TO GROW FLOWERS, believing once you have seen it you will always be a subscriber. Hence this great special offer, good for thirty days only.

Gospel Work in Matanzas

Pastor Cova's Mission Which has Prospered Amid Great Opposition

TEN months ago a notable Christian work was begun in Matanzas, Cuba. The Rev. J. V. Cova, a Baptist pastor, came thither with his family to establish a Gospel Mission. It was opened with only five members and amid a storm of hostility from the local priests. He found not a paper that was willing to announce the services or make any mention of the work. He rented a large house for a chapel, but on the owner learning that it was intended for a Baptist mission, she refused to give him the key. He was obliged to look for another home for the mission. The Lord answered his prayers, and the little church of five members has now fifty-six communicants and many candidates under probation. The hall is crowded at every meeting by eager multitudes, earnestly receiving the Gospel and hearing the songs of salvation.

Mr. Cova writes: "We are going to move to better quarters in a few days. Our latest place is a large hall with a seating capacity of 250, and when repairs are finished it will have a really fine appearance. We also keep a free day mission, with sixty-four children and young ladies, where they are taught reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography, drawing, the English language and the Bible. Our Sunday School numbers some seventy children, with six teachers. We have also organized a Young People's Society for Bible training and missionary work, with twenty-five members up to date. I have, besides, two other preaching places in this city, where I speak to the people in Spanish and English once a week. At the first, we hold a morning service at 9 A.M. every Sunday, and an evening meeting on the same day at 7:30 P.M. The Sunday School gathers at 10 A.M. I ask the prayers of God's people for this work.

"Matanzas is a fine city, the second on the island, with two magnificent rivers, three splendid bridges, good hotels and nice buildings. Its surroundings embrace some of the finest scenery human eyes ever beheld. The population is 50,000, though, since the war, I fear it has been somewhat reduced."

PASTOR COVAS' MISSION SCHOOL IN MATANZAS

Our Porto Rico Children

From Rev. Mr. Jamieson. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Sunday School Superintendent in Porto Rico, comes another cheerful letter, giving account of the progress of our readers' work among the native children of the island capital. He writes:

"On Sunday last, in spite of the stormy, rainy weather, there were between fifty and sixty pupils in attendance at the Puerto de Tierra School. Of late there has been considerable sickness in the district, resulting, no doubt, from the recent heavy rains. This has necessarily kept away many who would have otherwise been glad to be present. Both parents and children are giving every evidence that they fully appreciate the benefits of the mission work that has been established in their midst. The Thursday evening service for adults is regularly maintained and well attended, especially by the more earnest and religiously disposed.

"The school is under good, efficient management, and everything is being done to promote the best interests of both parents and children in the school and in their homes by systematic visitation during the week. Could we secure larger quarters we could doubtless double our present number, but that is out of the question, as every habitation in Puerta de Tierra is full to overflowing.

"Rev. Mr. McCormick has opened a mission at Caguas, which is receiving the support of the intelligent portion of the community and is proving quite successful. Rev. Mr. Greene, the superintendent of the Presbyterian Mission in Santurce, is having abundant success, his meetings being largely attended. Generally speaking, the outlook for the success of Gospel work is decidedly encouraging."

The Princess to the Widows

The following open letter to the women and children of the soldiers who have fallen in South Africa was written by the Princess of Wales. It shows how tender is the heart of the best-beloved lady in England, and also shows that she has learned where to go for comfort in sorrow:

"My heart bleeds for the poor widows and faterless, whhose loved ones hav meet a glorious death fighting for their Queen and country. May God help and comfort them in their saddened circumstances, and give them that peace which passeth understanding.

"Peace, perfect peace: with loved ones far away.
In Jesus' keeping we are safe and they."

ALEXANDRA, Princess of Wales.

Aunt Samantha a Great Teacher

ROME, PA.

Dear Editor:—One of your subscribers, who is receiving so much help from the weekly visits of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, feels that he can no longer withhold an expression of his gratitude. Each copy of this great paper, while in every way so complete in itself in its various departments, always has something better for its readers the next week. In this consists its beauty and power. Thank God for the reserved power of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

How full of pleasure and profit is "The Trip Around the World with Aunt Samantha!" How much we all owe to this truly great woman! More, I think, than to any other, not excepting Mrs. H. B. Stowe. We cannot help feeling that if Elder Wessel can much longer resist such a Gospel as she preaches, it will be because "there is no light in him." Prophetess, teacher, preacher of righteousness, and healer of the discouraged and downhearted in this practical, every-day life of ours, our thanks to you. FRANCES E. B.

Our Missionary Model

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 8. John 4: 5–15

ONE of the most significant incidents in our Lord's ministry was this talk with the woman of Samaria. It was the more remarkable because of the nationality of the woman. It would be difficult for us in these days to fully realize the hatred and contempt the Jews felt for the Samaritans. The Jew could not forget their heathen origin as described in II. Kings 17, and he knew that their profession of allegiance to God was merely a desire to propitiate the being whom they regarded as the God of the land. The refusal of Ezra and Nehemiah to allow them to participate in the building of the second temple increased the original prejudice, and subsequent events developed it still more. The Jew had to admit that the Samaritans were human beings, but he scorned them as he did dogs and swine, and would go a long distance out of his way, when he traveled, to avoid the degradation of contact with them. No wonder that the disciples "marveled that he talked with the woman."

The woman was as much astonished as they. But Jesus had taken the sure way to a woman's heart by asking her to do him a favor. She was curious to know what manner of Jew this was. Availing himself of this curiosity, and still preserving the figure of the water, Jesus tells her of his power. Through the conversation that followed, she tries to get away from the personal trend, to the theoretical and the doctrinal, while Christ, delicately but firmly, applies the truth to her own soul. Finally, he so impresses her with his power and authority, that she leaves her waterpot and goes to summon her neighbors. The conversation thus led to a work that continued for two days and brought many converts.

The church was slow to follow the example set by the Master. The admission of the Gentiles that Paul won was grudgingly granted, and long centuries passed before systematic attempts were made to carry the Gospel to the heathen. Even to this day, there are classes in Christian lands outside the pale of Gospel influence, that are not reached. Respectable Christianity gathers up its skirts lest it be defiled and forgets how its Lord talked with the outcast and did not shrink from one whose character was notoriously bad.

We sometimes fail to reach those who need the Gospel most, because we do not take the view of them that Christ took. He said that if this woman had known she would have sought. He seemed to think that it was not urging and pressing that she needed so much as knowledge. She did not know the gift of God nor who it was that talked to her, otherwise she would have asked and he would have given. It is so now. There are multitudes who do not know that the blessing is within their reach. Even if they know of the blessing, they are apt to think it is not for such as they. It was when the woman learned that Christ was aware of her degradation when he made the offer, that she was really moved to seek it. How glad many a weary soul would be to be assured of that fact. They do not know of the gift, they do not know what a transformation it makes in a life, and they do not know that it is really possible for them to secure it. What a glorious work is that of enlightening them! No pulpit is necessary for that work, no ordination, no formal authorization. Every Christian may do as Christ did: deal with some solitary soul with whom he comes in contact. It is as truly missionary work as is that which is done by the noble men and women who go to heathen lands, and it brings the same reward.

It is worthy of notice how frequently Christ talked with a solitary hearer. He who had audiences of five thousand did not think his time wasted in conversing with one person. If he who had so much to impart and so short a time in which to impart it, could afford to speak with one soul, and to so adapt his conversation to its understanding and mode of thought as to win its confidence, surely such work is not beneath us. So much may be done in this way because the soul won may, as in this case, bring others to him.

The case of Henry Jones, of Zenas, Ind., is one of those rare ones, according to physicians, of a combination of diseases from which the person attacked seldom recovers, the combination consisting of rheumatism, la grippe and indigestion. Mr. Jones, who is 62 years old, says:

"My sufferings were almost unbearable, and only persons having been afflicted with this rare and dreaded combination of diseases can imagine what they were like. I was confined to my bed almost all the time. My doctor finally acknowledged that neither he nor any one else could cure me. I would not give up, so tried different medicines and finally began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The first box of pills helped me some, and I took some more. The second box began to produce the desired result, and before I had finished the fourth box I was at last a cured man. That was last March, and I have not been troubled with these diseases since.—From the Banner Plain Dealer, North Vernon, Ind.

The Armenian Orphans' Christmas

FROM Mardin, in ancient Mesopotamia, Mrs. Helen Dewey Thom sends this description of a Christmas celebration among the Armenian orphans, many of whom are supported by our generous readers.

MARDIN, TURKEY, February 12.

Dear Editor:—Christmas will be an old story by the time this letter reaches you; but perhaps your readers, who so kindly send us each year a generous sum toward the support of the Mardin Orphanage, would enjoy learning how our thirty little girls celebrated the happy day. I went down to see them one evening a few days before Christmas, and after we had exchanged "salaams" and seated ourselves, I asked them, "When will Christmas be?" There was quite a difference of opinion. Some said, "Next Saturday;" some, "Next Monday," and others, "Don't know." Never having celebrated it in their own homes, they had not gotten into the habit of counting the days until it should arrive. Having told them what the day would be, I said, "How shall we celebrate it?" All said, "As you like," which is a customary answer to any such question in this country; but it was not a very satisfactory answer, so I tried to draw them out by a few questions. "Who was born 1899 years ago?" "Why did he come to this world?" "What did his life and death mean for us?" "Ought we to love him and be grateful to him?" "How can we show our love and gratitude to him?" It was agreed that we ought to give something in return for all the dear Saviour gave for us. "Can we give anything to him?" No, but he has said that giving to the poor and to the least of his disciples, is the same as giving to him. They looked pleased at this, but again looked sober, for they said they had nothing to give. "All our clothes and our food and everything we have is given to us; we have nothing of our own to give." "Well," I said, "we will suppose that I am a poor beggar woman and some one comes along the street and gives me a piece of bread for my dinner. Isn't that piece of bread mine?" "Yes." "And if I see a little hungry child and choose to go hungry in order to let him have my piece of bread, is it not I that gives the bread?" "Yes." "Well, you children, this Christmas, if you are willing to go hungry that day, can give the food to some poor people. Would you like to do it?" They all said "Yes." So it was decided that they should eat but one meal on Christmas day.

And if you, readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, could have looked into my upper hall that day, you would have seen a half bushel of lentils, a small pile of bread, made of barley flour, and a bag of raisins and nuts (for they gave up also their Sunday luncheon treat of nuts and raisins, which in this country are quite plenty and cheap). The orphans' contribution gave a Christmas dinner to eight poor families and the orphans went to bed hungry but happy, for they had proved that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." A few days later, at New Year's, we gave each one a new handkerchief, a little calico bag of "goodies" and a picture card, and they were radiantly happy over them.

They all send their "salaams" and grateful thanks to their dear CHRISTIAN HERALD friends.

HELEN DEWEY THOM.

The Red Letter Testament

A Loving Wife's Birthday Gift to Her Husband

FARNHAM, VA.

Dear Editor.—Your Red Letter New Testament received. It is a perfect gem. I never read the inspired Word with as much interest before, and I am now descending the "hill of life." Would like to have just such a little book in my hand when I die after I had gotten it all into my heart. My husband, who has been declining for many weeks, said enthusiastically when I showed it to him: "Send and get me one. I want to keep it in my pocket and have it near me all the time." I told him I would give him mine on the eleventh of April—his eighty-second birthday. God grant he may be here to read it then! but, I have my tears. Pray for us. May the good Lord bless the one whose brain gave birth to this beautiful thought and whose hands carried it out!

Yours, in his name, MRS. R. H.

Beyond All Expectations

SIMONS, O.

Dear Editor:—We received the Red Letter Testament and are much pleased with it. It exceeds our expectations; the binding is fine, material of covers extra good, paper of first-class quality and printing exceedingly clear and correct. As to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we take more solid pleasure in reading it than any paper.

Yours in Christian fellowship, J. W. I.

A Friend's Kind Wishes

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Dear Sir:—I beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the Red Letter New Testament on the renewal of my subscription. I have now been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for three or four years and think it one of the best family papers published. I trust it will keep on securing new subscribers so that many more homes in this Christian land of ours will be benefited thereby.

MRS. LETTIE F. H.

A GOD-SEND TO ALL HUMANITY.

Invention of an Ohioan That Produces Perfect Health, Strength and Beauty to Every User, and Relieves Without Drugs, All Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Blood and Kidney Troubles, Weakness, and the Most Obstinate Diseases, by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons Out of the System.

Ministers and Those Who Have Used It Declare It to Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced, Better Than Any Treatment at Hot Springs, Sanitariums or Health Resorts.

A genius of the Queen City has placed on the market a Vapor Bath Cabinet that has proven a blessing to every man, woman or child who has used it.

Recent investigation of this remarkable invention was so very satisfactory that we have no hesitancy in indorsing the same as just what all readers need.

It is an air-tight inclosure, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, enjoys at home, for three cents each, all the marvelous cleansing, curative and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish Bath, Hot Vapor, or Medicated Bath with no possibility of taking cold afterwards, or in any way weakening the system.

Hundreds of well-known physicians have given up their practice to sell this Cabinet—such eminent men as Emerson McKay, Detroit, who has already sold over 700, and John C. Wright, Chicago, who sold 125 last month.

Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the makers from users, some of which, referring to

will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., writes: "My father was down in bed for months with rheumatism; this Cabinet did him more good than $50 worth of drugs." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated with rheumatism and kidney troubles, when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use relieved me. I have never had a twinge since." Rev. Geo. H. Hudson, Okemos, Mich., says: "I gave up my pastorate on account of nervous prostration and lung troubles; my editor so highly recommended your Cabinet, I tried it: From that day I have steadily grown better; am now well; nervousness gone; lungs strong; am a new man." Mrs. Ober, No. 994 Broad St., Columbus, O., writes: "It is grand for relieving colds, la grippe, inflammation, aches, pains; it relieved my uncle of neuralgia and sleeplessness, with which he had long suffered. A neighbor relieved herself of la grippe in one night, her little girl of measles, her son of croup. Another neighbor of eczema of many years' standing." Hon. A. B. Strickland, of Bloomington, writes that the Cabinet did him more good than two years' doctoring, relieved him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, with which he had long been afflicted.

Hundreds of Ministers

write, praising this Cabinet. Rev. H. C. Roernaes, Everett, Kan., says: "It's a blessing; made me full of life and vigor; should be in use in every family." Rev. J. C. Richardson, N. Fifth Street, Roxbury, Mass., was greatly benefited by its use, and recommends it highly, as also does Prof. R. E. P. Kline, of Ottawa University, who says: "I find it a great benefit. No Christian should be without it." Hon. V. C. Hay, St. Joe, Mo., writes: "Physicians gave me up to die; was persuaded by friends to try this Cabinet, and it relieved me. I can not praise it enough." Rev. Baker Smith, D.D., Fairmont, N. J., says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pain, and as cleanliness is next to godliness, it merits high recommendation."

Congressmen John J. Lentz, Mrs. Kendricks Prin. of Vassar College; John T. Brown, Editor "Christian Guide"; Rev. C. M. Keith, Editor "Holiness Advocate," as well as hundreds of clergymen, bankers, governors, physicians and influential people, recommend it highly.

It Prevents Disease, and physicians are unanimous in claiming that colds, la grippe, fevers, smallpox, consumption, kidney trouble, Bright's disease, cancer—in fact, such marvelous eliminative power has this Cabinet that no disease can gain a foothold in your body if you take these hot Thermal Baths weekly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book, issued by the makers. To this Cabinet has marvelous power. Dr. Shepard, of Brooklyn, states that he has never failed to draw out the deadly poison of snake bites, hydrophobia, blood poison, etc., by this Vapor Bath, proving that it is the most wonderful blood purifier known. If people, instead of filling their system with more poisons by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and steam out these poisons, and assist nature to act, they would have pure blood, and a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

Relieve Blood and Skin Diseases

The Important Feature of this Cabinet is that it gives a hot vapor bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands, drawing out all the impure salts, acids and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs, and cause disease, debility and sluggishness. Astonishing is the improvement in health, feeling and complexion. The first bath makes you feel like a new being—10 years younger.

With the Cabinet, if desired, is a

in which the face, head and neck are given the same vapor treatment as the body, producing the most wonderful results; removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions, relieves Catarrh, Asthma and Bronchitis

O. C. Smith, Mt. Healthy, O., writes: "Since using this Cabinet my Catarrh, Asthma and Hay Fever, with which I have been afflicted since childhood, has never returned. Worth $1,000 to me. I have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted. My wife finds it excellent for her ills."

Whatever

Will Hasten Perspiration

every one knows is beneficial, but other methods are crude and insignificant, when compared to the convenience and marvelous power of this Cabinet, known as the new 1902 style

Square Quaker Folding Thermal

Bath Cabinet. We find it to be a genuine Cabinet, with a real door, opening wide, as shown in cut. When closed it is air-tight; handsomely made of best, most durable, waterproof goods, rubber-lined. A heavy steel frame supports it, making it a strong and substantial bathroom within itself. It has top curtains; in fact, all the latest improvements.

The makers furnish an excellent stove with each Cabinet, also valuable recipes and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions. It folds flat in 1 inch space, when not in use; easily carried; weighs but 10 pounds.

People don't need bathrooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room, and bath tubs have been discarded since this invention, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick room its advantages are at once apparent.

After investigation, it can be said the Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the

and assert positively that this Cabinet will benefit Nervous Troubles, Debility, Purify the Blood, Beautify the Skin and relieve Rheumatism. (They offer $50.00 reward for a case not relieved.) Benefits the most obstinate cases of Women's Troubles, La Grippe, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Malaria, Headaches, Obesity, Gout, Sciatica, Eczema, Scrofula, Piles, Dropsy, Blood and Skin Diseases, Liver and Kidney Troubles. It will

Break Up the Worst Cold

with one bath, all symptoms of La Grippe, Fevers, Pneumonia, Consumption, Asthma, and is really a household necessity. Gives the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, for its great value is its marvelous power to draw out of the system all impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is truly a God-send to all humanity.

Cleansing and Refreshing Bath

HOW TO GET ONE.

All readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease and are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and Healthful properties.

Write the World Mfg. Co., 1446 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets describing this invention. The price is wonderfully low, only $5.00 complete, with heater, directions and formulas. Head attachment, if desired, $1.00 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet; you won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and agree to refund your money after 30 days' use if not just as represented.

The Cabinet is just as represented, and will be shipped promptly. You can remit safely by express, P. O. money order, bank draft, or certified check.

Don't fail to send for booklet, anyway.

The Cabinet is a Wonderful Seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and many are making from $100 to $150 every month, and expenses. Write to-day.

THE ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA IS THE STANDARD OF THE WORLD.

GREATEST GENERAL HISTORY.
GREATEST SCIENTIFIC WORK.
GREATEST THEOLOGICAL WORK.
GREATEST BIOGRAPHICAL WORK.
GREATEST ART WORK.
GREATEST GEOGRAPHICAL WORK.

Every article upon these and every other subject is treated exhaustively by the greatest known specialists, hence every article is the best, most reliable and satisfactory that the whole world can furnish.

FAR MORE VALUABLE TO AMERICANS THAN THE ENGLISH EDITION.

The English edition contains no information later than 1890. It contains no biographies of living individuals, no biographies of such men as Bismarck, Gladstone, Grant, Blaine; they all being alive when the Britannica was published.

All these and thousands of articles on Science, Art, Literature, etc., of special interest to Americans are supplied by our American Supplement, the work of 500 experts.

It brings the entire work down to date, having articles on the Boers, South African Republic, Spanish-American War, none of which are found in the English Edition.

OUR NEW APPENDIX VOLUME, with our exhaustive American Supplement, takes every important title in the work and gives all that is recent concerning it, bringing information down to date. It contains also 52 New Maps, including the new Government Map of Klondike, Hawaii, Cuba. Thus, with our supplemental volumes, the Britannica becomes the latest as well as the greatest.

TO CANADIAN READERS.—This edition can be legally sent into Canada.

Remember

THIS IS THE ONLY REPRINT published in the world that is not altered, mutilated or abridged in some way.

THAT IT IS ABSOLUTELY COMPLETE, containing every one of the 8000 illustrations, 700 maps, 25,000 articles and 250,000 index references found in the original, and at less than one-half the price.

We Employ No Agents

We give to our subscribers all the discount that other publishers give to their agents. This makes a large saving to our customers.

NOTE.—A large discount will also be given on the more expensive binding.

These Questions Will be Answered May 2

1. To which of its languages, living or dead, is the world most indebted, and why?
2. Which war of the nineteenth century did most to benefit the world?
3. What is the meaning of Ecclesiastes 7 : 16: "Be not righteous over-much; neither make thyself over-wise; why shouldst thou destroy thyself?"
4. Supposing that there were no hereafter, would it pay to live a religious life?
5. What imperial ruler sat on his throne for more than three hundred years?
6. What may be regarded as the seven most useful inventions of the nineteenth century?
7. Since we may presume that Christ knew that he would raise Lazarus from the dead, how are we to account for his weeping on reaching the site of the sepulchre?
8. Christ purposely used parables in his earthly ministry, as will be seen on reference to Mark 4: 10-12. A hasty reader might be led to argue that the Master did not intend his hearers to understand and receive the truth. How can such an objection be best answered?
9. If a person has one hundred dollars that he regards as the Lord's tenth, what would be a good way of dividing it? What proportion to the church, to foreign missions, to the poor and sick, etc.
10. In view of the fact that Christ said, "Swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne," etc., is a Christian justified in taking the oath as a juryman or as a witness in a court of justice?

Questions of the Week

1. Should church music be confined entirely to such as is promptly recognizable as sacred in its character or may purely operatic airs and sentimental tunes be laid under tribute in public worship?

All music tending to the inspiration of feelings of devotion for things good, beautiful and true, may well be called sacred. The tunes of many of the hymns commonly sung, if divorced entirely from the words with which we habitually associate them, would be considered light, in some cases poor music. It is chiefly the words and the use to which they have been put, that have rendered these sacred. On the other hand, there are few pieces more liable to elevate the soul and fill the heart with grander, nobler, purer sentiments, than many of those commonly termed secular; such, for instance, as the sublime aria, "O du mein holder Abendstern," from Tannhauser; or the "Simple Aven," of Thomas Thome; or even the much hackneyed, but still beautiful "Intermezzo" from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." Such masterpieces are prayers without words, and in the hearts of many are capable of inspiring deeper veneration, than the simple strains of many of the most sacred hymns. J. M. BECK.

2. Who is the author of the following lines and in what connection do they appear?

"That book of memory
Which is to grieving hearts as the sweet South
To the parched meadow, or the dying tree;
Which fills with elegy the craving mouth
Of sorrow—slakes with song the piteous dronth
And leaves her calm, though weeping silently!"

The author is Charles Tennyson Turner, a brother of the late laureate; and the reference is to Tennyson's "In Memoriam," which poem expresses its author's grief upon the death of Arthur Henry Hallam, the son of the historian, Henry Hallam, who was engaged to marry Tennyson's sister. H. M.

3. When were gold and silver first used for coinage?

Coined money was probably first used about eight hundred years before Christ by the Greeks. The oldest Asiatic coinage was about 536 years B. C., in the time of Cyrus, King of Persia. The use of coined money by the Jews is mentioned in Ezra and Nehemia, about the same date, but this is supposed to be Persian gold money (the Darics). There seems to be no mention of Hebrew coinage before the period of the Apocryphal books. In the first book of Maccabees it is mentioned that Antiochus VII. allowed Simon Maccabaeus to coin money with his own stamp. This is the first record of Jewish coined money, about 140 years B. C. The Persian Daric, mentioned in the Old Testament, was a gold coin, so named after Darius, the name of several Persian kings. It was a coin a little heavier than a half eagle (U. S. money). On one side there was a half length figure of a king armed with dart and bow, the other side an irregular square sunk in the metal, valued about $5.52 (U. S. money).

J. F. BEATH.

4. Is there any particular significance in the number twenty-one in the firing of a national salute?

Yes; it is a matter of graduation. Thus, eleven guns is the salute for commodore, thirteen for a rear-admiral, seventeen for admiral, and so on, the guns fired increasing in a certain ratio for Secretary of the Navy, representatives of foreign governments, etc., until the maximum of twenty-one is reached in greeting the President of the United States or in any national salute. EDGAR MCDONALD.

INAUGURATING THE WORK ON NEW YORK'S GREAT UNDERGROUND RAILWAY

A ceremony of national importance took place on Saturday, March 24, when the Mayor of New York, with a silver spade, broke ground in City Hall Park and inaugurated the great work of constructing the monster tunnel which is to provide New York with an underground system of rapid transit. The park was beautifully decorated with naval flags, some of which excited no little curiosity because of their novel design. About 20,000 people were gathered to witness the rite. The monster subway will be finished in three years; it will cost $35,000,000; 10,000 workmen will be employed; the daily pay-roll will be $20,000; the completed line will be twenty-one miles; the running time from City Hall to the Bronx will be forty-five minutes; to Ninety-sixth Street, thirteen minutes. The contractor is Mr. John B. McDonald. The engineering feat is the greatest ever undertaken on this continent, and the contract is said to be the largest ever recorded.

5. To what is the twinkling of the stars due?

The twinkling of the fixed stars is due to the diversity of the different strata of air through which the light passes. The white light of the stars is made up of the several colors of the spectrum, and in passing through the different strata, some rare, moist or warm is very unequally transmitted, sometimes one color predominating and then another, causing the stars to seem to change color. As the purity and density of the air vary, the twinkling of the stars changes and is greatest at the horizon. MAUDE MUNSON.

6. What is the origin of the order of the "Daughters of the American Revolution"?

The Sons of the American Revolution excluded women from membership in their order. Miss Eugenia Washington, a descendant of Samuel Washington, a brother of George Washington, considered this exclusion an injustice, and in May, 1890, had a conference with Mrs. Flora Adams Darling regarding the injustice of the exclusion, and decided to form a patriotic order of women. On October 11, 1890, Miss Washington, Mrs. Darling, Miss Ellen H. Walworth, Miss Mary Desha, and Mrs. Mary S. Lockwood met together and organized the Daughters of the American Revolution, with headquarters at Washington, D. C. There are now 492 State chapters in 44 States and territories, and 27,000 members. A. M. WING.

7. If I discover valuable minerals under my own land, and in process of digging for them, find that the lode passes the dividing line between my own and another man's property, have I a right to continue mining under his property?

No; neither morally nor legally, unless with his consent. If a man owns an absolute fee simple title to land, he also owns everything that is on or under the surface. "He owns," says Blackstone, "whatever is in direct line between the surface of the land and the centre of the earth." If, therefore, I knowingly take another man's minerals from beneath the surface of his land, without his consent, I am as much a thief, legally and in morals, as though I stole his fruit trees, standing timber or growing crops from the surface.

H. C. UNDERHILL.

8. What does Christ mean when he says "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil"?

The revised version reading is, "Resist not him that is evil." The injunction was called forth by the reference in the preceding verse to the law of retalliation mentioned in Ex. 21 : 24, by which, though the execution properly belonged to the civil magistrate only, the Jews justified private revenge. It is this that our Lord condemns. He teaches us that rather than return evil for evil we should be ready to suffer a repetition of the same injury. This teaching is best illustrated by his own conduct: "When he was reviled he reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously" (I. Pet. 2: 23).

W. P. ANDREWS.

9. What particular evils may the love of money induce in a person?

According to the Apostle Paul (I. Tim. 6 : 10) the love of money is a root of all evil. That love may work havoc among those who do not possess wealth, as well as among those who do. Selfishness, greed, covetousness, which is idolatry, discontent, injustice, avarice, and murder may all be caused by the love of money. R. T. HARTWELL.

10. In what way can a person who has very little time at his disposal so read and study the Bible as to get a fairly comprehensive grasp of its contents and character?

To read the Bible with profit, one must not only read, but reflect and remember. One should read the books of the Bible consecutively; or if preferring topical study follow its topics consecutively. One should write down the characters, places, events and teachings spoken of or set forth in what we read. By sorting these notes under alphabetical headings and frequently referring to them, one's knowledge of the contents and character of the Bible will grow wonderfully. The Methodist Book Concern publishes a good plan for Bible reading, the work of Rev. A. H. Tuttle, D.D. S. M. MARSH.

Miscellaneous Questions

A. M. C., Troy, N. Y. I have been praying for a very long time for something I thought it was perfectly right to ask of the Lord, but he has not answered my prayer. Now will you give me a little advice on the subject? Must I stop praying, or would you keep on?

Keep right on praying, and if you do not ask amiss, and make your request in Jesus' name, and with full confidence in the promise, your petition will not be in vain. Prayers are answered sometimes immediately, at other times after delay, and often differently from our desire. You must ask according to God's will, nothing doubting, and in God's own time and way, the answer will be made plain.

J. T., Branchdale, Pa. A Catholic friend gave us this question to answer: "Where was God when he made heaven and earth?" He said none of us could answer it, not even our preachers. Please let us know what you think about the question.

It belongs to the category to which Paul refers in I. Tim. 4 : 5, 20, also II. Tim. 2 : 16, Titus 3 : 9. Job (15 : 3) speaks of the man who "reasons with unprofitable talk." One might easily multiply theological questions that are incapable of being answered by mortal man; but not one of such questions would touch the essential truths of Christianity, to which Paul alluded when he declared his resolution to know "nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified" (I Cor. 2 : 2.)

Praying Christian, Cal. Is it consistent for the Ladies' Aid Society of the church to make arrangements with the managers of a public ball to furnish suppers for the crowd at say $1 a couple, the money to be used to defray the expenses of the church? Many of the ladies defend their position by saying it keeps the dancers from going to the saloon-restaurants?

It certainly has the appearance of the church trafficking too much with the world, and condoning, for the sake of gain, that which it would otherwise condemn. There can be no harm, of course, in the Ladies' Aid Society conducting a temperance restaurant; but it would be unwise for them, to say the least, to seek for patronage altogether of a worldly character, and to cater to dancers as a class. They should be careful not to permit their attitude, as a part of the church organization, to be open to misconstruction, so that not even "the appearance of evil" may attach to the church in consequence.

We never like to lose our old friends; therefore we are always glad to receive such letters as this:

Dear Sir: I have very kind friends who have supplied me with reading matter of all kinds, and I am not very well; being in my eighty-first year, can not keep up with literature; thought I might dispense with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, but I find I miss it more than any of my reading. Hence my renewal. It is invaluable for its spiritual good, and as for news and morality, doctrine or science of man's duties it is all that could be desired.

MRS. C. A. H.

This is what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD aims to be to all who read it—a spiritual help and comfort to both youth and age.

Mrs. Lena S., Selma, Tex. Are the widows in India burned on their husband's grave, as I heard a young preacher say in his sermon yesterday?

Suttee, the name by which the practice of cremating the widows of India on their husband's funeral pyres has been abolished by a law passed many years ago, and if now practised at all it must be done secretly, as the perpetrators would be severely punished.

A. S., Watseka, Ill. My brother is thirty years old and has always had a good home with us, free of charge. But by his disrespect to parents, laziness, ill-temper, unkempt appearance, vulgar language, tobacco habit, and, worst of all, his detrimental influence on the younger brothers, he makes home unhappy. Would it be better for father to give him his inheritance and ask him to leave, or should he still be tolerated in the home?

We do not think any stranger can counsel in such a matter. It is a heavy cross to bear; but if you turn him away you may find yourselves confronted by a still heavier burden of remorse and unavailing regret. Idleness, probably, is the chief cause of the trouble. If the young man had some occupation in which he could employ his full energies, we believe an improvement would follow. Try to get him interested in some good enterprise with Christian people at the head of it, and where he will be impressed with the difference between a worthless, wasted life and an active, fruitful one. Above all, help him by your earnest prayers. To give him money now and turn him adrift would in most cases of a similar sort be equivalent to sending the young man to ruin (See Col. 3 : 12, 13).

J. H. B., Hartford, Conn. It was to have been expected that Mr. Sheldon would meet with abuse in some quarters; but such a criticism as that to which you refer, from its very bitterness, defeats its own object. It can have no weight with those who regard Mr. Sheldon's experiment in the proper light.

Subscriber, Kirby, W. Va. Do you consider it a sin for Christian parents to sit down and play a few games with their children or friends, such as domnoes, checkers, or something of that character, just for amusement?

No more harm in it than if you played hopscotch or riddles. By all means, cultivate innocent amusements in the home.

ONE of the most significant signs of the times is the great Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, which will be in session in New York from April 21 to May 1. As its name implies, it will include representatives of nations and denominations the world over and will bring together missionaries and clergymen and laymen who, howsoever diverse in other matters, have a common interest in the evangelization of the world. Such an assemblage will show how close is the union of churches of different names in this great work of carrying the Gospel into every land. Christ said that the harvest was great, but the laborers were few. We are only just realizing how great the harvest really is and that, although the laborers have multiplied, the results have not proportionately increased, because of the lack of organization and administrative control. All have been working with the same object in view, but while some fields have been comparatively neglected, other fields have suffered through duplication of efforts and there has been jealousy and competition, which have paralyzed effective labor. The close of this century, the most wonderful missionary century since Apostolic times, is an appropriate time for surveying the field, reviewing the work already done and forming plans for accomplishing that which remains to be done. It is matter for devout thankfulness that the various denominations can unite in such a conference and their consultation is a happy augury of future triumph for the common cause.

REV. GEORGE OWEN

It is important to remember that this will be a Conference, not a Council. It will formulate no creed, denounce no heresy, issue no edicts. It will have no authority but that which comes from the loyalty of its members to the cause they love, and their readiness to sacrifice personal predilections in the interest of the general campaign. It will discuss methods, consider problems, listen to the experiences of missionaries, receive suggestions from men who have devoted their lives to the work, and will wrestle with difficulties which are common to all heathen fields. The outcome cannot but be a clearer and wider and deeper knowledge of existing conditions and a better organized system of improving them. From every quarter of the world prayers will ascend to the great Head of the Church, that this consultation may be guided and directed by him, so that it may hasten the time when all shall know him from the least even unto the greatest.

The conference is an outgrowth of an organization formed in 1884 in this country. This was the International Missionary Union, composed of foreign missionaries retired from labor, or temporarily at home on furlough. Its object was to diffuse missionary information, to study missionary problems and to promote co-operation in missionary effort. The time now appears to be ripe for a general Ecumenical conference, which shall include representatives of all Christian nations, as the former conferences had included representatives of all evangelical denominations. Accordingly, more than two thousand invitations were sent out and have been cordially accepted. Delegates have been formally appointed and a large number of voluntary visitors from Great Britain and the continent of Europe have arranged to attend, besides the representatives of fifty-eight missionary societies and seventy-nine missionary organizations. These, with eminent missionaries now on their way from Africa, India, China, Japan and Micronesia, will make up such an assemblage as the world has never seen before.

Prominent among the delegates will be Bishop Ridley, of British Columbia, who formerly labored in Afghanistan under the services of the Church Missionary Society. Rev. J. M. Thoburn, Methodist Episcopal Bishop of India, will also attend if the condition of his health permits. Dr. Hartzell, Methodist Episcopal Bishop of Africa, the successor of the apostolic William Taylor, will be present to report the work of his church in the Dark Continent. An interesting personality will be Dr. J. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission, whose labors for China have borne rich fruit in the services of the multitude of consecrated men and women, now and in the past enlisted, by Dr. Taylor, and doing and suffering in the interior of that teeming empire. Dr. S. L. Baldwin, the veteran missionary to China from the Methodist Episcopal Church, will also be present at the conference to tell of the triumphs he has witnessed there and in Japan. Eugene Stock, the secretary of the Church Missionary Society, who probably knows more about all missionary fields than any living man in the world, will bring to the conference the help of a long experience and the matured judgment of the profound thinker and skilful organizer. From their fields in India will come Rev. E. W. Parker, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Joseph Taylor, of the Society of Friends. Miss Grace Kimball, the heroine of Armenia, will be there to describe the Christian fortitude of the converts in that oppressed land. Mary Reed will come from her leper asylum in India to tell how Christ can give hope and comfort to the afflicted sufferers from that dread disease. Dr. A. T. Pierson, who labors at home to arouse the interest of the churches in the missionary cause, will be a welcome guest and will learn the grateful honor in which he is held by the men and women at the front, whose interests he makes his own.

DR. MARY E. BRYAN

REV. C. T. WILSON

REV. W. E. COUSINS

One of the most interesting stories to be told at the conference will be that of Rev. W. E. Cousins of Madagascar, who has nobly stood by his converts in that island during their trials and has foiled the schemes of the Jesuits, whom the corrupt government of France has sent to Madagascar to undo the work of the Protestant missionaries. By his prudence and tact, Mr. Cousins has secured partial tolerance from the French governors and has won for the natives a measure of religious liberty. Rev. James Stewart's industrial institutions at Lovedale, in South Africa, are a triumph, which will give him the right to be heard in the discussion of one of the burning problems of missionary labor. Dr. Paton will tell again the story of struggle and victory in the New Hebrides. From China comes the veteran missionary Dr. W. Ashmore, who for half a century has devoted his life to the salvation of its people. Dr. George Owen will tell of the translation of the Bible and literary work that he has prosecuted in the same land. Rev. C. T. Wilson is able to speak of two fields, having labored in Uganda, at the suggestion of Mr. H. M. Stanley, and among the Mohammedans of Palestine.

Dr. August Schrieber, Secretary of the Rhenish Missionary Society, will describe the work in Sumatra. Dr. Walter R. Lambuth, Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has served for nine years in China, which was the land of his birth. Dr. Mary Bryan will describe the life of a medical missionary in India and tell of the suffering among the women of India which the trained physician is able to alleviate. These are only a few of the great host whose presence at the Conference will be a source of inspiration to their comrades in the army of Christ.

The chief meetings are to be held in Carnegie Hall, the first on the afternoon of Saturday, April 21. President McKinley is expected to give an address, and ex-President Benjamin Harrison will preside. On Sunday many of the pulpits of New York and Brooklyn will be occupied by the delegates. On Monday, April 23, the business of the conference will begin. Three sessions will be held each day, and there will be sectional meetings to consider special features of missionary work. Tuesday will be devoted to administrative problems, organization and the work on the field. Wednesday will be educational day, similarly arranged to provide for the discussion of higher education, the training of teachers, industrial education, etc. Thursday is especially set apart for woman's work in its different phases, but side by side with their meetings there will be others for the discussion of the great question of comity and co-operation. On Friday the dominant topic will be the development in the native churches of self-support and self-direction. Saturday will be young people's day, and the topics will be the present missionary movement among students, the needs of the future ministry and the peculiar obligation of the present generation. On Monday medical missions will come to the front, Bible versions and the need of a Christian literature as the basis for the normal development of a Christian community. Tuesday, the closing day, the home churches will be the special topic; the reflex influence on them of missions: the power of the pastor, etc. The meetings outlined will be largely technical and confined to the mornings and afternoons. The evening meetings will be more popular in character and include addresses by well-known and effective speakers, missionaries, pastors and laymen of the United States and Canada and Great Britain.

REV. JOHN G. PATON

It is an honor to America to entertain guests so distinguished in the highest rank of Christ's princes. They are the noblest and best of his servants; men who have given up all that men value most that they may serve him. They must receive no grudging welcome, but must learn by their reception the high value the Church sets on their services. When they return to their distant fields of labor, their solitude should be cheered by memories of the love and cordiality manifested toward them by the people of America. To afford them hospitality, to hire halls for the meetings and to secure full reports of their deliberations will involve on the most economical basis an expenditure of forty thousand dollars. Would not the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD like to have a share in the honor of entertaining such guests? Every contributor to the fund will in his degree be a host to those honored visitors, and will remember with joy in years to come that he helped to make their stay agreeable to them. Contributions sent to this office will be duly acknowledged in these pages, and every one who sends five dollars will be entitled to receive an official report of the proceedings. It would be very gratifying if at least one thousand of the forty needed, were to be given by the readers of this journal.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

Christ Our Song

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Psalm 118: 14, ...

The Lord is my strength and song

THE most fascinating theme for a heart properly attuned is the Saviour. There is something in the morning light to suggest him, and something in the evening shadow to speak his praise. The flower breathes him, the stars shine him, the cascade proclaims him, all the voices of nature chant him. Whatever is grand, bright and beautiful, if you only listen to it, will speak his praise. So, when in the summer-time I pluck a flower, I think of him who is "the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley." When I see in the fields a lamb, I say, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." When, in very hot weather, I come under a projecting cliff, I say,

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee!

Over the old-fashioned pulpits there was a sounding-board. The voice of the minister rose to the sounding-board, and then was struck back again upon the ears of the people. And so the ten thousand voices of earth rising up find the heavens a sounding-board which strikes back to the ear of all the nations the praises of Christ. The heavens tell his glory, and the earth shows his handiwork. The Bible thrills with one great story of redemption. Upon a blasted and faded paradise it poured the light of glorious restoration. It looked upon Abraham from the ram caught in the thicket. It spoke in the bleating of the herds driven down to Jerusalem for sacrifice. It put infinite pathos into the speech of uncouth fishermen. It lifted Paul into the third heaven; and it broke upon the ear of St. John with the brazen trumpets and the doxology of the elders, and the rushing wings of the seraphim.

Instead of waiting until you get sick and worn out before you sing the praise of Christ, while your heart is happiest and your step is lightest and your fortunes smile and your pathway blossoms and the overarching heavens drop upon you their benediction, speak the praises of Jesus.

Taking the suggestion of the text, I shall speak to you of Christ our Song. I remark, in the first place, that Christ ought to be the cradle-song. What our mothers sang to us when they put us to sleep is singing yet. We may have forgotten the words; but they went into the fibre of our soul, and will forever be a part of it. It is not so much what you formally teach your children as what you sing to them. A hymn has wings and can fly everywhither. One hundred and fifty years after you are dead, and "Old Mortality" has worn out his chisel recutting your name on the tombstone, your great-grandchildren will be singing the song which last night you sang to your little ones gathered about your knee. There is a place in Switzerland where, if you distinctly utter your voice, there come back ten or fifteen distinct echoes; and every Christian song sung by a mother in the ear of her child shall have ten thousand echoes coming back from all the gates of heaven. Oh, if mothers only knew the power of this sacred spell, how much oftener the little ones would be gathered, and all our homes would chime with the songs of Jesus!

I next speak of Christ as the old man's song. Quick music loses its charm for the aged ear. The schoolgirl asks for a schottisch or a glee; but her grandmother asks for "Balerma" or the "Portuguese Hymn." Fifty years of trouble have tamed the spirit, and the keys of the music-board must have a solemn tread. Though the voice may be tremulous, so that grandfather will not trust it in church, still he has the Psalm book open before him, and he sings with his soul. He hums his grandchild asleep with the same tune he sang forty years ago in the old country meeting-house. Some day the choir sings a tune so old that the young people do not know it; but it starts the tears down the cheek of the aged man, for it reminds him of the revival scene in which he participated, and of the radiant faces that long since went to dust and of the gray-haired minister leaning over the pulpit and sounding the good tidings of great joy.

There was a song to-day that touched the life of the aged with holy fire, and kindled a glory on their vision that your younger eyesight cannot see. It was the song of salvation—Jesus, who fed them all their lives long; Jesus, who wiped away their tears; Jesus, who stood by them when all else failed; Jesus, in whose name their marriage was consecrated, and whose resurrection has poured light upon the graves of their departed. "Do you know me?" said the wife to her aged husband who was dying, his mind already having gone out. He said, "No." And the son said, "Father, do you know me?" He said, "No." The daughter said, "Father, do you know me?" He said, "No." The minister of the Gospel standing by, said, "Do you know Jesus?" "Oh, yes," he said, "I know him, 'chief among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely!'" Blessed the Bible in which spectacled old age reads the promise, "I will never leave you, never forsake you!" Blessed the staff on which the wornout pilgrim totters on toward the welcome of his Redeemer! Blessed the hymn-book in which the faltering tongue and the failing eyes find Jesus, the old man's song!

I speak to you again of Jesus as the night-song. Job speaks of him who giveth songs in the night. John Welch, the old Scotch minister, used to put a plaid across his bed on cold nights, and someone asked him why he put that there. He said, "Oh, sometimes in the night I want to sing the praise of Jesus, and to get down and pray; then I just take that plaid and wrap it around me, to keep myself from the cold." Songs in the night! Night of trouble has come down upon many of you. Commercial losses put out one star, slanderous abuse puts out another star, domestic bereavement has put out a thousand lights, and gloom has been added to gloom and chill to chill and sting to sting, and one midnight has seemed to borrow the fold from another midnight to wrap itself in more unbearable darkness; but Christ has spoken peace to your heart, and you sing:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high.
Hide me, O my Saviour! Hide
Till the storm of life is past,
Safe into the haven guide;
Oh, receive my soul at last.

Songs in the night! Songs in the night! For the sick, who have no one to turn the hot pillow, no one to put the taper on the stand, no one to put ice on the temples, or pour out the soothing anodyne or utter one cheerful word—yet songs in the night! For the poor, who freeze in the winter's cold, and swelter in the summer's heat and munch the hard crusts that bleed the sore gums and shiver under blankets that cannot any longer be patched and tremble because rent-day is come and they may be set out on the sidewalk, and looking into the starved face of the child and seeing famine there and death there, coming home from the bakery and saying, in the presence of the little famished ones: "Oh, my God! flour has gone up!" Yet songs in the night! For the soldier in the field-hospital, no surgeon to bind up the gun-shot fracture, no water for the hot lips, no kind hand to brush away the flies from the fresh wound, no one to take the loving farewell, the groaning of others poured into his own groan, the blasphemy of others plowing up his own spirit, the condensed bitterness of dying away from home among strangers. Yet songs in the night! Songs in the night! "Ah!" said one dying soldier, "tell my mother that last night there was not one cloud between my soul and Jesus." Songs in the night! Songs in the night!

This Sabbath-day came. From the altars of ten thousand churches has smoked up the savor of sacrifice. Ministers of the Gospel preached in plain English, in broad Scotch, in flowing Italian, in harsh Choctaw. God's people assembled in Hindoo temple and Moravian church and Quaker meeting-house and sailors' Bethel and king's chapel and high-towered cathedral. Lumbermen sang it and the factory-girls and the children in the Sabbath-class and the trained choirs in great assemblages. Trappers, with the same voice with which they shouted yesterday in the stag-hunt, and mariners with throats that only a few days ago sounded in the hoarse blast of the sea-hurricane, they sang it. One theme for the sermons. One burden for the song. Jesus for the invocation. Jesus for the Scripture lesson. Jesus for the baptismal font. Jesus for the sacramental cup. Jesus for the benediction.

We sing his birth—the barn that sheltered him, the mother that nursed him, the cattle that fed beside him, the angels that woke up the shepherds, shaking light over the midnight hills. We sing his ministry—the tears he wiped away from the eyes of the orphans, the lame men that forgot their crutches, the damsel who from the bier bounded out into the sunlight, her locks shaking down over the flushed cheek, the hungry thousands who broke the bread as it blossomed into larger loaves—that miracle by which a boy with five loaves and two fishes became the sutler of a whole army. We sing his sorrows—his stone-bruised feet, his aching heart, his mountain loneliness, his desert hunger, his storm-pelted body, the eternity of anguish that shot through his last moments, and the immeasurable ocean of torment that heaved up against his cross in one foaming wrathful, omnipotent surge, the sun dashed out, and the dead, shroud-wrapped, breaking open their sepulchres, and rushing out to see what was the matter. We sing his resurrection—the guard that could not keep him, the sorrow of his disciples, the clouds piling up on either side in pillared splendors as he went through, treading the pathless air, higher and higher, until he came to the foot of the throne, and all heaven kept jubilee at the return of the conqueror. Oh! is there any song more appropriate for a Sabbath night than this song of Jesus?

I say once more, Christ is the everlasting song. The very best singers sometimes get tired: the strongest throats sometimes get weary, and many who sang very sweetly do not sing now; but I hope by the grace of God we will, after a while, go up and sing the praises of Christ where we will never be weary. You know there are some songs that are especially appropriate for the home circle. They stir the soul, they start the tears, they turn the heart in on itself, and keep sounding after the tune has stopped, like some cathedral bell which, long after the tap of the brazen tongue has ceased, keeps throbbing on the air. Well, it will be a home song in heaven; all the sweeter because those who sang with us in the domestic circle on earth shall join that great harmony.

Jerusalem, my happy home,
Name ever dear to me;
When shall my labors have an end
In joy and peace in thee?

On earth we sang harvest songs as the wheat came into the barn, and the barracks were filled. You know there is no such time on a farm as when they get the crops in; and so in heaven it will be a harvest song on the part of those who on earth sowed in tears and reaped in joy. Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let the sheaves come in! Angels shout all through the heavens, and multitudes come down the hills crying, "Harvest-home! harvest-home!

There is nothing more bewitching to one's ear than the song of sailors far out at sea, whether in day or night, as they pull away at the ropes—not much sense often in the words they utter, but the music is thrilling. So the song in heaven will be a sailor's song. They were voyagers once, and thought they could never get to shore, and before they could get things snug and trim the cyclone struck them. But now they are safe. Once they went with damaged rigging, guns of distress booming through the storm; but the pilot came aboard and he brought them into the harbor. Now they sing of the breakers past, the lighthouses that showed them where to sail, the pilot that took them through the straits, the eternal shore on which they landed.

Ay, it will be the children's song. You know very well that the vast majority of our race die in infancy, and it is estimated that sixteen thousand millions of the little ones are standing before God. When they shall rise up about the throne to sing, the millions and the millions of the little ones—ah! that will be music for you! These played in the streets of Babylon and Thebes; these plucked lilies from the foot of Olivet while Christ was preaching about them; these waded in Siloam; these were victims of Herod's massacre; these were thrown to crocodiles or into the fire; these came up from Christian homes, and these were foundlings on the city commons—children everywhere in all that land; children in the towers, children on the seas of glass, children on the battlements. Ah! if you do not like children, do not go there. They are in vast majority; and what a song when they lift it around about the throne!

The Christian singers and composers of all ages will be there to join in that song. Thomas Hastings will be there. Lowell Mason will be there. Beethoven and Mozart will be there. They who sounded the cymbals and the trumpets in the ancient temples will be there. The forty thousand harpers that stood at the ancient dedication will be there. The two hundred singers that assisted on that day will be there. Patriarchs who lived amidst threshing-floors, shepherds who watched amidst Chaldean hills, prophets who walked, with long beards and coarse apparel, pronouncing woe against ancient abominations, will meet the more recent martyrs who went up with leaping cohorts of fire; and some will speak of the Jesus of whom they prophesied, and others of the Jesus for whom they died. Oh, what a song! It came to John upon Patmos; it came to Calvin in the prison; it dropped to Ridley in the fire; and sometimes that song has come to your ear, perhaps, for I really do think it sometimes breaks over the battlements of heaven.

A Christian woman, the wife of a minister of the Gospel, was dying in the parsonage near the old church, where on Saturday night the choir used to assemble and rehearse for the following Sabbath, and she said: "How strangely sweet the choir rehearses to-night; they have been rehearsing there for an hour." "No," said some one about her, "the choir is not rehearsing to-night." "Yes," she said, "I know they are; I hear them sing; how very sweetly they sing!" Now it was not a choir of earth that she heard, but the choir of heaven. I think that Jesus sometimes sets ajar the door of heaven, and a passage of that rapture greets our ears. The minstrels of heaven strike such a tremendous strain, the walls of jasper cannot hold it.

I wonder—and this is a question I have been asking myself all the service—Will you sing that song? Will I sing it? Not unless our sins are pardoned, and we learn now to sing the praise of Christ, will we ever sing it there. The first great concert that I ever attended was in New York, when Julien, in the "Crystal Palace" stood before hundreds of singers and hundreds of players upon instruments. Some of you may remember that occasion; it was the first one of the kind at which I was present, and I shall never forget it. I saw that one man standing, and with the hand and foot wield that great harmony, beating the time. It was to me overwhelming. But oh, the grander scene when they shall come from the east and from the west and from the north and from the south, "a great multitude that no man can number," into the temple of the skies, host beyond host, rank beyond rank, gallery above gallery, and Jesus will stand before that great host to conduct the harmony, with his wounded hands and his wounded feet! Like the voice of many waters, like the voice of mighty thunderings, they shall cry, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessing and riches and honor and glory and power, world without end. Amen and Amen!" Oh, if my ear shall hear no other sweet sounds, may I hear that! If I join no other glad assemblage, may I join that.

Social Life in Ponce and San Juan

Woman's Ways in Porto Rico

Wedding Customs—English Classes

A GROUP OF AMERICAN SCHOOL TEACHERS

PROTESTANT CHURCH

LITTLE COLONISTS IN FRONT OF THEIR NEW SCHOOL

IT is customary for Porto Ricans to speak of their winter guests from the northern continent as visitors "from the States:" the descriptive term still holds good; and will doubtless cling to "States' people" long after it applies as properly to the islanders themselves. It will certainly add to the picturesqueness of life in our National Capitol when Porto Rico begins to send her best citizens to Congress, and they come, bringing with them dark-eyed senoras and senoritas, and the little olive-skinned children, babbling Spanish and English interchangeably; and it will take a long time for continental ideas and customs to so ingraft themselves upon the little island that it will not afford the refreshment of foreign atmosphere to States' visitors seeking diversion.

Some of their customs we hope they will never abandon. The senoras and senoritas live principally outdoors; not on the streets, it is true, for that is contrary to good form in high society, but in the big blossoming, tropical gardens back of the residences. Walks connect these gardens, and in the rear of Millionaire's Row, San Juan, you will find feminine society making its calls by going back and forth along these shaded, fragrant pathways. A visitor pays tribute to her hostess among the roses and jessamines without perhaps going into the house at all; and a bevy of young ladies will gather for afternoon tea in flowery precincts where the birds sing around them and the fountain sheds its cooling influence. One of our photos shows such a company; the picture was taken for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and the ladies seen in it belong to the most exclusive circle of San Juan society. The broad stone stairways leading from the house to the ground are picturesque features of the average dwelling. Sometimes these dwellings, even among the wealthy classes, are over stores and other business establishments; and the appearance in front may be quite unpretentious; but in the rear you will always find an attractive court or garden. If there is a balcony in front, perhaps you may sometimes see the ladies sitting there in the evening.

Porto Rican ladies lead secluded lives; a high-born senorita does not go on the street without a chaperone. Education has been principally along the line of accomplishments in music, fancy-work, and possibly French. In the little garden-parties, mandolins and guitars, embroidery frames and fans (which no one can wave more gracefully than a Porto Rican) usually play a pretty part. In Adjuntas, a small town in the coffee-raising district, a number of young ladies organized themselves into a class or club for the study of English—the first club of its kind in Porto Rico. Our illustrations, which were taken specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are peculiarly interesting. That of the Free School at Ponce shows the first institution of the kind established on the island; many of the tidy little colonists are wearing clothes supplied by American relief work. The lady in the centre of the group of teachers is Miss Carmilita Autoinsanti, President of the American School Committee; the officer behind her, is the Army chaplain of the Nineteenth U. S. infantry.

OUR WEST INDIAN COLONIAL SISTERS ENJOYING A SOCIAL HOUR IN THE AFTERNOON

Porto Ricans are not much given to alcoholic indulgences. The ladies are experts in making temperance drinks. Delicious coffee, chocolate, orange water, sherbets, delicate cane juice, a beverage of toasted corn and sugar in water, diluted milk of almonds, and various other liquid refreshments, hot or iced, are served to guests. Chocolate is the nuptial beverage. "When will chocolate be served?" is one way of asking "When will the marriage take place?" Courtship goes on under the eyes of kin-folks. It is unwritten law that the bride brings only herself and her outfit to her husband. Wedding customs are pretty. On returning from church, the bride throws her veil over the head of her first bridesmaid, who cuts it up and divides it among the unmarried guests. The orange crown and garniture of the bridal dress are treated in a similar way; and the flowers are eagerly counted, for blossoms signify years, half-blown buds, months, and buds, weeks before the recipient's marriage; hence, this is a case in which he or she who gets least is often the happiest.

The ladies in the picture in the centre of this page were particularly active in establishing the American school at Ponce, and in organizing the American Singing Society. The ladies at the Coamo Springs, wives of American officers, also lent influence in this direction.

A GIANT WEST INDIAN TREE AND ITS SUPPORTS

THE FAMOUS COAMO MINERAL SPRINGS

The springs and the curious inscriptions on the walls are famous. The Coamo Baths were established 1500 A. D. The wide-spreading tree reproduced here is another very ancient landmark; it is several hundred years old. The only English church ever built in Porto Rico, or any other Spanish possession during Spanish rule, is shown on this page. It has been recently renovated, and regular services are now being conducted within its walls.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

CHAPTER XVIII.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY H. M. PETTIT

In the City of Boats

ARVILLY and I went out for a walk, takin' Tommy with us. We thought we would buy some sooveneers of the place. Sez Arvilly, "I want to prove to the Jonesvillians that I've been to China, and I want to buy some little present for Waitstill Webb, that I can send her in a letter."

And I thought I would buy some little things for the childern, mebby a ivory croshay hook for Tirzah Ann and a paper cutter for Thomas J., and sunthin' else for Maggie and Whitfield. It beats all what exquisite ivory things we did see, and in silver, gold, shell, horn and bamboo, every article you can think on and lots you never did think on, all wrought in the finest carvin' and filigree work. Embroideries in silk and satin and cloth of gold and silver, every beautiful thing that wuz ever made you'd see in these shops.

I wuz jest hesitatin' between a ivory bodkin with a butterfly head and a ivory hook with a posy on the handle, when I hearn the voice of my pardner, seemin'ly makin' a trade with somebody, and I turned a little corner and there I see him stand tryin' to beat down a man from Tibet, or so a bystander told me he wuz, a queer lookin' creeter, but he understood a few English words, and Josiah wuz buyin' sunthin' as I could see, but looked dretful meachin and tried to conceal his purchase as he ketched my eye. I see he wuz doin' sunthin' he ort not to do, meachinness and guilt wuz writ down on his liniment. But my axent and mean wuz such that he produced the object and tried hard to explain and apoligize.

It wuz a little prayer-wheel designed for written prayers to be put in and turned with a crank, or it could be hitched to water power or a wind-mill or anything, and the owner could truly pray without ceasing. Oh how I felt as he explained! I felt that indeed the last straw wuz bein' packed onto my back, but Josiah kep' on with his apoligizin'.

Josiah's Prayer-wheel

"You needn't look like that, Samantha; I can tell you I hain't gin up religion or thought on't. I want you to know that I am still a strong, active member of the M. E. meetin' house, but at the same time," sez he, "if I—if there—spozein' there wuz, as it were, some modifications and conveniences that would help a Christian perfessor along, I don't know as I would be to blame to avail myself of 'em."

Sez I, "If you're guiltless what makes you look so meachin?"

"Well, I most knew you wouldn't approve on it, but," sez he, "I can tell you in a few short words what it will do. You can write your prayers all out when you have time and put 'em into this wheel and turn it, or you can have it go by water, you can hitch it to the windmill and have it a-prayin' while you water the cattle in the mornin' and I thought, Samantha, that in hayin' time or harvestin' when I am as busy as the old Harry I could use it that way, or I could be a turnin' it on my way to the barn to do the chores, or I could hitch it onto the grin'stone and Ury and I could pray for the whole family whilst we wuz whettin' the scythes."

"Not for me," sez I, groanin' aloud, "not for me."

"You needn't look like that, Samantha: I tell you agin' I wuzn't goin' to use it only when I wuz driv to death with work. And I tell you it would be handy for you when you expected a houseful of company, and Philury wuz away."

"No indeed!" sez I, "no such wicked, wicked work will be connected with my prayers."

"Well," sez Arvilly, "Id'no as it would be much wickeder than some prayers I've hearn when folks wuz in a hurry; they would run their thanksgivin's into their petitions and them into their amens, and gallop through 'em so there wuzn't a mite of sense in 'em. Or take so much pains to inform the Lord about things. I hearn one man say," sez Arvilly:

"'O Lord, thou knowest by the morning papers, so and so.' Id'no as a prayer turned off by a wheel would look much worse or be much less acceptable."

Josiah looked encouraged, and sez he to me, soty vosey, "Arvilly always did have good horse sense."

Sez I, "They wuzn't run by machinery—wicked, wicked way. A boughten machine!" sez I, shettin' up my eyes and groanin' agin.

"No," sez Josiah eagerly, "I wuz agoin' to tell you; I've got a wheel to home and a cylinder that come offen that old furnace regulator that didn't work, and I thought that with a little of Ury's help I could fix one up jest as good as this, and I could sell this for twice what I gin for it to Deacon Henzy or old Shelmadine, or rent it through hayin' and harvestin' to the brethren, or——"

Sez I "You would disseminate these wicked practices, would you, in dear Christian Jonesville? No indeed."

"I tell you agin I wuzn't a goin to use it only in the most hurryin' times—I—"

A Stern Rebuke

But I sez, "I will hear no more; give it back to the man and come with your pardner!"

And I linked my arm in hisen and motioned to the man to move off with his wheels. And my looks wuz that dignified and lofty that I spoze it skairt him and he started off almost immegiately and to once.

And I hain't hern no more about it, but don't know how much more trouble I may have with it. No knowin' what that man may take it into his head to do in Jonesville or China. But prayer-wheels! little did I think when I stood at the altar with Josiah Allen that I should have to dicker with them.

Up the Pearl River

It only took six hours to sail from Hongkong up to Canton. The scenery along the Pearl river is not very interesting except the rice fields, bannana groves with pagodas risin' amongst 'em anon or oftener, and the strange tropical foliage, cactuses that we raise in little jars riz up here like trees.

"JOSIAH WAS DRETFUL TOOK WITH THIS FLOATIN' CITY"

The native villages along the ruther flat shore looked kinder dilapidated and run down, but yet they looked so different from Jonesville houses that they wuz interestin' in a way. The forts that we passed occasionally looked as if they would stand quite a strain. But the queerest sight wuz the floatin' houses that we had to sail through to land. Two hundred thousand folks live on them boats, are born on 'em, grow up, marry, raise a family and die, all right there on the water, just as other folks live on the land.

If a young man courts a girl he takes her and her setting out, which is mebby a extra night gown, or I don't know what they do call 'em—their dresses look like night gowns. Well, she will take that and a rice kettle and go into his junk and mebby never leave it through her life only to visit her friends. The children swarmed on them boats like ants on a ant-hill and they say that if they git too thick they kinder let 'em fall overboard, not push 'em off, but kinder let 'em go accidental like, specially girls, they kinder encourage girls fallin' off. And the Chinese think that it is wrong to save life. If anyone is drownin' for instance, they think that it is the will of the higher Power and let 'em go. But they look down on girls dretfully. If you ask a Chinaman how many children he has got he will say "Two children and two piecee girl." Jest as if boys was only worthy to be called children, and girls a piece of a child. Miss Meechim wuz indignant when that way of theirs wuz mentioned; she considers herself as good if not better than one man and a half. Sez she: "The idee of calling a boy a child, and a girl a piece of a child, or words that mean that."

But Arvilly sez, "Well, how much better is it in the United States—or most of 'em? Girls don't even have the comfort of thinkin' that they're a piece of a person; they're just nothin' at all in the eyes of the law—unless the law wants to tax 'em to raise money." Sez she, "I would be thankful 'lection day if I wuz a piece of a woman, so that five or six of us would make a hull citizen." Miss Meechim had never thought on't before, she said she hadn't, but nobody could git her to say a word aginst American customs no more than they could aginst herself. She thinks that she and America are perfect, but puts herself first. Well, America is the best land under the sun: I've always said so. But I feel towards it as I do towards Josiah: what faults it has I want to talk it out of, so that it will stand up perfect among nations as Josiah could amongst men if he would hear to me. Arvilly likes to stir Miss Meechim up: I believe she sez things a purpose sometimes to set Miss Meechim off: but then Arvilly talks from principle too, and she is real cute.

Josiah's Bright Idea

There wuz all sorts of boats, theatre junks and concert junks and plain junks, and Josiah wuz dretful took with this floatin' city, and sez to once that he should build a house boat as soon as he got home—he and Ury. He said that he could use the old hay rack to start it—that and the old corn house would most make it."

"Where will you put it!" sez I.

"Oh on the creek or the canal," sez he. "It will be so uneek for us to dwell when we want to, on the briny deep."

"I guess there hain't much brine in the creek or the canal," Josiah.

"Well, I said that for poetical purposes. But you know that it would be very stylish to live in a boat, and any time we wanted to, when onexpected company wuz comin', or the tax collector or book agent, jest hist the sail and move off, it would be dretful handy as well as stylish.

HOSPITALITY IN A CHINESE HOME

"Well, well," sez I, "you can't build it till you git home." I felt that he would forgit it before then. Arvilly looked thoughtfully at 'em and wondered how she wuz goin' to canvass 'em, and if they would do as Josiah intimated if they see her comin'. Miss Meechim wondered if they could git to meetin' in time, they seemed to move so slow, and Robert Strong said to Dorothy:

A Strange City

"Well, a poor man can feel that he owns the site his home stands on, as well as the rich man can, and that would be a hopeless attempt for him in our large American cities, and he can't be turned out of his home by someone who claims the land."

And Tommy wondered how the little boys could play ball, and if they didn't want to slide down hill, or climb trees, or pick berries, and so on and so on. And every one on us see what wuz for us to see in the movin' panoramy.

Canton is a real queer city. The streets are so narrer that you can almost reach out your hands and touch the houses on both sides, not more than sev en or eight feet wide. There are no horses in Canton, and you have to git about on "shank's horses," as Josiah calls it, your own limbs you know, or else sedan chairs, and the streets are so narrer, some on 'em, that once when we met some big Chinese man, a Mandarin I believe they called him, we had to hurry into one of the shops till he got by, and sometimes in turnin' a corner the poles of our chairs had to be run way inside of the shops, and Josiah said:

"I would like to see how long the Jonesvillians would stand such doin's; I would like to see old Cowdey's fills scrapin' my cook stove, it is shiftless doin's, and ort to be stopped."

But I knew he couldn't make no change and I hushed him up as well as I could. Robert Strong got quite a comfortable tarven for us to stay in. But I wuz so afraid all the time of eatin' rats and mice that I couldn't take any comfort in meat vittles. They do eat rats there, for I see 'em hangin' in the markets with their long tails curled up, ready to bile or fry. Josiah said he wished he had thought on't he would brung out a lot to sell and he wuz all rousted up to try to make a bargain to supply one of these shops with rats and mice. Sez he:

"It will be clear profit, Samantha, for I want to get rid on 'em and all the Jonesvillians do, and if I can sell their carcasses I will throw in the hide and taller. Why, I can make a corner on rats and mice in Jonesville; I can git 'em by the wagon load of the farmers and git pay at both ends." But I told him that the freightage would eat up the profits, and he see it would, and gin up the idee on willin'ly.

Though I don't love such hot stuff as we had to eat, curry, and red peppers, and chutney, not to home I don't, but I see it wuz better to eat such food there on account of the climate. Some of our party had to take quinine, too, for the stomach's sake to keep up, for you feel there like faintin' right away, the climate is such.

It must be that the Chinese like amuse ments, for we see sights of theatres and concert rooms and lanterns wuz hangin' everywhere and bells. And there wuz streets all full of silk shops, and weavers, and jewelry, and cook shops right open on either side. All the colors of the rainbow and more too you see in the silks and embroideries, and jewelry of all kinds and swingin' signs and mat awnings overhead, and the narrer streets full of strange lookin' folks, in their strange lookin' dresses.

"WE THEN VISITED A JOSS HOUSE"

Among the Chinese Idols

We visited a joss house, and a Chinaman's paradise where opium eaters and smokers lay in bunks lookin' as silly and happy as if they wouldn't ever wake up agin to their tawdy wretchedness. We visited a silk manufactory, a glass blowing shop. We see a white marble pagoda with several tiers of gilded bells hangin' on the outside. Inside it wuz beautifully ornamented, some of the winders wuz made of the inside of oyster shells; they made a soft, pleasant light, and it had a number of idols made of carved ivory and some of jade stun, and the principal idol wuz a large gilded dragon.

Josiah said the idee of worshipin' such a looking creeter as that. Sez he, "I should ruther worship our old gander." And Miss Meechim wuz horrified, too, at the wickedness of the Chinese in worshipin' idols.

But Arvilly walked around it with her head up, and said that America worshiped an idol that looked enough sight worse than that and a million times worse actin', sez she, "This idol will stay where it is put, it won't rare around and murder its worshipers."

And Miss Meechim sez coldly, "I don't know what you mean; I know that I am an Episcopalian and worship as our beautiful creed dictates."

Sez Arvilly, "Anybody that sets expediency up before principle, from a king to a ragpicker: anyone who cringes to a power he knows is vile and dangerous, and protects and extends its influence from greed and ambition, such a one worships a far worse idol than this peaceable, humbly-lookin' critter and looks worse to me enough sight."

I hearn Miss Meechim say out to one side to Dorothy, "How sick I am of hearing her constant talk against intemperance; from California to China I have had to hear it. And you know, Dorothy, that folks can drink genteel."

Miss Meechim Overruled

But Dorothy, with her sweet lips trembling and her white dimpled chin quivering, sez, "I should think we had suffered enough from the Whisky Power, Auntie, to hear anything said against it, and at any time."

And Robert Strong jined in with Dorothy, and so Miss Meechim subsided, and I see a dark shadder creep over her face, too, and tears come into her pale blue eyes. She hain't forgot Aronette, poor little victim! Crunched and crushed under the wheels of the monster Jugernaut America rolls round to crush its people under. I wuz some like Arvilly. When I thought of that I didn't feel to say so much aginst them foreign idols, though they wuz humbly lookin' as I ever see. And speakin' of idols, one day we see twelve fat hogs in a temple, where they wuz kept as sacred animals, and here agin Miss Meechim wuz horrified and praised up American doin's, and run down China, and agin Arvilly made remarks. Sez she:

"The hogs there wallowing in their filth are poor lookin' things to kneel down and worship, but they're shut up here with priests to tend to 'em; they can't git out to roam round and entice innocents into their filthy sties and perpetuate their swinish lives, and that is more than we can say of the American beastly idols, or our priesthood who fatten them and themselves and then let 'em out to rampage round and act."

Miss Meechim sithed deep and remarked to me "that the tariff laws wuz a absorbin' topic to her mind at that time." She did it to change the subject.

We went to a Chinese crematory and the Temple of Longevity, where if you paid enough you could git a promise of long life. Josiah is clost, but he gin quite a good deal for him, and wuz told that he would live to be one hundred and twenty-seven years of age. He felt well. Of course we had a interpreter with us who talked for us. Josiah wanted me to pay, too, for a promise. Sez he with a worried look:

An Odd Investment

"I shall be wretched as a widower, Samantha; do patronize 'em, I had ruther save on sunthin' else than this."

So to please him I gin 'em a little more than he did, and they guarenteed me one hundred and forty years, and then Josiah worried agin and wanted me to promise not to marry agin after he wuz gone. He worships me. And I told him that if I lived to be a hundred and forty I guessed I shouldn't be thinkin' much about marryin', and he looked easier in his mind.

One day we met a weddin' procession, most a mild long, I should say. The bride wuz ahead in her sedan chair, her dress wuz richly embroidered and spangeled, a veil fringed with little pearls hung over her face. Pagodas with tinkling gilt bells, sedan chairs full of silk and cloth and goods of all kinds wuz carried in the procession by coolies. Idols covered with jade and gilt jewelry, a company of little children beatin' tom-toms and gongs, and the stuffed bodies of animals all ornamented with gilt and red paper figgers wuz carried, and at the tail end of the procession come the friends of the family.

The bridegroom w u z n ' t there, he wuz waitin' to hum in his own or his father's house for the bride he'd never seen. But if the bride's feet wuz not too large he would most likely be suited.

Miss Meechim said, "Poor young man! to have to take a wife he has never seen; how widely different and how immeasureably better are such things carried on in America."

Sez Arvilly, "What bridegroom ever did see his bride as she really wuz? Till the hard experience of married life brought out her hidden traits, good and bad? Or what wife ever see her husband's real temper and character until after years of experience?"

Samantha's Reflections

Sez I, "That's so; leaves are turned over in Josiah Allen's mind now as long as we've been pardners that has readin' on 'em as strange to me as if they wuz writ in Chinese or Japan."

But then it must be admitted that not to see your wife's face and know whether she's cross-eyed or snub-nosed is tryin'. But they say it is accordin' to the decree of Feng Shui and therefore they accept it willingly. They have a great variety of good fruit in Canton—some that I never see before—but their vegetables don't taste so good as ours, more stringy and watery, and their eggs they want buried six months before usin' em. I believe that sickened me of China as much as anything. But then some folks at home want their game kep' till it hain't fit to eat in my opinion. But eggs! they should be like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion—the idee of eatin' them with their shells all blue and spotted with age—the idee!

The Raising of Jairus' Daughter and the Resurrection of Christ*

By Dr. & Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts : International Sunday School Lesson for April 15. Golden Text, Matt. 28: 6: "He is risen as he said."

WITH the manifold resurrections of nature all about us at this Springtime, we may well repeat Paul's question, "Why should it seem to you a thing impossible that Christ should raise the dead?"

The miracle is not so great
Of ours as is the rising of the wheat.

Resurrections by Christ and the resurrection of Christ are but the brightest blooms of the resurrections that form the upward steps in the whole march of life. Everywhere the order is, through death to higher life. The ugly bulb dies that it may live a new, transfigured life in the lily. The crawling worm must die that it may fly in robes of beauty through the sky. The egg, by a like change, rises to a higher form of life. Finding such resurrections in the vegetable and animal kingdoms, we should naturally expect to find similar but greater resurrections in the higher spiritual kingdom to which man and Christ belong. It was reason as well as faith that made Dr. J. G. Holland sing in his last poem:

"If life awake and will never cease
On the future's distant shore,
And the rose of love and the lily of peace
Shall bloom there forevermore—

Let the world go round and round,
And the sun sink into the sea;
For whether I'm on or under the ground,
O, what will it matter to me?"

When Christ rose in the Springtime all nature seemed to be singing of resurrection like a chorus supporting a master's solo. As the friends of Jesus returned sadly from the tomb in which they had laid him, they must have met a joyous procession going out for the ceremony of reaping the first sheaf, the "first fruits" of their fields, that were to be given to God. It was cut, threshed, ground, mixed with oil and frankincense, and waved before the Lord as an offering—all this before any other sheaf was harvested. On that first Easter, as Edersheim reminds us, the "first fruits of them that slept," the cut, threshed, ground first omer of the paschal flour, was offered to the Lord, not in the temple, not by the priests, but in the silence of the garden tomb.

Lesson Argument Christ proves that he can raise us from death to life—in body and soul—first, by raising the daughter of Jairus and others; second, by his own resurrection.

1. Jesus raised the dead when he walked among men: Jairus' daughter from her deathbed; the son of the widow of Nain, from the bier; Lazarus, from the tomb. The first of the stories is for several reasons the sweetest picture of death and resurrection for children—no bier, no tomb—only a sleep and awaking.

2. Jesus laid down his own life and took it again—a supreme proof that he is Lord of death and life, ours as well as his.

When? "Easter Sunday" is probably the correct anniversary, though the Greek Easter comes a few weeks later. But it was unquestionably as Winter's death was passing into the life of Springtime that Christ gave supreme proof that life in richer fullness lies beyond death.

Where? The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, though it has been the occasion, not alone of theological strife, but even of the war, that of the Crimea, is certainly not on the site of the cross and tomb of Christ. Schoiarship now locates Calvary about four hundred feet northeast of the Damascus gate, on what is called to-day "Skull Hill." The British General Gordon and others have investigated the claims made for this location, and having been fully convinced, a company of Protestant Christians has purchased it for $16,000.

Who? The very joy of Easter is saddened by the thought that though Jesus foretold his death and resurrection thirty-three times, in most cases, with no mystic veil upon his meaning, his apostles and even his mother were so filled with expectation that he would be a temporal Messiah that they thought what he said of crucifixion and resurrection was but an oriental hypobole of battle and victory, which again and again raised the controversy as to who should be greatest, that is, who should be premier, and so when he was crucified none but his enemies remembered he had said he would rise the third day, and not one of his friends kept tryst with him. The Roman guard had been driven away by the earthquake, and only angels welcomed him back to life. As one has said, it was lonelier than his coming to Bethlehem, for there at least his mother welcomed him at the gates of life.

"HE IS NOT HERE; FOR HE IS RISEN, AS HE SAID"

What? The most significant events of that first Easter are associated with the following expressions:

"Make it as sure as ye can." This is but one of many cases that the enemies of truth have thought they had killed and buried it, and sealed its tomb forever. But the Word of God—written Word and living Word alike—is not bound. "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again."

"Who shall roll us away the stone?" Christ's resurrection breaks the seal of every Christian's tomb, and makes it but a tunnel of momentary darkness, as when one passes from Alpine snows into the flowery fields of Italy.

"He is risen, as He said." Christ represents the present life of struggle and sorrow as a travail from which one is born by the final throe of death into the real "land of the living," compared with whose deathless joys this is the land of the dying.

"Now once more
Eden's door
Open stands to mortal eyes;
For Christ hath risen and man shall rise."

Why? One purpose of these resurrection lessons is to remove the fear of death. That is indeed a "golden text" which Jesus spoke in the mourning household of Jairus. "Be not afraid; only believe." The resurrection should teach us more than resignation. That word has an undertone of feeling that "God's will is hard to bear, nevertheless." Resignation should take the higher note, "Thy will is our welfare."

"The Lord's Day, The Little Easter" But Easter should not be wholly given to the thought that Christ is Lord of death. "The Lord's Day, the little Easter," reminds us that in his resurrection he proved himself Lord of life as well, not of eternity only but of time.

This is the highest significance of "the Lord's day," the weekly celebration of Easter. One day in the week the invisible Lord calls a halt in business and politics and pleasure, so proclaiming himself Lord of our time and occupations on all days, through the whole "year of our Lord." "The Lord's day," like a pillar of fire and cloud, moves round the world every week, taking more than two days, nearly one-third of the week for its journey, proclaiming everywhere by its name by its control of occupation, the universal Lordship of Christ. As the Jews, to whom the Sabbath is a monument of creation, say that he who breaks the Sabbath practically denies the creation, we may say, with deeper emphasis, he who desecrates the Lord's day denies the Lordship of Christ by deeds that speak louder than words. Let not Christians forget that the Christian Sabbath is not only the rest day, the home day, the weekly independence day—essential for the preservation of the health, the home, the republic—but that it is also the Lord's day, the "sign" of the Lordship of Christ, his ensign, his flag, its field of blue spangled by stars and sun; its stripes the colors of night and day, of sunrise and sunset; a flag borne by the Son as colorbearer round the world every week in token that Christ is Lord of the world; saluted in the putting away of tools and toil, in the devotion of the day to rest and worship. To break the Sabbath, therefore, is to tear the flag of Christ. In this view of the case we can understand why willful Sabbath breaking was a capital crime among the Jews, and also why, in the Ten Commandments of the World's Constitution, written with the finger of God, the Sabbath Commandment is the longest of all. These are times when even Christians need to be reminded that God did not write it longest to have us treat it as least. Let us as soldiers of Christ rally about his flag, never so much attacked, in our land as now.

Resurrections in Character The topmost peak in the teachings of the resurrection is the resurrection of character. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above." Even on Easter day we are too materialistic in our thinking, as if the future resurrection of the body were the end of aspiration, the change, however wrought, from the natural body to the spiritual body. The New Testament points us higher yet to spiritual character, in place of the carnal, selfish life we commonly live. That is the resurrection of which all others, even that of Christ, are but types and promises, such a resurrection as changed the proud, persecuting Saul into Paul, beseeching men with tears to love the Christ he once hated.

For Youngest Classes How to acquaint children with death is an anxious question, which many parents and teachers are asking. It is against the code of the kindergarten to present to the children anything unpleasant, death especially. But death cannot thus be set aside, and it is certainly wiser to meet the subject in a way that will familiarize the children with it without alarming them. It is best to approach it through the idea of sleep; therefore the following hints:

Get the children to pretend sleep by closing their eyes, and resting their heads on their hands as pillows. Let the teacher sing a gentle lullaby, as:

Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber.

Show a picture of sleep, the one to be found in Froebel's "Mother, Play" is particularly good, where the happy buds represent sleeping flowers, and the little birds are seen asleep with their heads tucked under their wings. The baby is asleep in its cradle, and father, mother, and the other members of the family are also sleeping. Get the children to talk about what wakes them up in the morning—the bright sun, the singing of birds, or mamma's call. Tell them there is a kind of sleep from which none of these things can awaken them, the death sleep, in which only the call of Jesus can be heard. There should follow the story of how the little daughter of Jairus awoke from the death sleep, when Jesus took her by the hand and spoke to her the usual morning call of her mother, "Little one, get up" (talitha cumi). Follow this with the account of how Jesus himself awoke from the sleep of death, and repeat his promise, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Teach the children especially that what Easter means most of all is to rise into a nobler life now.

For Older Scholars By way of illustration, much of interest can be added to this lesson by showing some of the inscriptions of the Catacombs, and explaining their meaning, of which the cuts at the foot of this page are examples:

The anchor represents the anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, belonging to a life bark that has glided safely into the harbor of eternal rest. The ship has about the same significance. The doves drinking out of a vase and eating olive berries symbolize the soul's enjoyment of the blessings of Paradise. The palms, the wreath and the crown signify the crown which fadeth not away. But let the chief emphasis be on faithfulness and the resurrection of character.

The War in South Africa

MEAGRE reports of the campaign have been given to the public during the past week. Probably the troops under Lord Roberts were so exhausted by their march to Bloemfontein, that a period of rest and recuperation was necessary. The Boers are said to be strongly intrenched at Kroonstad, which is on the direct road to Pretoria. They are reported to have taken special precautions against the flanking tactics which Gen. Roberts has adopted so successfully. Other reports say that they do not propose to seriously defend Kroonstad, but will make their strongest stand nearer Pretoria. In the meantime, interest has centred on the operations in the west, where Col. Baden-Powell is still gallantly defending Mafeking against an overwhelming Boer army. Hopes were entertained by the British that Col. Plumer, who was marching to the relief of the town from the north, would have compelled the Boers to raise the siege, but he has been forced himself to take a defensive attitude. A part of the besieging army left Mafeking and went to meet him. He was driven back to Lobatsi, where he is with difficulty keeping himself from being surrounded. There appears to be on both sides a grim determination to fight to the end. The Boers realize that their cause is hopeless unless some other nation comes to their assistance or makes a diversion which would cause the withdrawal of a large part of the British forces. At present there seems to be no prospect of such relief and the words the prophet used about another war apply to this deplorable conflict:

Unto the end of the war desolations are determined (Dan. 9:26).

CONVEYING WATER TO THE BRITISH FIGHTING LINE

Emancipation for Guam

News has been received of the abolition of slavery on Guam, the island in the Ladrone group, which was ceded by Spain to the United States in the treaty which closed the recent war. Capt. Richard P. Leary, whom the President appointed governor of the island, has issued a decree in the course of which he says: "Honest labor with just compensation, dignified by faithful consideration of the mutual interests and welfare of all concerned, should insure contentment and prosperity to this community; whereas, the existing labor-degrading system of human bondage and unjust, indefinite servitude or peonage permitted during the late Spanish control in this island is, in fact, a system of slavery, and as such is subversive of good government, is an obstacle to progressive civilization, a menace to popular liberty, and a violation of the sacred privileges guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States." Therefore he publicly proclaims the abolition of slavery or peonage, the abolition to take effect from Washington's birthday in the year 1900. The peons have reason to rejoice at such news and they will have still more reason if they will listen to the missionaries who can tell them how to become spiritually free.

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed (John 8:36).

A Hidden Will

A lawyer from Chatham, N. Y., surprised the Probate Court of Pittsfield a few days ago by offering for probate a will that had been missing for eighteen years. It was the will of an aged lady who died in 1882. It was known that she had made a will, but no one knew its contents. Search was made for it, but it could not be found. After waiting some months the relatives who were considered likely to be her heirs came to an agreement and divided her property among themselves. Among other effects an old cabinet fell to the share of a favorite niece of the old lady. It has been taken care of ever since, and a few weeks ago it received a thorough cleaning. In the process, it is supposed that a spring was accidentally touched and a door covering a secret drawer flew open. In the drawer was the long-missing will. Its provisions made a very different disposition of the property from that which had taken place, and it now remains to be decided whether the division already made shall stand or whether the will shall be made the basis of a new division. The will now discovered is a genuine surprise, and not altogether a pleasant one to some of the relatives. They will probably oppose its going into effect. When our Lord declared the will of his Father there were many who were similarly displeased when they learned that the kingdom of heaven was not their exclusive possession as they had supposed, but was open to members of despised classes, who had not expected an inheritance in it.

Verily I say unto you that the Publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you (Matt. 21:31).

Took Refuge on An Iceberg

A thrilling story of peril at sea is told by the passengers and crew of the Wolcott, a steamer belonging to the Pacific Whaling Company's fleet, in a press dispatch from Seattle, Wash., on their arrival there on board the steamer Excelsior. They say that on their voyage homeward the Wolcott encountered a severe gale. While the steamer ran before it, one dark night, she struck on a sharp rock. It was not supposed at the time that the injury to the vessel was serious, but about an hour later it was found that she was rapidly filling. There was no time to be lost in seeking safety. The boats were lowered and the passengers and crew were taken off the sinking ship. They were then eighteen miles from the nearest point of land on the coast of Alaska. It was impossible for them to sail so far with a gale blowing and the sea running high. A floating glacier was seen in the distance and on that the shipwrecked party took refuge. They remained there for two days and three nights, during which they suffered severely from cold and exposure. When the weather improved, they again entered the boats and succeeded in reaching Uyak, Alaska, where they remained until the Excelsior arrived and took them to Seattle. Doubtless they were glad when they got on the iceberg, for desolate as it was, it was better than going down in the angry waves. They would be still more glad when they reached dry land, but their greatest joy would be when the stanch vessel came and took them home. The spiritual experience of many a Christian has been like their changes of fortune, and it has reached its full culmination when the Captain of their salvation took them home:

I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also (John 14:3).

A VAST ICEBERG IN THE ARCTIC OCEAN

The Legend of a Prophecy

A strange story of the fulfilment of a prediction is related by a correspondent of the New York Sun. He says that some years ago, a murder was committed in the Shenandoah Valley and suspicion fell upon a merchant of Roanoke, who was charged with the crime. At his trial, the prisoner vigorously protested his innocence, but the circumstantial evidence was strong and he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. He maintained to the last that he was not guilty, and declared that the prayers he had offered for vindication would be answered after his death. On the scaffold he told the people to watch the trees in the neighborhood, for they would point the way to the dwelling of the real murderer. His friends had not much faith in his prediction, but a watch was kept on the trees. It was noticed that a cedar tree near the jail died soon after the execution and the blight extended from tree to tree across country in a straight line like the trail that a man makes in blazing a way through a wood. The line of dead trees stopped at a cedar which grew at the gate of the house of a man who had never been suspected of the crime. The strange indication caused so much talk that the man was arrested and has confessed his guilt. The narrator of this story declares that it is absolutely true.

Royalty or Love

A marriage solemnized on March 22 at the castle of Miramar in Austria-Hungary attracts unusual interest because of the sacrifices the bride made. She was the Princess Stephanie, daughter of Leopold, King of the Belgians. She had been married in her girlhood to Rudolph, only son and heir of Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, and she naturally expected that in the course of time she would become Empress of Austria. But all such hopes were destroyed in 1889 by the mysterious death of the dissolute Crown Prince, her husband, at the Castle of Meyerling, either as a suicide or the victim of a murderer. Since that time she has lived in state as a member of the Imperial family. Now, however, she has become the wife of Count Elsmere Lonyai, a Hungarian nobleman. The marriage was resolutely opposed by her own relatives in Belgium and by her late husband's relatives in Austria. The latter warned her that if she married she would forfeit her rank as a member of the Imperial family. It would appear that the threat did not deter her, for the marriage has taken place. It may be hoped that she will be happier as a countess than she ever was as Crown Princess; but so dear is rank to most ladies that few would be willing to sacrifice it even to wed the man they love. It is the converse of this change that Christ offers to those who love him. The humblest soul who accepts him he raises to the highest dignity in the universe.

Unto him that loved us and hath made us kings (Rev. 1:5, 6).

BRIEF NOTES

During the past nine years the chapel-cars sent out by the Baptist Publication Society have been the means of organizing eighty churches. During the same period 8,750 persons have made profession of faith who were brought to a decision for Christ in the meetings held in the chapel cars.

Rev. Thomas Harrison is enjoying one of the most remarkable revivals of his eventful life. He is at Bloomington, Ill., holding services in the Methodist Episcopal Churches. Arrangements are being made for a great jubilee day, at which it is expected fully five hundred persons will be received as the fruits of the revival.

Rev. James A. O'Conner recently welcomed to the communion of the Protestant Church a talented young Roman Catholic priest named Alphonius Hauberich, who is a member of the Order of St. Francis. He is a remarkably intelligent man, and has been for some time contemplating withdrawal from the Church of Rome.

We are glad to learn that the International School for the girls of Spain, which was so useful under the charge of Mrs. Gulick before the war, is to be reopened in Madrid. During and since the war it has been carried on at Biarritz. Mrs. Gulick has received contributions toward the cost of a building in Madrid amounting to fifty thousand dollars.

The movement for aggressive Christian work commenced by Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, in connection with Madison Square Church, New York, is developing rapidly. Dr. Parkhurst is happy in having secured the services of Major George A. Hilton as superintendent. Major Hilton's experience of such work in other cities, especially in Washington, D. C., in the Western States and on the Pacific Slope renders him an ideal officer for the charge of this movement.

CARNIVAL * TIME * IN * PUERTO * RICO

A SEASON OF EXTRAVAGANT MERRY-MAKING AMONG THE NATIVES OF OUR ISLAND COLONY

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that Puerto Rico has not yet wholly recovered from its long season of distress and suffering, which affected the greater part of the island's population, the return of carnival time was not permitted to pass without the usual celebration. A correspondent in

TWO BRAVE PUERTO RICAN LADIES
They kept "Old Glory" flying during the war

San Juan writes us a most interesting letter concerning the festival. He says:

"This feast, like many others of religious origin, has degenerated into one of merrymaking. The three days preceding Lent were originally set apart as days of fasting and prayer, to prepare the hearts of the people to begin Lent with the proper spirit, and a right understanding of its signification. At present it is spent in unrestrained amusement; the streets are strewn with tiny bits of paper, cut and accumulated for the purpose of being thrown from the balconies upon the heads of passers-by, and every available atomizer and syringe is brought into action by the men, in squirting perfumery upon the senoritas as they meet them on the streets or in the plaza. Of course, the lower classes use whatever they can best afford, and it is not unusual for ladies and gentlemen to get their clothing spoiled and their faces drenched with water and cheap perfumery.

"Our photograph shows a group of negroes keeping time to the beating of a drum made out of a barrel covered with sheepskin. They are partly dressed and their bodies smeared with tar. They are pelted with handfuls of the papelites which adhere to the skin and soon cover them all over. In all these sports there is manifested much good nature, and the senoritas seem to care nothing about the paper clinging to their dresses and in their hair. The writer went about the city, and while making observations received no injury to his person or clothing, but at night relieved himself of several handfuls of these small pieces of paper that had been put down his collar at different times, while passing dangerously near to the overhanging balconies, his intention on starting out being to keep the centre of the roads."

Two daughters of the late Dr. Luis Salicrup, a Puerto Rican by birth, but an educated American citizen, had a flag in their possession for several years before the Spanish war, which they refused to destroy or surrender, although entreated to do so by friends and relatives and threatened by the Guardia Civile, or mounted police. They are now as proud of the flag as if they had fought to defend it, which in a sense they did. After the occupation of the island by the American forces, these people opened wide their doors to receive their new friends, and gave a hearty welcome to the messengers of the Gospel.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School held every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock in their home, is well attended by children and adults, and in spite of the many attractions in and about the city in the carnival season, there were present at the last session, forty-six children and twelve adults. The writer had the privilege of teaching a class of boys, and it was indeed a treat to see the eager faces of those who seemed anxious to catch every word of explanation regarding the baptism and temptation of Jesus. Many a country pastor, and some of our city Sunday School teachers, would receive new courage, could they meet in their classes every Sunday a dozen such attentive and receptive scholars.

The Gospel in South America

Natives Hungry for God's Word—Missionary Olsson Returns to His Active Work

BY the time this issue is in the hands of our readers, Rev. Emilio Olsson, with whose work in South America our readers are familiar, will be on his way back to his field of labor in that continent. Just before his departure Mr. Olsson called at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, and spoke with deep feeling and faith of the good things which he hoped, with God's help, to accomplish for the benighted peoples of South America, and referred with great thankfulness to that which God had already permitted him to do for them. He said:

"The carrying of the Gospel into the depths of South America, I feel sure, will interest every true friend of missions. To me it has been an inconceivable joy to penetrate into its darkness with the Gospel light, and to explore many out-of-the-way places never before visited by a missionary of the Cross. In dark Bolivia I traveled with the Bible on muleback over 1,000 miles, and navigated the great rivers, Rio de la Plata, Mamore in Bolivia, Maderia, and the great Amazon in Brazil, by sailboats, canoes and steamboats, for over 3,000 miles. I am happy to say that more than 2,000 Scriptures—Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, in Spanish—were put into circulation on this trip alone, among different races and tribes which had never before possessed such treasure; probably we reached 30,000 souls with the message of salvation. Hundreds of Indian tribes in the heart of South America had never so much as heard of the Gospel of Christ. I know the names of forty-two different savage tribes in darkest Bolivia, numbering at least 1,000,000, who hardly know that there is a Christ. The Indians of the Chiquito tribe were astonished indeed when I told them of the Son of God and that he died for them. I was traveling one day in company with Gauchos and other Indians.

A SCENE DURING CARNIVAL TIME IN SAN JUAN STREETS

GAUCHOS ON THE SOUTH AMERICAN PAMPAS

One Gaucho, who could read, shed tears while reading my Spanish New Testament, which he handed back to me saying: 'This book I cannot read without crying. I did not know how God loved me before.' He told me he had never seen a New Testament until then. I gave him one. At another time a young man whom I met said he had wanted a Bible for three years but had not known where to get one. Still another, to whom I had given a tract called The Just for the Unjust, came to me a few days later, saying, 'I want the Big Book which speaks to me of the Just One who died for sinners;' and he bought a Bible and went on his way rejoicing.

"Through God's providence, every country in the neglected continent, as in a missionary sense South America has all too sad a right to be called, is now opening its doors to the Gospel and freely permitting the circulation of Bibles—this is true even of Ecuador, which has been closed against the Bible for 300 years. In many parts of South America the people are waiting and hungering for God's Word. The most remarkable place that I ever visited was the great nitrate fields of the Pampos, in northern Chili. The people at one meeting there became so intensely interested in the story of the Cross that I was preaching to them that after the sermon large numbers of them came up to me asking to buy Bibles. I let them have thirty-five. After another meeting, thirty poor souls sought the Saviour, and I left them praising God for sending them the Gospel. Rev. Thomas Wood, one of the oldest missionaries of South America, told me he had never seen a time when the natives were so ready as now for a great spiritual awakening. They have lost faith in their idols."

The school of interpreters which Mr. Olsson expects to establish will seek to provide the native messengers, who will return to their kindred in the forests bearing the Gospel tidings of great joy to their brethren, with translations of the Scriptures into various languages and dialects.

Mr. Olsson hopes that the training school, which has already a modest beginning, will send forth many Indian missionaries to labor among their own people. This school is now receiving Indian children, and they are under the special care and personal oversight of Mrs. Olsson.

The following true story of one Spanish Bible will touch the hearts of North Americans, who have so many Bibles: A young man bought it of Mr. Olsson; studied it faithfully; came to Mr. Olsson's little mission at Adrogue and was converted. Two years later, at a religious meeting in another place, Mr. Olsson met this man. His face was radiant with the joy of Heaven as he presented to the missionary half a dozen people who had become converted through the reading of that one Bible. Twelve persons besides had been brought through its influence to the missionaries' meetings; nine of these are now Christians, and one is deacon of a church in Chili. "The Bible in question, from constant use," said Mr. Olsson, "looked as if it were twenty years old, although only two years had elapsed between its sale and my second vision of it."

"Native converts make splendid workers and evangelists. The living messenger and the ever-living Word printed in the language of the people must go together into the dark interiors of the neglected continent if we would convert the dwellers of the jungles."

Where the natives have come in contact with civilized peoples, they understand Spanish; and this is very fortunate, for a native who happens to have lived in a town or worked on a plantation can explain the meaning of a Spanish Bible to his tribes-people who do not understand Spanish.

Mr. Olsson will keep us informed of the progress of his work, sending letters and photographs descriptive of it from time to time. Any of our readers who may desire to aid him in his efforts to carry the Gospel to the neglected people of our sister continent, can send contributions for that purpose to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York, and all will be duly acknowledged.

India's Viceroy Invites American Help

AN IMPORTANT DISPATCH FROM LORD CURZON TO THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON

ALL doubt as to the wide extent and terrible severity of the famine in India must be removed by the dispatch which Lord Curzon, the Viceroy of India, has transmitted to our Government. It shows not only the concern of the ruler of that afflicted land for the lives of the people, but a belief that the people, whom his wife claims as her countrymen and countrywomen, are sympathetic and will render help to a nation in its sore calamity. The dispatch has been brought to our notice in the following letter from the Second Assistant Secretary of State:

Photographed specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

WOMEN IN THE FAMINE CAMP AT AHMEDNAGAR

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, D.C., Mar. 24, 1900.

DEAR MR. KLOPSCH: Recalling your interest in the business of Cuban relief in 1898 and your efforts to assuage suffering in Russia, India and Armenia, I take the liberty of sending you copy of a press item which has just been given out expressing the willingness of the Indian Government to receive famine contributions from this country.

Very cordially yours,

[Signed] ALVEY A. ADEE.

This is the item Mr. Adee encloses: "The Secretary of State is informed by the Viceroy of India, with reference to offers of aid to the sufferers from the famine in India, which have generously been communicated to him by charitably disposed persons in this country, that while the Indian Government is devoting its energies to fulfilling its duty to save five million souls from starvation, contributions from any American friends of India will be thankfully received and will be devoted to the material relief of suffering."

A cable dispatch reports that on March 23 the number of persons receiving relief from the government, was five millions and the territory on which the famine was then pressing contained a population of sixty millions. It is evident that in regions contiguous to the original famine area, the sparse harvests are exhausted, and multitudes are being daily added to the great army of famine sufferers. The representative in the British Parliament of the Government of India, stated that the cost of feeding the people who had applied to the Government for relief, had already reached the enormous sum of ten and a quarter million dollars and he estimated that a further sum of sixteen millions would be needed to carry the people through until harvest. Probably never before in the history of nations has a government spent so enormous a sum in saving the lives of its people. But even this vast system of relief is inadequate. It does not reach the poor creatures who are unable to travel to the relief camps and who could not work there if they could get to them. The old people, the young children and the sick and delicate women, cannot make the toilsome journey and they are slowly dying by the hundred in remote villages. We asked the Rev. Justin E. Abbott, who knows the country well, having labored there for many years as a missionary, what proportion he thought such people bore in number to the people in the relief camps. He replied that in his opinion the lowest estimate would be five millions and the number was probably larger. Such a picture of the situation as his words convey is positively appalling. To think of five million persons slowly dying of hunger is heartrending. No one can conceive of the agony of mothers who must listen to their beloved children crying for food and must see them actually die of starvation. These are the people for whom the missionaries appeal. In their stations and in their preaching tours, they see them and hear their sad stories. It is no wonder that, as one missionary writes, they have given away every cent they have, and have borrowed money to relieve the worst cases. Men and women with the love of God in their hearts cannot witness suffering like this without an effort to alleviate it. In asking for the help of Christian people at home they ask as men and women, not as missionaries. Not a cent of the money intrusted to them is spent in their religious work, but is scrupulously and conscientiously expended in feeding the starving people.

In view of the urgency of the situation, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last week forwarded by cable to the missionaries in the famine districts. Of this amount $500 was sent to Pandita Ramabai; $500 to Rev. E. S. Hume, of Byculla, and $250 each to Kate Corbett, of Gujranwalla; Rev. R. S. Winsor, of Sirur; Dr. Keskar, of Sholapur; Rev. W. O. Ballantine, of Rahuri; Rev. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar; Rev. Henry G. Bissell, of Ahmednagar; Rev. E. Fairbank, of Vadala; Rev. J. R. Godshall, of Raj Nandgaon; Rev. Geo. N. Thomssen, of Bapatla; Rev. E. C. Millar, of Bina; Rev. D. O. Fox, of Poona; Rev. J. N. Forman, of Fatehgarh; Miss Lawson, of Bombay; Rev. Geo. J. Albrecht, of Palnad; Rev. J. H. Harpster, of Guntur, and the Salvation Army officer at Ahmedabad, Col. Nurani. These eighteen missionaries had all reported their need as very pressing, and they must have been delighted when they received help within an hour of its leaving New York. The cost of sending the money by this swift process is heavy in comparison with the mails, but the mail requires a month to reach India, and in that month many hundreds might die. Dr. Klopsch therefore determined to use the swifter mode, and paid the expenses himself.

Another $5,000

The list of acknowledgments we print this week shows how deeply our readers sympathize with this afflicted nation and how cheerfully they respond to the appeal for help that the missionaries have made. Such generosity is a proof that the religion of Christ is no meaningless profession with them, but is a vital power controlling heart and life. Some of the letters that have reached us containing contributions show that the writers have had to make sacrifices in order to give. Gifts of that kind assuredly bring a blessing. He who estimated the widow's two mites as greater than the larger gifts of the rich, because "she cast in all her living," will notice with divine approval the self-denial represented by much of this money that has been sent to us for the starving people of India.

The gratitude of the missionaries for the help they have received is pathetically expressed in their letters. Their words show how anxiously they had looked for aid and how gladly they will disburse the money. Dr. W. O. Ballantine, of Rahuri, writes, after receiving the thousand dollars cabled to him: "I am very much relieved by the receipt of this money, as I have been hard pressed on all sides for the relief of many persons who are in extreme want and who are needing help very sorely. I sit right down to thank you for this noble gift and through you to thank your numerous constituents who have come to our relief so generously in our difficulty. We are passing through the worst famine we have had yet.

The people have nothing to fall back upon. They have spent their all long ago and have no resources left. Many are deserting their children, and husbands and wives are being separated and are going wheresoever there is the least chance of their getting food to eat. The Government is doing its best, even going in debt in order to start famine relief works in every section of the country, but it cannot help some of the worst sufferers who, on account of age or sickness, are unable to leave their villages. It is these that the missionary longs so much to relieve. I shall send you a detailed statement of the expenditure of this thousand dollars later on. In the meantime I will simply say that I shall make it go as far and do as much good as it can."

Rev. E. S. Hume, of Byculla, Bombay, to whom we are indebted for the photographs reproduced on this page, writes: "These photographs will bring before you the condition of sixty millions of people in India to-day. Of these, multitudes are already nearly starved to death, and millions more would soon die but for the aid they are receiving from the Government and the missionaries, whom your readers are so generously providing with the means of relief. This year we are in a position to help many who have never before known severe want. By the help you are enabling us to render, they are taught to love the Christians who have come to their aid in their hour of distress. Deep-felt prejudices are being removed and are forever disappearing. Christians have never before had such an opportunity for furthering the interests of the Master's kingdom. For all that has been done and is still being done, we are most grateful. The picture of the famine camp herewith shows the camp at Ahmednagar when it was first opened. There are now five thousand hungry persons congregated upon it. The other photograph shows the women's section. They came to the camp early in the famine and are consequently in better condition than those who delayed coming. They are carrying earth to the works and in oriental fashion they do it on the head. They earn about three cents a day on which they manage to subsist."

Rev. Edward Fairbank, of Vadala, writes: "Please convey to your readers, on behalf of the members of this mission, our hearty thanks for the money they have sent us wherewith to alleviate the appalling suffering around us. The population as a whole is in a sad condition. The villages are a sight of nothing but destitution and wretchedness and want. A large proportion are almost without clothes. The greater proportion is in tatters, suffering intensely by the chill of the nights and the burning sun of the days. Hundreds of skin-covered skeletons are in evidence at the camps. Many children as well as adults, too far emaciated to recover, die in sight of food at these places. The situation in the camps is only a sample of the condition which one sees in every village and town. The suffering and want are beyond description.

"Even with what I have written, the subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund will be convinced, I am sure, that their money, distributed as it is through the hands of missionaries in large sections of Western India, will fulfil its mission to the suffering and famishing. In a future communication some representative of our mission will describe the ways in which the money has been distributed. Again I must add that it is a duty for us who stand between you and this stricken people to say that still the darkest days are before this land. There are at least seven months before a new crop of grain is possible in this part of the country. May you continue to remember these famishing millions."

> Thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him, because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto. For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee saying: Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor and thy needy.

The Viceroy's Pathetic Plea

Authoritative Statement of Famine Conditions Six Weeks Ago, when 3,750,000 were Supported at Government Expense—Now there are Over Five Millions

AT an Indian Famine Relief Fund inaugurated in Calcutta on Friday the 16th, at a crowded meeting in the Town Hall, Europeans and Indians, high officials, leading merchants and every other class being represented, the Viceroy presided and delivered a speech, in the course of which he said: "It is a sorrowful task to stand up to speak of the sufferings of millions of our fellow-creatures who, while we are living in comfort and affluence, are enduring severe hardships and privations, and are practically only being saved from the clutches of death by the direct action of the State. You are all aware, ladies and gentlemen, that we are confronted in India by a famine of unparalleled magnitude. To each famine as it comes these words are apt to be used. I am conscious of the dangers of exaggeration, but at the same time, from figures and facts submitted to me, from the totals already on relief, and from estimates of the probable duration and extent of suffering that have been sent up, I entertain little doubt that in the territories that are seriously affected the description is literally true."

A FAMINE WAIF

* * * *

3,750,000 Now on Relief and Likely to be Substantially Increased

After alluding to the pathetic condition presented by Bombay, where Plague adds its terrors to those of the Famine, the Viceroy proceeded to give the very latest statistics. He stated:

"I have during the past few days received an account, specially sent to me at my request, from every affected province or part of India, which enables me to give you the most recent tidings. When I spoke in the Council exactly four weeks ago from to-day, the numbers throughout India in receipt of relief exceeded three and a quarter millions. To-day, in spite of the closer stringency tests which have been applied, and which I may say in passing have been unanimously welcomed by the local Government officers as both timely and necessary, the total exceeds three and three quarter millions. No such number of persons has ever before been simultaneously relieved by any Government in the world. But I am constrained to admit that in spite of every legitimate precaution that may be taken, these totals are not likely to prove the maximum, but that in the spring and summer months that lie before us they will be substantially increased. In Central India, even the fertile district of Malwa, which has always been the asylum for famine-stricken wanderers from other parts, has itself been stripped bare. Hundreds of thousands of poor fugitives, who crowded over the border in the early days of scarcity, have drifted back again to pick up a meagre subsistence wherever they can. Famine conditions of the worst type prevail in Western Rajputana, where Jodhpur has lost as much as ninety per cent. of its stock of cattle, and other States a little less. The distress is spreading towards the eastern parts of that region. All these circumstances will show you that there is no exaggeration in describing the present as a time of unprecedented emergency.

The Duty of Saving Human Life

"And now, ladies and gentlemen, you may expect a few words from me as to the conditions under which we appeal to your charity and the objects to which it will be applied. I am not inclined to draw any pedantic distinctions between the spheres of Government duty and private benevolence. Wide as is the scope of the former, inasmuch as it includes the whole duty of saving human life, it is not so ample as to leave no margin for outside assistance. We are not asking you to relieve the Government of its due burden or to save us from one penny of expenditure that ought properly to fall upon our shoulders. Whatever you give us will make no difference in the extent and character of our outlay. That is fixed for us by the high conception that we entertain of our public duty, but for all that there is ample field for private generosity, both in supplementing that which the State can do and must do, and often in pursuit of that which the State cannot do at all.

A Convincing Offer

"If any rich man in this city is in any doubt as to whether he should subscribe, I would gladly give him a railway ticket to a famine district, and take what he chose to give me on his return. He might go with a hard heart, but he would come back with a broken one. Nor need any poor man desist from offering his mite. A mite to him may be almost a fortune to the starving."

STARVING PEASANTS ON THE WAY TO RAHURI IN SEARCH OF FOOD

Consecrated Gifts

ALL over the land, hearts have already been deeply touched by the sad story of poor India's sufferings. God's people everywhere are rallying to the cry of distress, and vying with each other in their efforts to send the quickest relief to the starving multitudes. They are sending their gifts, accompanied by their earnest prayers, that what they give may be blessed to the sufferers and may be the means of saving precious lives.

Nearly all of these letters breathe the true spirit of consecration and self-sacrifice. One lady, in sending her gift, writes:

"India is dear to my heart. I have friends there who are laboring for the Master. I have been wanting to send an offering, but was taken ill and had to go to a hospital. I have not lived so close to Him as was my bounden duty. I often ask God to give those who have plenty no rest until they offer their hearts and purses for these sufferers."

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. S., of Riley, Kan., writes, addressing their letter to those "in charge of this wonderful opportunity to show the truth of the preaching of our missionaries in India that the love of our Lord Jesus Christ in the heart of this great American nation really means, in deed and in truth, something more than is found in the heart of those worshiping idols. Enclosed I send herewith exchange for $225, as some little expression of my sympathy for their great needs. I hope to be able to send to you next week $300 more as a further evidence of this sympathy shared by myself and wife for these dying multitudes."

Two days later, from the same good people, came a second letter, enclosing $300, "to assist in the purchase of corn for the famine-stricken people of India.

"We assume from the character of the religious publication house that assumes charge of this, that it cannot be otherwise than that men who have charge of receiving and disbursing these funds must be men whose souls are, in the strictest sense, given to great accomplishments with the smallest possible outlay at such a time of need, with so many millions dying of starvation. Surely godly men will make best possible use of the funds so generously contributed by a sympathizing people who read your printed appeals for India's dying people. We are not wealthy people, but live in very modest and primitive lines of country villa life, keeping our personal expenses at the lowest possible limit. But if only a small part of our people would follow in similar contributions, if economically used, India would soon be redeemed from famine distress."

Some Touching Letters

Some of the letters are particularly touching and give evidence of the tender hearts that inspired them. Thus an afflicted friend writes from Geneva, N. Y.

"Knowing the kindness and liberality of your heart, I am quite sure you will not despise the small contribution of one dollar for the benefit of the starving people of India, from one who is blind."

Surely a special blessing must come upon such a gift as this!

Another letter, which will bring a thrill to the heart of many a parent whose "treasures" are in safe-keeping, is this:

"Bertha, Minn., March 21, 1900.

"I send you New York draft for $20.90. It belonged to our little Ro who left us. We wish it given for Indi

"Mr. and Mrs. L. P. L."

These are only a few of many such letters that are received, showing how warmly Christian America has the cause of suffering India at heart.

An Opportunity For All

SEE OPPOSITE

There are thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD whose hearts are aching for the starving millions of India and who are earnestly desirous of doing a Christian's share in their behalf, but who do not know just how to go at the work. To assist them to crystalize the laudable desire into a blessed and helpful reality we have prepared the subscription blank opposite, which should be carefully detached from the paper proper. Then an earnest house to house or friend to friend campaign should be begun, and the cause of India should be presented with an urgent request for a subscription. The name of the donor should then be entered with the amount contributed. Within an hour or two the list will have been completed, the work will have been accomplished, the vague desire will have been turned to a practical purpose and the benediction of our Heavenly Father will crown the work.

On the reverse side of the blank will be found many particulars which may be utilized to advantage, and much information that will enable the Christian volunteer worker to intelligently present the plea. Old and young, men and women, boys and girls can thus become life-savers and gain the blessing of him who in His Word hath said: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord shall deliver him in time of trouble."

As soon as you feel that you have done all you can, even if the list is not completed, sign your name to it and send it with the money collected to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Be sure to mail by April 16. This will give you a chance to take Easter collections for India's famishing millions.

In case you soil or tear this blank, an ordinary sheet of paper may be substituted.

Starving India's Pitiful Cry for Bread

What Will Christian America Do for Poor India's Starving Millions?

Statistics that Stagger

Many Millions of Starving People —Multitudes at Death's Door

One of the Least of These

THE most pitiful, most heartrending cry for bread that has ever escaped human lips or reached human ears comes from famine-smitten India's sorely distressed and greatly afflicted people. Many millions of human beings are in various stages of starvation, and a considerable proportion of these at death's door! The greatest catastrophe of the closing century is now being enacted, and unless help comes speedily to India's relief, Millions of men, women and children, principally of the farming communities, must die before the next crop is harvested.

* * * *

Five millions of these people are now employed by the Government at wages averaging two cents a day each, but the remainder must be relieved by private charity or succumb to starvation. England is doing nobly, but she is not equal to the occasion, and America, with her overflowing, bursting granaries, must speedily come to the rescue or these millions will perish from the very lack of what we enjoy in superabundance.

* * * *

A Noble Record

Christian America has never yet turned a deaf ear to the pitiful cry of agonizing despair. Ireland, Russia, Armenia, Cuba, Porto Rico, and India itself bear eloquent witness to her generous and prompt responsiveness to every worthy appeal, and in this calamity, greater than any yet witnessed, she will unquestionably prove herself worthy the noble record of the past, and share in generous measure the abundance wherewith she has been so bountifully blessed.

* * * *

Help Them to Help Others

Missionaries now working in India have been so affected by the scenes of heartrending suffering which they have been compelled to witness that, though their hearts are breaking, their tears refuse to flow. They themselves have given all they had and all they could borrow and now they are daily inditing pathetic communications, and sending them broadcast with the fervent prayer that God would move the hearts of their more fortunate brothers and sisters in distant lands to contribute largely in this hour of India's direst need, and thus help them to help those who are looking to them for salvation from impending death.

* * * *

Looking This Way

For many years these godly men and women have pointed the people to the Saviour, and countless thousands have accepted him and have been baptized in the Faith. Indeed, the cause of Christ is making wondrous progress among the dense and dusky population of India, and now that disaster has befallen them and death is threatening them, what wonder that they are hoping for help from this country whence hail the missionaries who have told them again and again the beautiful story of one Jesus who went about doing good, who fed the multitudes, and whose followers in this prosperous country are walking in the footsteps of their Master, daily testing their lives by the standard he established, and ever asking themselves, What would Jesus do?

* * * *

Help Them Quickly

And shall they look in vain? Shall they be disappointed? Shall we lead them to believe that our religion is mere profession? Shall we shut up the bowels of our compassion and tell them that American money and American grain are for Americans only—that religion is one thing and charity quite another? Or shall we open up our hearts, our hands, our purses and our granaries, and in the name of our Master whom we serve bid them share with us the bounties of our Heavenly Father's goodness?

A Safe Investment

"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

Two cents a day will support a life. One dollar will keep a man, woman or child two months from starvation. Ten dollars will save five lives for four months. Twenty dollars will save a whole family until next harvest.

* * * *

The Land of His Birth

This pathetic cry for bread comes from the continent of Asia, concerning which Dr. Talmage says:

Egypt gave to us its monuments, Rome gave to us its law, Germany gave to us its philosophy, but Asia gave to us its Christ. His mother an Asiatic; the mountains that looked down upon him, Asiatic; the lakes on whose pebbly banks he rested and on whose chopped waves he walked, Asiatic; the apostles whom he first commissioned, Asiatic; the audiences he whelmed with his illustrations drawn from blooming lilies and salt crystals, and great rainfalls, and bellowing tempests, and hypocrites' long faces, and croaking ravens—all those audiences Asiatic. Christ during his earthly stay was but once outside of Asia.

A Flying Relief Ship

The Secretary of State for India has cabled to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that his government will pay transportation charges if America will speedily send a cargo of corn, and already arrangements are under way to have a capacious vessel laden with life-saving American grain start from the harbor of New York at an early date.

* * * *

If we can secure a million bushels of corn of the 2,500 millions harvested last year, we can fill ten ships, and the greatest life-savin fleet ever organized will spee across the waves and bring hop and life for four months to a millio men, women and children.

* * * *

Let All Join Hands

Let every village be represente Let every Church, Sunday Schoo Officer, Teacher and Schola vie with each other in haster ing to the rescue of this unfor tunate people. Let farmers orgar ize and send car-loads of corr This is the greatest opportunity c the closing century to do good i the Master's name. We are Hi almoners. He gave up all for us and now through these starvin ones he claims a share of what h has entrusted to our care. Are w unjust stewards? God forbid! I this gracious Easter-time, how ca you honor Christ more than by gift which will in itself be a resu rection, inasmuch as it may becom the blessed means of bringing bac to life and joy those perishing ones

* * * *

Help or They Perish

We urge upon every reade of this appeal to join the Chris tian life-saving crew and to thro out to these starving people the lif line, before it is too late. Try t fill a car with corn and send to u for instructions. If you canno pay freight charges The Chris tian Herald will pay the bil If you cannot send corn sen money. Pray that God's peop everywhere may realize the impor ance and urgency of the case an may willingly and cheerfully giv even as God has prospered them.

The King's business require haste. Every day's delay may prov fatal. Let us then be up and doin He that sitteth in the heaver watches us. His eye is upon u What we do let us do it as unt Him, and he that seeth in secr and rewardeth openly will bless u with an everlasting blessing.

Another View of Japanese Childhood

NOT long ago, following the information given by Lafcadio Hearn, Miss Bacon, Sir Edwin Arnold, and other well-known writers on Japan, and also conveying the impression I have received from American friends who have visited the Sunrise Kingdom, I spoke of Japan as a very happy place for babies and little children. A missionary friend, whose letter was on its way to me when I wrote the paragraphs referred to, has a different opinion, and I think my readers will be interested to see what she says. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD always wishing to be absolutely fair and true, and to present both sides of a story so that no injustice may be done. This letter has made me more than ever anxious to help in sending the Gospel to Japan, for only where Christ is really worshiped and served can either children or grown people be happy and comfortable in mind, body or estate.

The writer of this letter has spent ten years working among the poorer people in Japan. She says:

"I have seen a great many festivals and feasts of dolls and New Year days, when the children are dressed up in bright clothes, and go out in the narrow streets and play. But if yours and your neighbors' children had a lot of gorgeously dressed dolls packed away in a fireproof house for 360 days, and then saw them brought out and set up on shelves to be admired, but not handled at all during the festal week, do you think they would enjoy them? The streets have no sidewalks, and when the children play they have constantly to watch lest bullocks or pack horses or jinrikishas run over them, and open sewers are on every street, into which little children frequently fall.

"All childlife is not made up of play. They sometimes are ill, and then various treatments are tried. Sometimes they have moxa put on their backs, a bit about the size of a pea, which is set on fire. The child screams and tries to get away, but is held fast till a number of places are burnt in its back. I have watched this done. They often give them the gall of animals for stomach troubles. Then they have to go to school and sit on hard and very uncomfortable benches in cold school-rooms where there is no fire. There are about 30,000 schools of all kinds in Japan, and I doubt if there are 500 which have any method whatever of warming their school-rooms. Some of the little boys wear caps, but the girls go bareheaded. Some have shawls or a piece of flannel cloth tied around their necks. Their feet are clad in sandals and cotton stockings that come just up to the ankle. Some little boys wear drawers to cover their lower limbs, but the girls never. Those oriental dresses are so made and worn that they afford very little protection from the cold, and if the children run about and play their naked lower limbs are exposed to view at every step. I have seen them coming home from school looking as if their blood had almost congealed. Their homes are a little more comfortable for cold weather than the school-rooms, for there they can sit down on the floor-mats and warm their hands over a little blaze of charcoal in the fire-box. But there are no stoves or fire-places to heat the room. Then, too, many little girls can't go to school because they must stay at home and carry a younger baby brother or sister on their backs all day. Some little tots, six years old, have all their play with this burden on their backs. Only a little over one-half of the girls of school-going age go to school in Japan.

"I suppose, taken altogether, Japanese children have a better time than any other children in the Orient, but there is the widest difference in the world between the pleasures, comforts and advantages of the average Japanese child and the average American child. Some travelers come to Japan and visit the better class of people and write of them as if theirs were the customs of Japan. They go to the few comfortably heated school-rooms in Tokio and suppose that the other 29,000 school-houses in Japan are equally comfortable. What I have written here is the average scene among the common people, who make up about ninety per cent. of Japan.

WEARIED WITH PLAY

Quarreling Before Folk

It was in a public conveyance that two well-dressed persons, apparently husband and wife, recently quarreled so angrily and vociferously that the friend who witnessed the occurrence and narrated it to me, said that the whole car full of spectators was outraged and indignant. No decent people air their angry feelings in a crowd. They do not quarrel before their servants, or in company, or in the presence of the children. They should not quarrel at all, if they are Christians, but, you may rest assured that if any body, man or woman, gives way to temper, uses emphatic language accompanied by violent gestures, waxes red and furious in the face, talks with a raised voice, and calls names anywhere, and especially in society or in a crowd, that individual is most ill-bred, undisciplined and impolite, as well as very wicked before God.

"Better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is," than a feast with malice and all uncharitableness. Never, dear lady and gentleman—as you value the good old-fashioned title—never fight or squabble or bicker in public.

A SONG

For the flowers that spring in the meadows,
For the grace of the dew and the rain;
For the sunbeams, and also the shadows,
To thank thee, dear Lord, I am fain.

Thy mercy is new every morning,
Thy Goodness repeated each night;
Thy love is my breakfast-plate, adorning
My garments of praise with its light.

EUNICE ELMENDORFF.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—VIOLET VANE. It is vanity, not love, which has been wounded in your case. You are much too fond of flirtation, I fear.

—MRS. L. Your letter awakes my sympathy. Still, you have gone through the hardest part of your experience, and have the satisfaction of knowing that you did your best.

—RUTH LONE. The King's Daughters wear a silver cross and a purple ribbon as their badge. Their object is to deepen the spiritual life of the individual, and to do good to others as they have opportunity.

—ANXIOUS MOTHER. Do your utmost to keep your boys at home in the evening and try to make the house pleasant for them. Boys like a cheerful stir and a little fun. They do not enjoy a gloomy room and cross faces. So don't scold them, but oblige them nevertheless to stay in after dark.

—M. M. Dismiss the matter from your mind, believing that your life is a plan of God and that you have been guided in your actions. Think no more about the person to whom you refer, as he is now married, and hold no communication with him or his wife, as indeed you have no rights in the case. Undertake some definite religious work, and let that folded leaf lie where it is.

—L. M. W. Apply to the nearest large hospital where they have a training school for nurses, addressing "Superintendent of Training School." Application blanks for you to fill will be sent you. A certificate of good moral character from your clergyman, and of health from your physician is usually required, and you must be over twenty years of age, and have a good common school education.

∴ TIRED OUT ∴

THE dear little girlie has been playing in the garden, digging a bed for her pansies, frolicking with her kitten, running races with the sunbeams. Mother called her in to learn a lesson, for this small Elizabeth recites her lessons to her mother every morning. But, like some older and bigger people, Beth prefers play to a task, and is apt to be weary when the call comes to work. Mother knows all about it, as mothers always do, and she smilingly listens to the little maid's complaint and soothes her as the brown head rests on her lap. The Bible says "As one whom his mother comforteth," and I have not yet found in this strange world anybody who is a better consoler in every experience than just the sweet and precious mother. Her love never fails, her goodness is unspeakable, her tenderness cannot be worn out, nor her compassion exhausted. When we are old and gray-headed we still cling to the dear memory of our mother and are thankful for what she was to us in our early years, and, as long as she lives, and we live, we never are ready to do without her.

A Reply to the Stepchild

Several weeks ago, a stepchild made a little statement of her side of the question at issue, in the stepmother discussion in which our readers continue to be interested. "A New Subscriber," who is very welcome to speak on the subject, sends a reply to this young lady.

"Let me emphatically say, my dear child, that if you have health, you have everything left. You have cause for rejoicing that your father has married again, thus setting you free to live your own life. In the four years of your experience as head of the house you have learned self-control and self-denial, and I have no doubt you are now a capable woman, of a type of which the world has great need at home and abroad. The practical knowledge you have acquired while taking the place of your sainted mother, is in itself a future. Let 'I can't' be a word unknown to you. 'Yes, Master, I will,' is the phrase which should be on your lips as you look forward to the future."

Looking Down on Others

The state of mind in which people look down on others is far from Christ-like, and must be very displeasing to the Master. I cannot imagine a Christian as patronizing or condescending, as feeling that worldly station, or larger fortune, or a prettier house, or a better education, gave her the right to feel elated. Every gift from God means a new responsibility, another thing to be accounted for in our stewardship. In a church there should never be drawn hard and fast lines of division, but all should be united in sweet and friendly affection and companionship, serving the Lord. Of course among kindred, such a thing as looking down upon poor relations should never exist.

Little Tenement Folks

They are beginning to write letters to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and to hang around the Bible House; if so be they may catch Dr. Klopsch on the wing, or Housemother Collins, or some one member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S great army of workers, who can tell them just "when the country will open?" which being elaborated into plain English means. "Will the Children's Home open this summer, and can I go to it?" From four to twelve is the age limit of acceptable candidates for fresh-air outings; and little guests of last summer who wanted to take baby sisters and brothers along are writing funny little letters, assuring us that tiny candidates who had to be rejected last season are "mos' four now an' big as four ennyhow." During the winter past some of our readers have remembered that hot days will come, and that the poor children of the tenements will suffer—and many of them perish—unless Christ's followers make some provision for them. All contribution for our Fresh Air Work will be acknowledged in these columns.

.. Temperance in Congress ..

The Annual Meeting of the Venerable Congressional Temperance Society

EVERY year, in the latter part of March, in one of the many committee rooms which honeycomb the great National Capitol building at Washington, a few members of the Senate and House gather and hold a meeting. Not a large number of either legislative house come to this meeting; yet it is one of the oldest organizations of Congress, and one that has ciety could be congratulated on its great age and the great names which it bore on its roll, and while it had never been an active, aggressive body, yet during all of the sixty-eight years of its existence, it had held aloft at the Capital of the nation the white banner of the cause; that it had repeatedly demonstrated that whenever the necessity arose, that there were, in both of the legislative branches of the government, members who stood not only perhaps done more for national legislation along certain reformatory lines than any other in existence. It is the Congressional Temperance Society, the oldest temperance organization in America. This year its annual business meeting was held in the committee room of its present President, Hon. Wm. Grout, of Vermont. The annual election of officers was held at the business meeting in Mr. Grout's committee room and he was re-elected President, and Senators Frye and Kyle, and Representatives Littlefield, of Maine; Pugh, of Kentucky; McCleary, of Minnesota; Lamb, of Virginia; Snodgrass, of Tennessee, and Lloyd, of Missouri, were chosen Vice-Presidents. Rev. F. D. Powers, the pastor of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church at Washington, and who has been the main-spring of the Society for a dozen years, was re-elected Secretary.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY

1, HON. W. W. GROUT, PREST.; 2, HON. S. J. PUGH, VICE-PREST.; 3, SENATOR KYLE, VICE-PREST.; 4, HON. J. D. LONG, VICE-PREST.; 5, REV. F. D. POWERS, SEC'Y.

On the Sunday evening following the business meeting, the annual public meeting of the society took place at the Lutheran Memorial Church on Scott Circle. This meeting occurs on the Sunday evening which is nearest the birthday anniversary of Maine's apostle of prohibition, Neal Dow, and this year it was the 18th inst. Mr. Grout presided and in his opening remarks said that, if for nothing else, the Congressional Temperance Society could be congratulated on its ready to declare themselves temperance men and total abstainers, but to carry with their votes any measure in the interest of the temperance cause. This was evident last winter when the Anti-Canteen Act passed both houses.

Rev. Mr. Powers followed Mr. Grout, giving in place of his annual report a brief sketch of what Mr. Dow's efforts had done for the cause of temperance throughout the country. Mr. Littlefield, one of the new Vice-Presidents and the new member of the House of Representatives from Maine, who made himself famous in a day by his speech in Congress on the minority report of the Robert's case and who has since become known as the leader against the Puerto Rican tariff, was introduced and said he not only believed in temperance, but in total abstinence and prohibition. The first public speech he ever made was a temperance one and he had been making them more or less ever since. Representative Lloyd, of Missouri, also declared himself in unqualified terms for temperance. Representatives Talbert, of South Carolina; Greene, of Massachusetts, and Dahle, of Wisconsin, followed in short but strong speeches, declaring for temperance and legislation in its favor.

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the history of the founding and gradual development of the Congressional Temperance Society was published.

It was founded in 1833, and was fostered by such celebrities as Daniel Webster, Millard Fillmore, and others equally notable, gathering its patrons from prominent men in many States. It was organized on February 26, 1833, three months before the first National Temperance Convention was held in Philadelphia. Its first meeting was held in the historic old Senate Chamber, now occupied by the Supreme Court, and its platform declared its object to be "to discountenance by example and by kind moral influence the use of ardent spirits and the traffic in it throughout the community." Hon. Lewis Cass, of Michigan, Secretary of War, was chosen president. Theodore Frelinghuysen, Senator from New Jersey, submitted a constitution which was adopted and signed by one hundred members of the Senate and House of Representatives. On its roll appear such names as George N. Briggs, of Massachusetts; Thomas W. Gilmer, of Virginia; J. R. Giddings, of Ohio; Rufus Choate, of Massachusetts; John Blair, of Tennessee; Henry A. Wise, of Virginia; Millard Fillmore, of New York; Thomas F. Marshall, of Kentucky; W. W. Ellsworth, of Connecticut; Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire; Thomas Ewing, of Ohio; Justices of the Supreme Court, Cabinet officers, Senators, Representatives, and heads of Departments. Among later subscribers were Thomas W. Ferry, Henry Wilson, Schuyler Colfax, William Windom, Lot M. Morrill, John A. Logan, William Washburn, James Monroe, Hiram Price, James A. Garfield, F. T. Frelinghuysen, Henry V. Blair, John D. Long, A. E. Morse, Nelson Dingley, and scores of others well known in public life. Hon. William W. Grout, of Vermont, succeeded the late Nelson Dingley, who held the position of President of the Society for fourteen years.

Samantha and the Poets

Her "Journey" Arouses the Poetic Spirit of Our Readers

How popular it seems to be
To travel now o'er land and sea.
But every one can't do it;
So I shall stay at home this year,
And scan the pages that appear;
To see how others view it.

I see the sympathy all goes
To "Aunt Samantha's" words of prose
Like sparks above the fire;
It possibly might make her vain
To be kept under such a strain,
So I shall love Josiah.

Livermore, Ia. MRS. LORA IVES.

I welcome in the HERALD'S page, Josiah Allen's wife—
To read "Samantha" surely gives an added charm to life.

Her good sound sense, peculiar style, appear on every page,
And yet she paints in faultless lines the follies of the age.

Her Christian spirit at all times, on all occasions flows
A stream to comfort every soul; all vices feel her blows.

Among all authors who've achieved great honor during life,
In prominence will always stand Josiah Allen's wife.

"Charity Begins At Home."

Be kind to your body. Remember it is fed not by thoughts of what you think you'll do, but by the strong volume of vital force which the heart distributes. Treat your life's blood well. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a medicinal sister of charity, and aids to keep you in good health as nothing else can.

Pure Blood—"My blood was poor. I had headaches and but little appetite. Since taking two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the headaches are gone, my blood is in good condition and I have a good appetite." C. A. Hoffman, 580 Broadway, Long Island City, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Maud Bemis, of Scipio, Ind., says:

"Something over three years ago I became affected with nervousness and neuralgic troubles. This continued until a year ago, after which time I was almost constantly confined to my bed. The neuralgia gradually grew worse: nervous debility set in, and I was completely run down. My blood was impure and watery, while my complexion was sallow and colorless. I had no strength, and was almost completely helpless. The doctor finally advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"Father bought a couple of boxes of the pills and after taking the first box I was much improved. I think I must have used about a dozen boxes with the result that I was entirely cured, and have since had no symptoms whatever of my old trouble.—From the Sun, North Vernon, Ind.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are never sold by the dozen or hundred, but always in packages. At all druggists, or direct from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y., 50 cents per box. 6 boxes $2.50.

The Dawn

WE are looking for the coming of the dawn,
The night of error now will soon be gone;
And a glad and happy day,
Come to bless the world alway,
And dispel the gloom for aye;
Help it on!

We are looking for a blessed reign of peace,
When war among the nations all shall cease,
And the greatest good for all
Be the people's clarion call,
And lone all hearts enthrall;
Help it on!

We are looking for our Christ to come again,
And within the hearts of men take up his reign;
So that all shall brothers be.
And the light of truth shall see,
The truth that makes men free;
Help it on!

Among Korean Children

IN some account of her Home for Destitute Children in Korea, sent to a friend at home, Miss Perry writes: "Is it not wonderful that we should have such a lovely place given us for a home? Last year we sent out circulars, saying we wanted a large place in a healthy situation outside the city walls. Now we have that place—a nice Korean house, with extensive garden and fields—just what we desired. I want to take in a large number of children this year, but funds have come in very slowly.

"Seoul is a very large city, the residence of the Emperor, and the centre of all mission work in the country. It is surrounded by a high and picturesque wall, with large gates, which have heavy roofs, and generally a room above the gate for watchmen. The gates are open all day, and closed at night. The country around is very beautiful, the foliage very luxuriant, when the Koreans do not cut it for firewood. Our garden has been one succession of blossom since the spring. The ground we have is six or seven acres, in a pretty hollow half-way up a mountain, which slopes gradually down to a thickly-populated district, just outside the west gate of the city.

"The little girls are very lively and affectionate. They can learn very easily, and think nothing of committing to memory half a chapter in the morning."

An Ostrich's Appetite

In a letter from South Africa, a correspondent gives this entertaining account of the omnivorous ostrich: "On our arrival they attached themselves to our camp, and being very tame, they were much petted and fed by the boys. The digestion of an ostrich is proverbial, and we can believe anything after witnessing some of the gastronomical performances in this camp. Match-boxes, bars of soap, jam tins as well as rubbish and refuse of all kinds are keenly relished by them. Everything they swallow passes down their long necks immediately under the skin, and it is very funny to see them snatch up a number of articles and see them chasing one another down their four feet of neck. We soon had to chase them out of the camp as we found they did not confine themselves to what we didn't want, but were frequently surprised in an empty tent, eating brass-headed cartridges out of bandoliers, as well as picking brass buttons off clothes, while our brass rifle sights seemed to be regarded as an especially dainty tid-bit."

Samantha is Their Delight

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Dear Editor:—I was so prejudiced against Aunt Samantha's style of writing, that I did not read any of the story "Around the World" until I got seven copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Then I thought it unfair to condemn unheard, and I sat down and read every chapter, and now I wait anxiously for the next paper. I am glad that she so soundly denounces the accursed liquor traffic. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the best paper I have ever read. I wish it might be in every home in this and every land. W. K. ALBRANT.

A Joy for Stay-at-Homes

SOUTH DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Dear Editor:—I would gladly give the price of the paper for one sermon by Dr. Talmage, like that sermon on "Spiritualism." Aunt Samantha, too! What an interesting companion for the tourist! I am enjoying the trip immensely and am right glad her companion is with her, as she can now give her undivided attention to the description of her journey, so that we stay-at-homes can be benefited thereby. Dear Aunt Samantha!

GRAPE-NUTS CURE.

Good Food Works Salvation.

"When I began the use of Grape-Nuts food for breakfast, I was suffering with nervous and stomach troubles. I found that Grape-Nuts furnished a nourishing, satisfying meal, that the stomach took to beautifully. I feel so much more satisfied and well-fed after a meal of Grape-Nuts, and do not have that disagreeable gorged and tight feeling in the stomach which so often used to accompany my meals when I was using other foods.

"This proves to me that Grape-Nuts food is a highly condensed and nourishing food which satisfies the system as no other food does, and causes no indigestion. It is a God-send to all sufferers of stomach and nervous troubles.

"I have several neighbors who are using both Postum Creal Coffee and Grape-Nuts, and they wonder how they ever did without either, since learning how good and beneficial they are. One lady has a family of growing school children. She says they use nothing else for their luncheon at noon but Grape-Nuts with milk. They all enjoy the food very much and feel well fed. She states that when the children come in from school, they are not starved for a piece of something to eat, as they formerly were when they lunched from all other foods.

"This has convinced her that Grape-Nuts food sustains the system longer than any other food. The fact that it is thoroughly cooked and ready for immediate serving is of great value, especially when one is in a hurry. Please do not publish my name." The name of this lady can be had by application to the Postum Creal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Sheldon as a Laborer

He Spent a Whole Vacation Working with His Hands Among the Wage-Earners

BEFORE he wrote his great book, In His Steps, the Rev. C. M. Sheldon one Sunday asked his congregation for a two weeks' vacation. His request was readily granted. The next day he disappeared. Without saying a word to anyone outside of his family he had donned the clothes of a workman and gone to live for two weeks among the workingmen of Topeka.

He has never written about his actual experiences at that time, but has often spoken of the discoveries he made regarding the life of the day laborer. He found that it was not easy to get work. No one knew him in his disguise, and he seemed to be a sturdy, strong, healthy man, although his speech might have betrayed his intelligence. The first week was almost gone before he got a job, although he was ready to take any work that presented itself. His first employment was in a coal yard shoveling coal. He rode on the carts and shoveled coal into the cellars of several citizens of Topeka. None knew that the poor-looking man with the blackened hands and face coal-begrimed was the Rev. C. M. Sheldon. He next worked in the railroad yards for awhile as a track hand—one of a gang of six. Finally, he went among the brick-layers, masons, plasterers, plumbers, street-sweepers, cart-drivers, and though he had not the time to take a job, if he could get it, in each of these trades he learned much about the lives of the bread-winners which could have been learned in no other way. In two weeks he got in close touch with the workingman, and could thereafter speak of him with intimate knowledge.

He has made good use of what he then learned in the seven books of which he is author. His whole life has been one of hard work. Many years ago, after his graduation from the theological seminary, he had a desire to go abroad, especially to see London, before settling down to preaching. He had little money; his whole capital being only $200, and he determined to make this amount pay for his journey. He crossed to Liverpool in the steerage; and there his first care was to purchase a return passage—a good illustration of his forethought and practicality. Then he proceeded to London and there lived among the masses, trying to understand their life. Before he could finish this self-imposed task, he had reached his last dollar! He went to his garret and wondered what he was to do. He decided to go to work.

He bought a penny newspaper, and almost the first advertisement he read was an offer of a good sum for the best article of a certain kind and length. It had to be in the newspaper office the next day. He wrote all night, and early next morning delivered his manuscript, hardly daring to hope he would ever hear from it again. To his astonishment, twenty-four hours later he received a letter from the paper enclosing a draft for several pounds. He had won the prize. He could remain yet awhile in London, studying the masses.

Now Mr. Sheldon is about to take his second trip to London. On the first of May he leaves Topeka, for an eight months' vacation. And how extremely suggestive is this second visit to London, of the change the years have wrought in his fortunes. Then he was poor and unknown; now he might be rich, if he chose, and his name is a household word, even in Great Britain. It is, indeed, a question whether he is not better known in England than in the United States. His books sell in England for one penny, and his hold on the working masses can be thoroughly appreciated only by those who have been there during the last year. The people have heard that the author of In His Steps is coming, and he is besieged with requests to lecture in every town, village and hamlet in the kingdom.

His books have been sold to the number of 20,000,000 copies, and his name is known to fully 100,000,000 people, in all North and South America, and in twenty-six countries of the Old World besides.

THE SEA AND THE CLOUD

An Allegory by an Unknown Author

THE great Sea lay and looked on high,
When floating aloft in the lovely sky,
It saw a fleecy Cloud, so light,
So pure, so spotless, and so bright;
It wondered whence so fleet a form
Arose, the heavens to adorn.
"They say," it sighed, "that came from earth,
And more, that I had given it birth.
But how absurd to think that I
Could ever mount that lofty sky!
Ah, I could never be like thee;
In the bosom of God thou seems't to be,
Besides,"—and the Sea was silent now,
As it thought of its wild and fevered brow;
And how oft in its rage it had dealt a blow
That laid thousands dead in its depths below.

And yet I perceived it could not rest
As it looked at that beauteous thing so blest.
Then it roused up and said: "I will try,"
And it borrowed the wind to drive it high;
And, gathering its strength, it curled in its pride
And dashed itself on the rock beside;
Then, rearing a column of quivering spray,
It seemed to be born to the heights away.
But it fell, alas! on the angry breast,
Back with it foaming, whitened crest.
Baffled and beaten, it buried its head,
And hid in the depths of its ocean bed.
And it hissed as it did so, "It cannot be;
I said I knew it was not for me."

At length the great Sea lay quiet and still,
For fell despair had subdued its will;
When the glorious Sun looked forth on the scene
And gleamed on its bosom in silver sheen,
And the great Sea looked in the face of the Sun,
And asked if it knew what could be done;
"The Moon draws me hither and thither," it said,
"But it cannot uplift me from my bed;
Nor can it transform this turbid breast
Into that thing so pure and blest.
Canst thou transform me?" said the Sea.
"Oh, yes," said the Sun, "if you'll suffer me."
And the Sun sent down a noiseless ray,
That loosened and warmed the Sea as it lay,
And lifted it up, how, it never knew,
A fleecy Cloud in the heavens blue.

Do you know the parable, listener fair?
Can you take the lesson that's couching there?
Are you that Sea with its fond desire,
Sighing and struggling to reach up higher?
Does perfect grace attract thine eye,
And to attain it dost thou try?
But do baffled efforts mock thy skill,
While sorrow and anguish thy spirit fill
And thou say'st, "In God's bosom that grace must rest;
It never can visit my troubled breast?"
Now, change thy plan, and behold the Son,
Just rest and trust, and work is done.
Transformed by beholding Him thoul't be,
His great salvation thou shalt see.
The process's, well, that thou canst not know;
Enough for thee it is "even so."
That he lifts thee up and makes thee fit
In the heavenly places with him to sit.

Bishop Newman's Last Work

A most interesting book by the late Bishop Newman is now in press, and will shortly be issued by Eaton & Mains, publishers, New York. It is entitled, Conversations with Christ. This volume was in manuscript when the Bishop died, and was prepared for the press by Mrs. Newman. The manuscript was read, at the request of the editor, by Dr. Buttz, President of Drew Theological Seminary, who states that the volume is in the characteristic style of its author, and the conversations are as natural as a friend conversing with a friend. The entire income from its sale will be devoted toward carrying out the long-cherished plans of the Bishop to aid young women who are preparing for the ministry. Orders should be addressed to Mrs. J. P. Newman, 150 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Gave Their Pennies for India

Three little children, touched by the story of India's suffering, have written this letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

MARNE, ID.

Dear Christian Herald:

My name is May Derby. I am 7 years old the 2nd of May. Mamma read to us about the poor hungry children in India. She said we might send some of our pennies, so I and my little sister Esther each send ten cents, and little brother Ray sends five cents. Mamma sends, in memory of our little Orpha who died last winter, and who had 25 cents she saved for them the other time. She was eleven years old. Good bye, from

MAY AND ESTHER AND RAY.

Dear little generous souls! If the great ones in this world's affairs were as tender and merciful as these little ones, how much human suffering might be avoided, how many hearts comforted!

The Starvation Plan

Of Treating Dyspepsia and Stomach Troubles is Useless and Unscientific

The almost certain failure of the starvation cure for dyspepsia has been proven time and again, but even now a course of dieting is generally the first thing recommended for a case of indigestion or any stomach trouble.

Many people with weak digestion, as well as some physicians, consider the first step to take in attempting to cure indigestion is to restrict the diet, either by selecting certain foods and rejecting others, or to cut down the amount of food eaten to barely enough to keep soul and body together, in other words, the starvation plan is by many supposed to be the first essential.

All this is radically wrong. It is foolish and unscientific to recommend dieting to a man already suffering from starvation, because indigestion itself starves every organ, nerve and fibre in the body.

What people with poor digestion most need is abundant nutrition, plenty of good, wholesome, properly cooked food, and something to assist the weak stomach to digest it.

This is exactly the purpose for which Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are adapted and the true reason why they cure the worst cases of stomach trouble.

Eat a sufficient amount of wholesome food and after each meal take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to promptly digest it.

In this way the system is nourished and the overworked stomach rested, because the tablets will digest the food whether the stomach works or not, one grain of the active digestive principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets being sufficient to digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or other albuminous food.

Dr. Harlandson and Dr. Redwell recommend these tablets in all cases of defective digestion because the pepsin and diastase in them are absolutely free from animal matter and other impurities and being pleasant to the taste are as safe and harmless for the child as for the adult.

All drug stores sell this excellent preparation and the daily use of them after meals will be of great benefit, not only as an immediate relief, but to permanently build up and invigorate the digestive organs.

Young Men and the Church*

AS to the attendance of our young men upon the public ministration of the churches, I believe the statement which places the number at only fifteen per cent. is conservative, so far as regular attendance is concerned. While thirty per cent. including men, women and children, are estimated to be regular attendants, yet of our young men we can class only fifteen per cent. of them as such. Only fifteen out of every one hundred young men upon whom we can regularly bring to bear the influence of the Gospel, and only twenty-five per cent. upon whom we can occasionally bring to bear this blessed power! Of course this twenty-five per cent. embraces the fifteen per cent. who habitually attend, as the fifteen per cent. embraces the ten per cent. who are members. The very fact of their being only occasional, and some indeed only semi-occasional attendants shows how lax is the grip of the church upon them. Yet they are not quite so helpless as that great army of their fellows who never attend church.

How terrific in its hopelessness is that phase of the picture. Seventy per cent. upon whose ears the sweet strains of Gospel news never fall, into whose hearts the uplifting and transforming power of Gospel truth never comes, walking on in darkness through a blindness that is born of ignorance, toward the precipice of eternal night!

To show the contrast as to the drawing power of vile shows compared to the church, note the following facts. In an average Southern city of thirty thousand inhabitants, during one evening the following statistics were noted: Fact 1. There entered the Y. M. C. A. rooms (and they were beautifully equipped) between the hours of seven and ten, twenty-seven young men. Fact 2. The pastor of the First M. E. Church, South (the strongest church in the city), was conducting a "revival" in a large tent near his church.

Out of an audience of possibly two hundred, there were eleven young men present. Fact 3. At the "Bethel Mission," a very popular religious enterprise of the city, there were one hundred and ten present, and only six of these were young men. Fact 4. In one block of this mission was a saloon with a "Midway" annex attached; into this place five hundred and eighteen men and boys were seen to enter between the hours of eight and eleven; not less than four-fifths of these were young men, and a few were boys under sixteen years of age.

Again note the drift. In one of the most progressive cities of Texas, while a "great union revival" was going on, backed by all the evangelical churches in the city, while under full headway, on Friday night with two thousand people present, only eighty-seven of them were young men. That same night there entered one of the saloon theatricals six hundred and seventeen young men. On the Sunday night following, the union revival had one hundred and eighty young men present, but the theatrical had 1,248 men and boys enter its doors between the hours of eight and half-past eleven o'clock. So much for the multitudes of our young men who attend the theatres and low-class entertainment halls. And so it is throughout our broad land.

The two conserving forces of our civilization, the home and the church, are practically wanting, just where the strain upon our institutions is greatest. It is an appalling fact that in those parts of our cities where we need most churches we have the fewest. In many of the wards in our great cities there are one hundred saloons (and in equal proportion licentious and gambling dens) to every one church. And the average in all our cities is not less than ten saloons to every church. Why is this estrangement of such vast multitudes from the church?

*From Danger Signals for New Century Manhood, by Edward A. Tabor; pp. 318, cloth binding, gilt top. A volume of up-to-date facts and statistics, forcefully presented and of intense and practical interest to young men. The Abbey Press, 114 Fifth avenue, New York, publishers.

NEW HOME RUPTURE CURE

Remarkable Method that Heals Any Rupture Without Pain or Danger

No Operation or Detention From Work —Is Cheap, Safe and Sure.

Dr. W. S. Rice has backed up with convincing facts his statement that rupture can be cured at the patients' home without pain, danger operation or detention from work. He has invented a cheap and reliable method that has met with marvelous success and thousands of people ruptured for years have been permanently cured. It cured R. M. Wilsie, of Brandon, Wis., who had been ruptured 20 years. Mrs. M. E. Smith, Rockingham, Vt., was badly ruptured and cured herself by Dr. Rices' method. Wm. Bigford, Bishop Mills, Ont., tried various trusses with no success and finally cured himself by the Rice plan. Jacob Lindner, Drums, Pa., owes his cure to Dr. Rice. G. Nilson, Sogn, Minn., has a double rupture and calls Dr. Rice's method a God-send.

Several thousand cases are reported cured by this remarkable method and as it is very low in price, easily used, adapted to either sex, adults or children, every ruptured person should at once investigate it. Write to Dr. W. S. Rice, 392-D, Main St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a full description, so you can cure yourself in a few weeks, long before the heavy work of the springtime begins. Do not fail to write to-day and if you know of others afflicted, send their names for this wonderfully valuable information. They will appreciate your kindness.

America's First Woman Preacher

THE first woman to be ordained a minister of the Gospel is still living, and actively interested in the work of a number of clubs and societies in which she holds an honored membership. Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, of 139 West Sixty-fourth street, New York, is this pioneer woman minister. She was educated at Oberlin College, and was a classmate and life-long friend of Lucy Stone. They pursued the regular academic course, side by side with the men students, despite the protests of instructors. Miss Brown then entered Oberlin Theological Seminary, and in 1850 took her degree of divinity. For six months she spoke in a public hall in New York. She declined an invitation to establish an independent church. Opportunities for Gospel work presented themselves from widely diverse places, cities, towns, rural districts, in Ohio, New England, New York and elsewhere, many of them in the form of addresses at gatherings of women. In 1852, a congregation at South Butler, Wayne county, New York, invited her to become their pastor. She was regularly ordained that year by the council called by the First Congregational Church. She made many friends, and even her critics were compelled to recognize in her an earnest worker. Not many years later, her very successful pastorate was brought to an end by her marriage to Mr. Blackwell. The time which she did not give to domestic duties and her family was thereafter largely spent in writing.

REV. ANTOINETTE B. BLACKWELL

Mrs. Blackwell's ordination was closely followed by that of the Rev. Augusta J. Chaplin, who was ordained in December, 1863. She is the first woman to receive the title of Doctor of Divinity. The Rev. Olympia Brown was the next woman ordained. Her ordination occurred at Malone, N. Y. Then followed the ordination of Rev. Phoebe A. Hanaford, who was the first woman to be ordained in New England. She was ordained at Hingham, Mass., in 1868. Since these women were ordained, there have been nearly one hundred ordained in various denominations. During a recent week in Chicago, three women preached in three different pulpits. Miss Sadie American, in Dr. Emil G. Hirsch's pulpit, in Sinai Temple: Mrs. J. H. O. Smith, in the Union Christian Church, and Mrs. H. W. Thomas, in the People's Church, Chicago.

A Valuable Aid to Study

TOPEKA, KAN.

Dear Sir:—I received the Red Letter New Testament and I consider it a special gift, in appreciation of which I offer my sincere thanks. It is unique in design, good print, and of great use in the study of the New Testament Scripture. To me THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a most valuable paper. It is religious, practical and attractive, full of good literature by our best authors. Choice pictures and illustrations, and a welcome weekly visitor to many homes. I have been a reader of it for many years.

THE JOB LOT MAN OF CHICAGO

He Sells Bankrupt Stocks and Manufacturers' Remnants at Less than Cost of Production

Peremptory Sacrifice Sale

The Entire Manufactured Stock of the Most Extensive Manufacturer of Kitchen Furniture in the World Purchased by me at 67 Cents on the Dollar.

The Kitchen Cabinet shown above is the only practical and sensible article of its kind ever invented. It assembles within easy reach everything needful for cooking and baking. Two large, metal-bottom, mouse-proof bins; one will hold 50 lbs. flour, the other is partitioned into two compartments, for cornmeal and graham or sugar. Two large drawers, one for spices, baking powder, etc., the other for knives, forks, spoons and rolling pins. Two large boards slide into frame—one for kneading and cutting bread, the other for meat. Legs and frame are hard wood, beautifully finished in golden antique; the top and boards are made of specially selected, close-grained poplar, so that they can easily be kept clean. Size of top, 27x48 inches. I have purchased at 67 cents on the dollar the entire stock of the manufacturers of this cabinet. These cabinets are now being held at the factory in Indiana awaiting my shipping instructions. I have agreed to remove them within 60 days. I therefore propose to close out the lot at the sensationally low price of on board cars at the factory. Prompt shipments guaranteed. I warrant every Cabinet to be absolutely perfect, and will refund the purchase price of any found otherwise, upon its return to me within 30 days. I will sell these cabinets to any one, anywhere, in any quantity—$4.95 for one, $49.50 for ten, $495.00 for one hundred, $4,950.00 for one thousand. They retailed at $8.00 to $10.00 each (according to locality) before the recent great advance in prices. These Cabinets are shipped with the lower section of the legs detached and packed in one of the drawers, thus securing a very low freight rate. To over 1500 points in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois these charges are only 25 cents per cabinet. To points east, north and south the rate is a trifle lower than from Chicago; to western points it is a little more. My price does not include freight charges.

Terms: $1 down, balance on delivery; or, if you prefer to remit the entire amount in advance—which is much the better plan—deduct 2 per cent. As to whether you would be safe in dealing with me on this basis, I refer to every Bank in Chicago. Address, simply,

ELMER ELLSWORTH STEVENS, the Job Lot Man, Chicago.

Immediate Relief from Rheumatism

Mr. W. H. Jenkins writes from Topeka, Kan., under date of August 5th, 1898;

GENTS:—Several years ago I was crippled with rheumatism, and for 162 weeks I was unable to do business of any kind, and in that time I have expended nearly $3,000. I had given up all hope.

My mother saw you. advertisement, and we ordered one bottle of your Tartarlithine, which gave me immediate relief.

I have recommended your medicine to a number of parties in this city, who have had chronic rheumatism for years. One of them, a lady 68 years of age, is now doing her own work. So far your medicine has not failed to make a cure. * * *

In conclusion your medicine is just as represented, and has entirely eliminated the disease from my body.

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

COFFEE vs. PREACHER

"People Poisoned by Coffee Should Leave It Off."

"I have been a great coffee drinker for years and it has kept me in a bilious condition, with more or less neuralgia, as the result of general ill-health produced by coffee drinking. I have discovered that coffee is a rank poison to my system. Since we have been using Postum Cereal Food Coffee, we not only find it a delightful beverage, with all the good qualities of coffee, but it has none of the injurious effects.

"Any person suffering from nervous troubles, caused by the poison of coffee, should be able to get rid of the sickness in short order if such a one will leave off the cause and take up Postum Food Coffee. There has been no coffee used in our home for a considerable time.

"People who are poisoned by coffee should leave it off, because when one sins against his body he dishonors God, 'for our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost.' It would seem that any one conscious of the bodily distress that coffee brings would have no trouble in leaving it off when Postum Food Coffee can be secured." Rev. John M. Linn, Pastor M. E. Church, South Corpus Christi, Texas.

They Never Saw a Bible

A Colporteur's Tour Among the Neglected Natives of the Mexican Mountains

A SAD picture of the spiritual darkness and ignorance which prevails in some sections of our neighboring republic, Mexico, is that drawn by the writer of the following letter, a colporteur of the American Bible Society:

ATOYAC, Guerrero, Mexico.

I find THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a great treat to me in this dark and benighted land. I have been selling God's Word to the Mexican people for over ten years, and find that the common people are anxious for the Bible, but the priest does all in his power to keep it from them, and to destroy it when he can get hold of it. Yet many are coming out of Romanism. The Bible is the best selling book I have ever known, in fact it sells itself if the priest is not around. There were forty-five men at one time distributing the Word of God here in Mexico. Now I think there are not half as many engaged in the work.

I noticed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last summer, a statement saying the average native in Mexico was not given to intemperance. This is not correct. During ten years of travel in twenty different States of the republic of Mexico, I found that the using of alcoholic liquor is a universal custom. It is given to children, and in this state we are told that the young ladies drink a good deal.

The Sabbath is greatly desecrated here. In many parts of Mexico Sunday is the market day and the greatest of all feast days, when they have bull-fights and cock-fights. Many of the native preachers are entirely too lazy, doing as little as possible and yet holding their place. And while it is very difficult for the native Christians to leave off their old customs, we fear that they do not always have the best examples in the Americans. It is the custom here, in most parts, for the men to carry arms, which some of the missionaries also do.

On the route I am taking now along the Pacific Coast, from Acapulco up to Union, no missionary work has been done outside of the Bible colporteur, so far as I can learn. The field is, as it were, ripe for the harvest. It means a great deal in this State for a native to be a true Protestant Christian. I have met one man who was arrested and taken out to the hills by some fanatical men who threatened his life, but he was rescued. Another man, five years ago, was obliged to leave his home and flee for his life, and remained for years and then returned and lived a Christian life, and is still letting his light shine for Christ.

I am stopping with a family who are so poor that they cannot even afford white muslin or unbleached sheeting to dress all of their children, consequently the little ones run naked. Yet this same father is a true Christian, and is in earnest for the salvation of those who have persecuted him and who drove him from his home.

When we reached Acapulco, we were told we would not be able to sell many Bibles there, owing to poverty and fanaticism; but in two weeks time my wife and I sold nearly one hundred books. The poor are always the most eager to listen to the Word. In some of the miserable little hovels up on the stony hills in Acapulco, we sometimes thought it hardly worth while to offer even a sixty cent Bible, as the people looked so dreadfully poor. One day, as my wife came to the open door of one of these hovels, and saluted the occupants, she asked them if they would like to buy a book. They answered "No, we have no money." She said, "Shall I read some?" "Let's hear it." So she sat down on a stone inside the house and read of the angel appearing to Mary. Very soon the two women and a girl came closer and listened attentively. After reading a little more, they took the book and talked about it and one woman bought a Testament and the other bought a Bible for her daughter who was greatly delighted and pressed the Book lovingly. Oh! the need for workers here is so great!

The Bread of Life

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 15. John 6:24-40

VERY enigmatical and mysterious must Christ's words about the Bread of Life have appeared to those who listened to his utterance. Like Nicodemus, they asked, "How can these things be?" Yet the circumstances might have given them a clue to his meaning. He had fed five thousand of them with miraculous food and they followed him that they might eat again of that strange bread. But he had not come to the world to satisfy the curiosity of men, nor to minister to their physical necessity. His miracles were worked only for the purpose of convincing them of his power to give them spiritual help. Yet they obstinately closed their eyes to the higher blessing, and steadfastly fixed them on the lower, which was only means to an end. That was his reason for telling them that it was food for the soul that they needed, rather than food for the body, and that while anyone could give them material bread, only he could give them the nourishment of which their souls were in need. Their blindness was pitiable. How his soul must have sorrowed to see their incapacity to accept the truth. Even now, how often do men plead for business success, for money to pay off a mortgage, when God stands ready to give them grace, which would enrich them for all eternity, and they do not ask for it.

In what way then is Christ the Bread of Life? How can men eat of it? How does the eating of it impart life? When a man is ill, the physician may not trouble himself about his appetite. It does not signify, he will say, whether he eats or not. In fact he will, in many cases, prohibit his eating food that would nourish a person who is well. But when the disease has been overcome and the patient is on the way to recovery, then the doctor is concerned about his diet and orders him nourishing food. He wants to complete the cure and so he tries to build up his strength by giving him food that will increase it. Christ deals so with the sinner. Pardon is not all that he needs. That is the beginning of his cure. He needs strength for the future. The forgiven soul would be helpless if left to itself. It would fall back into sin and would soon be as polluted as before. It rejoices in losing its burden, but is sadly conscious that another burden will accumulate. How can it avoid the evil around it, how resist the assaults of temptation, how suppress the prompting to sin of the traitor within? The divine life now imparted, needs to be strengthened and nourished. These new aspirations after holiness need to be deepened and invigorated. This is the work Christ will do. He will give the strength required. From him who gave the first feeble stirrings of that new life, must come the nourishment which builds it up.

He will come into the soul and himself be the power that resists evil. As the bread, taken into the system, becomes a part of the man, restoring the wasted tissue, so Christ dwelling in the soul gives it his strength. Faith and love are the doors by which he enters. The soul looking to him sees his purity, his holiness, his infinite grandeur. It longs to be like him. Some temptation comes and, for once, it is thrust away. The man feels that he may not be able always to resist, but now, in his pardoned state, he shrinks from pollution. There is shame in the very thought of yielding. He will not grieve the Lord whom he loves. People wonder that he does not yield as he used to, but he has the consolation of knowing that Christ is pleased with him. He has meat to eat that they know not of. His joy and peace render him happy and he will not willingly let them go. When that temptation comes again, or another temptation assails him, he is a stronger man to resist, for he has tasted the sweets of victory. He dwells on the character of Christ, he loves him better, he longs for more of his spirit, wishes that he might always overcome evil. And so from day to day he learns to fight. His old enemies find him vigilant and hostile. He is sustained by the Bread of Life.

R & G CORSETS

Over 10,000 dealers sell R. & G. Corsets to more than two millions of women every year.

Every R. & G. Corset is sold with a guarantee of satisfaction—satisfaction, or a new corset.

There are over seventy styles and shapes of R. & G. Corsets—a corset to fit every figure.

R. & G. Corsets are the corsets that do not stretch. They fit; they wear; they hold their shape. They do not have to be broken in.

In the making they are "broken in" over perfectly modeled iron forms. After the corset has been stitched it is dampened and stretched smoothly over the iron form of its style and size, and is clamped down with a pressure of six hundred pounds. Then steam is turned into the form and the corset dries. That gives the permanence of shape that is the distinctive characteristic of R. & G. Corsets.

No other corset has this feature. No other corset can have it, because we control the patents on the forms.

Our new Number 397 is our most popular dollar corset. It is a sensible corset—short under the arms, to give perfect ease and freedom of movement—not over-long at the clasp, but with comfortable and shapely length in the bust and over the hips.

The shape and style of Number 397 is shown in our photograph, which, however, really represents our newest number—402. It is made over the same forms as 397, but is made of different material, with wider lace at top and bottom, and with the bones placed on the inside, giving it a smoother finish on the surface. The price of 402 is $1.50.

If your dealer will not supply you with R. & G. Corsets, send his name, say what style and size you require, and inclose a money order for the price.

Our new booklet will be sent on request. It contains corset information which every woman should have.

America's Greatest Historian

Dr. Ridpath needs no introduction to the American public; his name is a household word, and his history stands unequaled among all works of a like kind, giving the real substance of many exhaustive histories within the compass of a single work. How completely this is done, with what consummate skill the historian has sifted the wheat from the chaff, how the vividness of his narrative grows in fascinating power to the close, is well attested by the fact of its phenomenal sale.

How You Have Longed for a preparation that would allay that annoying itching, remove that troublesome dandruff, stop that falling hair!
We offer such a remedy in Cranitonic Hair and Scalp Food.
It does this work and does it thoroughly, because it reaches causes, not symptoms. Itching scalp, dandruff and falling hair are not diseases per se, but are surface indications of parasitic diseases hidden down deep in the scalp.
Cranitonic Hair and Scalp Food penetrates to the entire depth of the hair follicle, destroys the microparasites which cause these symptoms, and feeds the weakened hair-follicles back to health.
The cause being removed the scalp irritation is allayed, the dandruff ceases to accumulate and the hair, taking on new life, is anchored firmly in its socket.
This is the solution of a simple little problem which to many appears complex.
Please bear the following facts in mind:
Diseases of the hair and scalp are almost always of a parasitic nature.
They are contagious.
If a wife is afflicted, the husband and children may become infected.
SPECIAL NOTE.—If you have any hair or scalp trouble send a small lock of your hair to the Cranitonic Institute, 526 West Broadway, New York, state in your letter if you have itching scalp, dandruff or falling hair, when our physicians will make a microscopical examination of the hair, send you a report upon its condition and prescribe curative treatment free of charge.

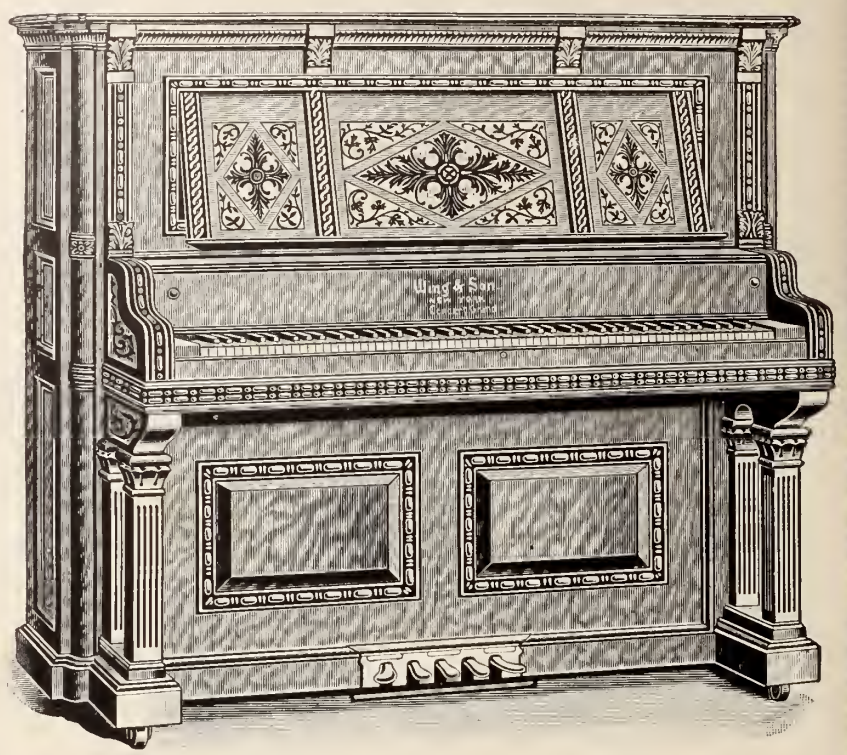
The Wing Piano

STYLE 29. CONCERT GRAND UPRIGHT

No other Piano made equals this in Style and Design of Case



We aim to make the best piano possible and to sell it at the lowest price possible. If you wish to buy a fine piano at a low price, write us.

SENT ON TRIAL

FREIGHT PREPAID. We will send this piano or your choice of 23 other Wing Pianos on trial to any part of the United States, all freights paid by us. We will allow ample time for a thorough examination and trial in the home, and if the piano is not entirely satisfactory in every respect we will take it back at our own expense. There is no risk or expense to the person ordering the piano. No money is sent to us in advance, we pay all freights.

THE INSTRUMENTAL ATTACHMENT

imitates perfectly the tones of the Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither and Banjo. Music written for these instruments, with and without piano accompaniment, can be played just as perfectly by a single player on the piano as though rendered by a parlor orchestra. The original instrumental attachment has been patented by us and it cannot be had in any other piano, although there are several imitations of it.

Description of Style 29.

7 1-3 Octaves.
Double lever, grand repeating action.
Grand scale, overstrung bass; three strings to each note in middle and treble registers.
The scale is the same as in grand pianos, with the largest size of sound board and strings of greatest length, thus giving the greatest volume and power of tone.
CASE—Double veneered inside and outside.
Choice of superior Circassian walnut, rich figured mahogany, genuine quartered oak and ebonized
KEYS—Of best ivory and ebony.
IMPROVEMENTS—Wing Pianos have the following improvements, viz.: "Built up" wrest plank construction. "Dovetail" top and bottom frame case construction. Full metal plate, with metal depression bar and metal supports for key bed. Improved noiseless direct motion pedal action. Improved practice attachment. Full length duet music desk. Carved panels. Instrumental attachment.

The usual way to buy a piano is from a retail agent or dealer. We do not sell our pianos in this way, but supply our pianos direct from our factory to retail purchasers. There are a great many advantages in buying direct from the factory. The most important is the saving in price. We do not employ a single salesman or agent, and we have no salesroom except our factory. We transact all of our business and ship all pianos direct from our factory and our expenses are small, and as we sell a much larger number of pianos than any dealer or retail firm, a very small profit pays us.

No matter how far away you live, our improved system of doing business makes it actually more convenient and more satisfactory to buy a piano from us than to buy one from a local dealer in your own town or city. Write us and receive full particulars.

We sell the Wing Piano on easy terms of payment and take old instruments in exchange.

NEW YORK, November 11, 1899.

Messrs. WING & SON,
GENTLEMEN:—
During the past month we have supplied through the medium of our premium department, two Wing No. 29 Upright Concert Grand Pianos to customers. We have received a report in each case which is very flattering to you. Our customers report that the pianos are not only first-class in every respect, but are highly satisfactory, and they are more than pleased with them. It is very gratifying indeed to us that such is the case, and it gives us much pleasure to forward this information to you. Yours very truly,

STARVING WOMEN AND GIRLS IN THEIR TATTERED CLOTHING AT RAHURI

Photographed specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

CHILDREN AT RAHURI NOW BEING FED BY "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" FUND

An Easter Offering of $25,000 for India

REPORTS of the suffering and misery of the people of India, now received from missionaries and travelers, have become so appalling, that in order to save time and get the relief to them at the earliest moment possible, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has cabled an additional remittance of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars to Bombay and that magnificent sum is now being used to feed the starving thousands. It has no doubt been a most welcome Easter gift to India. As it would be impossible at this distance and in the presence of conditions daily changing, to know which fields are in the most urgent need, Rev. E. S. Hume, of Byculla, had previously been asked by cable to call together the Committee of Missionaries representing all denominations who are to undertake the apportionment of this Easter Fund. They will report the condition of the fields in which they themselves labor and will receive reports from missionaries in other spheres, and have full power to apportion the funds to the districts according to their needs.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has not lost sight of the fact that American corn would be welcome and would be of great value, but as it would require nearly six weeks for a freight steamer to reach Bombay, even if it were already laden and ready to start, it was felt that to delay the remittance of funds already in hand until the complicated arrangements for sending a steamer were completed, would be to incur a serious responsibility. Our experience in the former famine showed the wisdom of prompt action and proved that "he gives twice who gives quickly." Thousands of people might die before the food could reach them, while by cabling the money the people would actually be fed within twenty-four hours of the money being dispatched. Our readers will be glad to know that the money they have contributed is, therefore, already doing its beneficent work, and is being expended under the supervision of the consecrated men and women who have given their lives to the salvation of the people of India.

How rapidly the famine area is extending and how dreadful is the suffering now visible through this vast territory, may be learned from the following report forwarded to us by Mr. Hume from Mr. G. S. Eddy, of the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations in India, who has recently traveled through the famine-stricken country:

An Eye-Witness on the Famine

"India is now entering upon the greatest famine of the century. The Viceroy and Imperial Council surveying the entire country, have said officially: 'We are now face to face with famine of water and food and cattle which is unprecedented in character and intensity. No government can undertake at such a time to prevent all suffering. The aggregate famine area will be about 300,000 square miles (or five times that of England), with a population of forty millions. There is a further population of twenty one millions in which more or less general scarcity and distress prevail. The crisis is one which demands the loyal co-operation of all who love India. To that co-operation in the months of trial that lie before us, on behalf of the government of India I unhesitatingly appeal. With ability and heroism the government is trying to meet this crisis but their revenues are reduced by the very famine they are trying to relieve. Already there is a population of nearly five millions on the relief works and they are increasing at the rate of several hundred thousand a week. Government feels forced to reduce the wages to two cents a day for a man, and a cent and a half for a woman, with grain rising every day, and a population nearly equal to that of the United States in the famine areas!'

"I saw a veteran missionary who went through the famine of '76. He says that this will be even greater than the 'great famine' then. Already the crowds of hungry people were beginning to gather about the door. I saw one group of gaunt spectres, who had walked seventy-five miles, stalk silently in from the dusty road. 'Sir,' they said, 'we have no work, no food, no water; how can we live?' The missionary could only point them on, thirty miles farther where there was a little work at two or three cents a day. 'But what will become of our wives and children?' The old man could not answer. In his own field are 10,000 Christians already suffering. He told me they were living on berries and cactus; and these could last but two weeks longer. As we drove through the fields the cattle were gone, the streams were dry, the wells often empty, the parched farms deserted: the villages were quiet, the people silent and gloomy. The glaring heaven seemed brass, and the earth burnt like brick, as the silent judgment of God hung over the land.

"In the next mission station half of the 18,000 Christians were destitute. Some had eaten nothing for days. The missionary could not buy them a handful of grain in that village for there was none to sell. The old man had fought through the war, but his face was wet with tears when he told me what he had seen in the villages. And these starving people are our fellow-men, each one your 'mother or sister or brother.' They have been laid, for there is nowhere else to lay them, laid at your gate 'full of sores and desiring to be fed with the crumbs that fall from your table.' Now, if ever, is the time to help India. Cannot collections be taken in every church, in the Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday-Schools? How much will this famine cost you?

CHILDREN RESCUED BY A MISSIONARY AT LAHORE

In Western India

"On arriving in Bombay, I met an old Princeton acquaintance. He had just come in from his station in Gujarat. I noted down his statements in pen and ink. Gujarat was a fertile country thickly populated. Now every blade of dry grass is gone. Every leaf was long ago torn from the trees for cattle, and now the trees themselves have all been cut down for wood. The whole country, once green as an English park, is now a blasted waste of barren stumps and burnt fields. Eight or nine months more of famine lie before us, even if the rain comes next monsoon. The cattle have died.

"Every day women come to me crying and ask me to take their children from their arms, or from their empty breasts, and save them alive. Some of the poor little skeletons died after I took them. They were too far gone to be saved by food. Repeatedly the parents have offered me their children for one rupee (about thirty cents), and they love them as we love ours. Children are now being offered as low as four cents each, or for a measure of grain. The Mohammedans are buying little girls at this price. One has to live in a heathen land to know what they will do with them. And today my friend goes back to fight the famine almost empty handed for lack of money, and there are hundreds like him. One missionary told me she had lost her own little girl in the last famine by going a little too far in trying to deny themselves and share their food with the natives. The missionaries are waiting and praying. The people are waiting. And our Master is waiting. It is a time to test the reality of our relationship to Him and to our fellow-men. 'Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Feed my sheep.' 'Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty and ye gave me drink.'

"As the College Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and the Student Volunteer Movement, my work has taken me through the famine districts of India. I have never thus asked before for help. I need nothing for myself or my own work. But in all my life I have never seen such need or such an opportunity for doing good."

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

Christian Stratagem

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Joshua 8: 7: . . . . } Then ye shall rise up from the ambush, and seize upon the city.

ONE Sabbath evening, with my family around me, we were talking over the scene of the text. In the wide-open eyes, and the quick interrogations, and the blanched cheeks, I realized what a thrilling drama it was. There is the old city, shorter by name than any other city in the ages, spelled with two letters—A, I—Ai. Joshua and his men want to take it. How to do it is the question. On a former occasion, in a straightforward, face-to-face fight, they had been defeated; but now they are going to take it by ambuscade. General Joshua has two divisions in his army—the one division the battle-worn commander will lead himself, the other division he sends off to encamp in an ambush on the west side of Ai.

Joshua takes the other division, the one with which he is to march, and puts it on the north side of the city of Ai, and then spends the night in reconnoitering in the valley. The men lying in ambush are straining their vision to get some signal from Joshua that they may know what time to drop upon the city. Joshua takes his burnished spear, glittering in the sun like a shaft of doom, and points it toward the city; and when the men up yonder in the ambush see it, with hawk-like swoop they drop upon Ai, and without stroke of sword or stab of spear take the city and put it to the torch. So much for the division that was in ambush. How about the division under Joshua's command? No sooner does Joshua stop in the flight than all his men stop with him, and as he wheels they wheel, for in a voice of thunder he cried "Halt!" One strong arm driving back a torrent of flying troops. And then, as he points his spear through the golden light toward that fated city, his troops know that they are to start for it. What a scene it was when the division in ambush which had taken the city marched down against the men of Ai on the one side, and the troops under Joshua doubled up their enemies from the other side, and the men of Ai were caught between these two hurricanes of Israelitish courage!

Lesson the first: There is such a thing as victorious retreat. Joshua's falling back was the first chapter in his successful besiegement. And there are times in your life when the best thing you can do is to run. You were once the victim of strong drink. The demijohn and the decanter were your fierce foes. They came down upon you with greater fury than the men of Ai upon the men of Joshua. Your only safety is to get away from them. Your dissipating companions will come around you for your overthrow. Run for your life! Fall back! Fall back from the drinking-saloon! Fall back from the wine party! Your flight is your advance. Your retreat is your victory. There is a saloon down on the next street that has almost been the ruin of your soul. Then why do you go along that street? Why do you not pass through some other street rather than by the place of your calamity? A spoonful of brandy taken for medicinal purposes by a man who twenty years before had been reformed from drunkenness, hurled into inebriety and the grave one of the best friends I ever had. Retreat is victory!

Here is a converted infidel. He is so strong now in his faith in the Gospel, he says he can read anything. What are you reading? Bolingbroke? Andrew Jackson Davis's tracts? Tyndall's Glasgow University address? Drop them and run. You will be an infidel before you die, unless you quit that. These men of Ai will be too much for you. Turn your back on the rank and file of unbelief. Fly before they cut you with their swords and transfix you with their javelins. There are people who have been well-nigh ruined because they risked a foolhardy expedition in the presence of mighty and overwhelming temptations, and the men of Ai made a morning meal of them.

So, also, there is victorious retreat in the religious world. Thousands of times the kingdom of Christ has seemed to fall back. When the blood of the Scotch Covenanters gave a deeper dye to the heather of the Highlands; when the Vaudois of France chose extermination rather than make an unChristian surrender; when on St. Bartholomew's Day, mounted assassins rode through the streets of Paris, crying, "Kill! Blood-letting is good in August! Kill! Death to the Huguenots! Kill!" when Lady Jane Grey's head rolled from the executioner's block; when Calvin was imprisoned in the Castle; when Bunyan lay rotting in Bedford Jail, saying, "If God will help me, and my physical life continues, I will stay here until the moss grows on my eyebrows rather than give up my faith" the days of retreat for the church were days of victory.

The pilgrim fathers fell back from the other side of the sea to Plymouth Rock, but now are marshalling a continent for the Christianization of the world. The Church of Christ falling back from Piedmont, falling back from Rue St. Jacques, falling back from St. Denis, falling back from Wurtenburg castles, falling back from the Brussels market place, yet all the time triumphing. Notwithstanding all the shocking reverses which the Church of Christ suffers, what do we see to-day? Twelve thousand missionaries of the cross on heathen grounds; eighty thousand ministers of Jesus Christ in this land; at least four hundred millions of Christians on the earth. Falling back, yet advancing until the old Wesleyan hymn will prove true:

> The Lion of Judah shall break the chain,
> And give us the victory again and again!

But there is a more marked illustration of victorious retreat in the life of our Joshua, the Jesus of the ages. First falling back from an appalling height to an appalling depth, falling from celestial hills to terrestrial valleys, from throne to manger; yet that did not seem to suffice him as a retreat. Falling back still further from Bethlehem to Nazareth, from Nazareth to Jerusalem, back from Jerusalem to Golgotha, back from Golgotha to the mausoleum in the rock. Methinks that the city of Ai was not so emptied of its inhabitants when they went to pursue Joshua, as perdition was emptied of devils when they started for the pursuit of Christ, and he fell back and back, down lower, down lower, chasm below chasm, pit below pit, until he seemed to strike the bottom of objurgation and scorn and torture. Oh, the long, loud, jubilant shout of hell at the defeat of the Lord God Almighty!

But let not the powers of darkness rejoice quite so soon. Do you hear that disturbance in the tomb of Joseph? I hear the sheet rending. What means that stone hurled down the side of the hill? Who is this coming out? Push him back! the dead must not stalk in this open sunlight. Oh, it is our Joshua. Let him come out. He comes forth and starts for the city. He takes the spear of the Roman guard and points that way. Church militant marches up on one side, and the church triumphant marches down on the other side. And the powers of darkness being caught between these ranks of celestial and terrestrial valor, nothing is left of them save just enough to illustrate the direful overthrow of hell and our Joshua's eternal victory. On his head be all the crowns. In his hands be all the sceptres. At his feet be all human hearts; and here, Lord, is one of them.

Lesson the second: The triumph of the wicked is short. Did you ever see an army in a panic? There is nothing so uncontrollable. If you had stood at Long Bridge, Washington, during the opening of our sad Civil War, you would know what it is to see an army run. And when those men of Ai looked out and saw those men of Joshua in a stampede, they expected easy work. They would scatter them as the equinox the leaves. Oh, the gleeful and jubilant descent of the men of Ai upon the men of Joshua! But their exhilaration was brief, for the tide of battle turned, and these quondam conquerors left their miserable carcasses in the wilderness of Bethaven. So it always is. The triumph of the wicked is short. You make $20,000 at the gaming-table. Do you expect to keep it? You will die in the poorhouse. You made a fortune by iniquitous traffic. Do you expect to keep it? Your money will scatter, or it will stay long enough to curse your children after you are dead. Call over the roll of bad men who prospered and see how short was their prosperity. For a while, like the men of Ai, they went from conquest to conquest, but after a while disaster rolled upon them and they were divided into three parts: misfortune took their property, the grave took their body, and the lost world took their soul.

How long will it take your boys to get through your ill-gotten gains? The wicked do not live out half their days. Where are William Tweed and his associates? Where are Ketcham and Swartwout, absconding swindlers? Where is James Fisk, the libertine, and all the other misdemeanants? The wicked do not live out half their days. Disembogue, O world of darkness! Come up, Hildebrand and Henry II. and Robespierre, and with blistering and blaspheming and ashen lips hiss out: "The triumph of the wicked is short."

Lesson the third: How much may be accomplished by lying in ambush for opportunities. Are you hypercritical of Joshua's manœuvre? Do you say that it was cheating for him to take that city by ambuscade? Was it wrong for Washington to kindle camp-fires on New Jersey Heights, giving the impression to the opposing force that a great army was encamped there when there was none at all? I answer, if the war was right then Joshua was right in his stratagem. He violated no flag of truce. He broke no treaty, but by a lawful ambuscade captured the city of Ai. Oh that we all knew how to lie in ambush for opportunities to serve God. The best of our opportunities do not lie on the surface, but are secreted; by tact, by stratagem, by Christian ambuscade, you may take almost any castle of sin for Christ. Come up toward men with a regular besiegement of argument and you will be defeated: but just wait until the door of their hearts is set ajar, or they are off their guard, or their severe caution is away from home, and then drop in on them from a Christian ambuscade. There has been many a man up to his chin in scientific portfolios which proved there was no Christ and no divine revelation, his pen a scimeter flung into the heart of theological opponents, who, nevertheless, has been discomfited and captured for God by some little three-year old child who has got up and put her snowy arms around his sinewy neck, and asked some simple question about God.

Lesson the fourth: The importance of taking good aim. There is Joshua, but how are those people in ambush up yonder to know when they are to drop on the city, and how are these men around Joshua to know when they are to stop their flight and advance? There must be some signal—a signal to stop the one division and to start the other. Joshua with a spear on which were ordinarily hung the colors of battle, points toward the city. He stands in such a conspicuous position, and there is so much of the morning light dripping from that spear-tip, that all around the horizon they see it. It was as much as to say: "There is the city. Take it!"

God knows and we know that a great deal of Christian attack amounts to nothing simply because we do not take good aim. Nobody knows and we do not know ourselves which point we want to take, when we ought to make up our minds what God will have us to do, and point our spear in that direction and then hurl our body, mind, soul, time, eternity at that one target. In our pulpits and pews and Sunday Schools and prayer-meetings we want to get a reputation for saying pretty things, and so we point our spear toward the flowers; or we want a reputation for saying sublime things, and we point our spear toward the stars; or we want to get a reputation for historical knowledge, and we point our spear toward the past; or we want to get a reputation for great liberality, so we swing our spear all around; while there is the old world, proud, rebellious, and armed against all righteousness; and instead of running any further away from its pursuit, we ought to turn around, plant our foot in the strength of the eternal God, lift the old cross and point it in the direction of the world's conquest till the redeemed of earth, marching up from one side and the glorified of heaven marching down from the other side, the last battlement of sin is compelled to swing out the streamers of Emmanuel. O, Church of God, take aim and conquer.

It is comparatively easy to keep on a parade amid a shower of bouquets and hand-clapping, and the whole street full of enthusiastic huzzas; but it is not so easy to stand up in the day of battle, the face blackened with smoke, the uniform covered with earth ploughed up by whizzing bullets and bursting shells, half the regiment cut to pieces, and the commander crying "Forward, march!" Then it requires old-fashioned valor. My friends, the great trouble of the kingdom of God in this day is the cowards. They do splendidly on a parade day, and at the communion, when they have on their best clothes of Christian profession; but in the great battle of life, at the first sharp-shooting of scepticism, they dodge, they fall back, they break ranks. We confront the enemy, we open the battle against fraud, and lo! we find on our side a great many people that do not try to pay their debts. And we open the battle against intemperance, and we find on our side a great many people who drink too much. And we open the battle against profanity, and we find on our side a great many men who make hard speeches. And we open the battle against infidelity, and lo! we find on our own side a great many men who are not quite sure about the Book of Jonah. And while we ought to be massing our troops, and bringing forth more than the united courage of Austerlitz and Waterloo and Gettysburg, we have to be spending our time in hunting up ambuscades. There are a great many in the Lord's army who would like to go out on a campaign with satin slippers and holding umbrellas over their heads to keep off the heavy dew, and having rations of canvas-back ducks and lemon custards. If they cannot have them they want to go home. They think it is unhealthy among so many bullets!

I believe that the next year will be the most stupendous year that heaven ever saw. The nations are quaking now with the coming of God. It will be a year of successes for the men of Joshua, but of doom to the men of Ai. You put your ear to the rail-track and you can hear the train coming miles away. So I put my ear to the ground and I hear the thundering on of the lightning train of God's mercies and judgments. The mercy of God is first to be tried upon this nation. It will be preached in the pulpits, in theatres, on the streets, everywhere. People will be invited to accept the mercy of the Gospel, and the story and the song and the prayer will be "mercy." But suppose they do not accept the offer of mercy—what then? Then God will come with his judgments, and the grasshoppers will eat the crops, and the freshets will devastate the valleys, and the defalcations will swallow the money markets, and the fires will burn the cities, and the earth will quake from pole to pole. Year of mercies and of judgments. Year of invitation and of warning. Year of jubilee and of woe. Which side are you going to be on? With the men of Ai or the men of Joshua? Pass over this Sabbath into the ranks of Israel. I would clap my hands at the joy of your coming. You will have a poor chance for this world and the world to come without Jesus. You cannot stand what is to come upon you and upon the world unless you have the pardon and the comfort and the help of Christ. Come over. On this side is your happiness and safety, on the other side is disquietude and despair. Eternal defeat to the men of Ai! Eternal victory to the men of Joshua!

Qualities of the Christian Soldier

Luke 7: 1-10

::: THE CENTURION'S FAITH :::

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for April 22.
Golden Text, Psalm 103: 13.

Approach to the Lesson.

The question, "What was the bravest act you saw in the war for the Union?" was answered by Colonel Higgenson, the historian, by telling of a young officer who was present in a banquet tent, when over the wine one after another in succession was contributing an obscene song or story, to the entertainment. When this officer's turn came he rose with quiet courage and said: "I have no story to tell, but I propose a toast to be drunk in water, 'Here's to our mothers.'" There were no more coarse stories, and presently one by one the revelers stole away. Every soldier knows that quiet word took greater courage than to lead a battalion to the charge. In spite such temptations of army life, Havelock and Gordon and Howard were Christian soldiers. When a perilous hour came it would be said, "Bring out the saints of Havelock." Such also were Cromwell's "Ironsides." If a soldier can be a Christian, anybody can.

NO environment is more crowded with temptations than that of a soldier, especially in the comparative idleness of peace. Napoleon called war the "trade of barbarians," and to be a professional man killer is surely just that. Even in our Civil war, when the armies were composed chiefly of those who had enlisted from patriotic convictions, Gen. Sherman said, "War is hell." The word fits not only the physical, but also the moral slaughter—the vices that kill more than bullets and kill both body and soul. Think of the moral perils that beset a rich scion of British nobility when he goes for garrison duty to India! Wolseley, Roberts and Kitchener all stand for cold water armies, but there are other perils left.

Such and more were the temptations overcome by the Roman captain of the Capernaum garrison, who comes into the life of Christ right after the Sermon on the Mount, as if to illustrate the qualities of Christian citizenship there described. He was a naturalized citizen from outside the Jewish nation, but one whose qualities put to shame the average Jew of that age as they do those of the average Christian of to-day.

The central figure of the lesson picture is surely not the healed body of the servant, as the Golden Text would suggest (Psa. 103: 13), but the noble Christian soldier, whose philanthropy was crowned by "so great faith" in Christ.

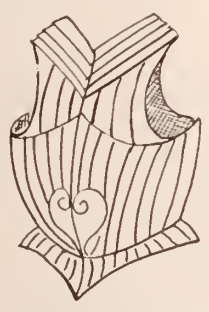
Capital and Labor in Love

1. He rose above class prejudices. Sick unto death was "a servant dear unto him," literally, "a precious slave." It was Capital and Labor in love with each other. This was in the age when a Roman master cut up a slave to feed the fish in his pond. Slaves were counted as mere cattle. This centurion, before he met Christ, showed more of the brotherhood of man than is found to-day in many shops and homes of church people, although we should remember that the strifes of masters and servants are more likely to be heard about than the many friendships that exist. A whole school of employers is developing that seek to promote the social interests of their employees, not alone as altruism, but as a part of good business management. "Good will" has a money value. But on the whole, this centurion's example needs to be pressed on the consciences of even Christian women, many of whom have never tried love as a solution of "the servant girl problem." They have talked loftily at clubs of "the brotherhood of man," but have never realized that it means that the girl in the kitchen is the sister of the mistress. Class prejudice touches our relations not to employees only but to all whom we look down upon by using those un-Christian terms, "the lower classes," "the common people." I knew a church that called itself "Evangelical," a term borrowed from the story about "the Gospel to the poor," whose trustees actually favored the building of another small church near at hand that the poor of the neighborhood might not come to their temple. After nineteen centuries of Christian training even the best Christian nations may look up, with shame at their own shortcomings, to the centurion who had conquered class prejudice when it was far stronger than now, helped only by the starlight of pagan ethics and the twilight of Jewish teachings. The qualities we admire in him were seldom if ever found in a pure pagan. He was no doubt a Jewish proselyte, who had already the faith of Abraham and Moses and Isaiah.



"And the Breast plate of Righteousness Shalt be part of thy Knightly dress."

2. He rose above race prejudice also. The centurion, anxiously watching at what promised to be the death bed of his beloved servant, sent Jewish elders to bring Jesus, the great Healer, to whom these Jews said, "He loveth our nation." Of how many Christians are the Jews unable to say that to-day in Austria, in Germany, in France, aye, even in the two countries where they have suffered least from race hatred, England and the United States! The New Testament Jews had their faults no less than those of to-day, especially covetousness and hypocrisy. And yet this noble Roman was drawn by the struggles of their race toward a purer faith, to admiration and love. And how Jesus loved them, though he felt their faults more than any other could! Amid heart-breaking tears he cried: "O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! Thou that killest the prophets, how often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her brood under her wing, but ye would not." Contrast that with the professing Christian of to-day, who speaks of Jews as "sheenies," of Italians as "dagoes," of Spanish Americans as "greasers," of negroes as "niggers." That is the very thing God sent a vision to forbid in preparation for Peter's visit to that other godly centurion, Cornelius, in whom, as in this one, philanthropy and faith, "prayers and alms" were united in an exemplary manner (Acts 10). When shall we learn that "the love of God" that is to be "shed abroad" in Christian hearts is not love for God, the altogether lovely, but love like God's, love for the unlovely, loving those who seem to us unlovely because they are unlike us or because they dislike us; love for the lowliest because they are sons and daughters of God, brothers and sisters of Christ, and so our brothers and sisters, to be loved and helped, not hated or harmed.

"Valiant thy heart must ever be, Thy Sword for Truth fight manfully."

3. He was generous in money as well as in sympathy. "He hath built us a synagogue," said the Jews, as they proclaimed his worthiness of the favor they asked of Christ. His fellow officers doubtless spent their wealth in the "synagogues of Satan." By extortion and oppression of the Jews they won their hate rather than their love. In affliction they had no investments of neighborly love on which to draw. Even in this world that man gets the most joy out of money who spends it in philanthropy rather than vice.

4. He, whom others obeyed and praised, wore the Kohinoor of humility. "I am not worthy," was the message he sent to Christ, of whom the Jewish elders had just said "he is worthy." Jesus had yielded to the prayer for help which the centurion's friends had made to Jesus in behalf of the sick servant and sorrowing master. But the centurion, seeing the great Healer at hand, though dwelling in a home of wealth and authority, sent a message of beautiful humility: "Lord, trouble not thyself, for I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof; neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee." Thus has true greatness ever spoken. Mediocre men note how many are below them and are proud. Great men look at the heights they have not reached and are humbled. David, the king, exclaimed, "My soul is even as a weaned child." Solomon, newly crowned in youth, when pride is a sin that easily besets us, exclaimed to God in his cry for wisdom, "I am but a little child." Newton, after the greatest of modern discoveries, that of gravitation, said: "I have only picked up a few pebbles on the shore; the ocean of truth is yet before me."

5. He crowned his philanthropy with faith. "Speak the word and my servant shall be healed," was the message he sent to Christ. Many others believed Christ could heal by sight and touch, but it was a wonderful faith indeed, in those days, that this Gentile centurion should believe that Jesus could heal a sick man whom he could not touch or even see, by a "word." Of course such faith was instantly effective in bringing the servant back to health.

The miracle has a close analogy to our own prayers, in which a Christ unseen is asked to save us or our friends in body and soul. Christ exclaimed, and this is the real golden text: "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." Sometimes outside the church we find philanthropy, faith crowned, in nobler manifestations than in its too formal services. For instance, behold the faith and philanthropy of the social settlements, where cultured wealth resides in quiet neighborliness at its own cost among those that class prejudice and race prejudice both reject. "Saint Jane," as the centurion of Hull House, Chicago, is called, illustrates a modern triumph over class and race prejudice, a generous philanthropy of self-giving and property consecration combined, all beautified by humility and crowned with Christian faith. Herself a church member, the work is an overflow into larger channels than the regular "Israel" has sought.

"Young soldier! On thy head he'll place the helmet of his saving grace.

In the centurion we find faith and works both at their best, but the world is still full of Ephraims, cakes not turned, who are philanthropists without faith, or believers without philanthropy. In the case of the centurion, faith in Christ was the completion of character, for he had begun under the faint "light that lighteth every man," before Christ rose upon the world. But we shall find it best to begin with faith in Christ, which brings his love for man into our hearts and makes philanthropy literally "second nature," the "new nature." His meekness will make us humble, especially our imperfection in contrast with such an example. His consuming love for all classes and races if taken into our hearts will burn out the class and race prejudices of our old nature.

Both class prejudice and race prejudice are involved in the story of an intelligent slave boy of the south before the Civil war, whose master, a church member, undertook to teach him the Lord's Prayer.

"Now, Sambo, say after me what I say: 'Our Father.'"

"Is he your Father?" "Yes."

"And is he my Father?" "Yes."

"Then we are brothers." Aye, let all who say to God, "Our Father," say "brother" to the servant, the immigrant, the Chinaman, the Hungarian, the Pole, the Filipino.

"Peace Hath Her Victories"

This lesson affords a fitting opportunity, at a time when the two foremost nations are in danger of militarism, to remind heroic and energetic youth that, in the words of Whittier,

> "Peace hath higher tests of manhood
> Than ever battle saw."

All the noble qualities of the centurion shown in the lesson are independent of his military life, indeed, in spite of it. Such a man in our day would hardly be a soldier, unless constrained by some great national peril. Such men in our day are becoming convinced that as individual warfare, once so common, has given place to courts, so the quarrels of nations that are now going about with bowie knives in their boots, as it were, provoking conflict by carrying weapons, may all be safely referred to the international Supreme court already established through the Hague Peace Conference. One reason why we should abandon war is to release the tremendous energies of young manhood for the nobler battles against the great evils that have always been the deadliest foes of nations. Let the boys be enlisted as "Twentieth Century Knights," with this battle cry:

> "Twentieth century knights are we,
> Charge to us is given;
> Called to battle for the right,
> For the King of Heaven."*

Seven, eight, nine hundred years ago it was a great thing to be a knight. Not every man could be a knight, but only those of noble birth. The training of a knight began when a boy was only eight years old. He had to learn to be very brave, for he was to be a defender and helper of women and children, and of all who were not strong enough to fight for themselves. He had to be brave and pure, and truthful, and good in every way. From eight to twenty-one years of age a boy was thus trained, and then, by an impressive ceremony, he was made a knight. He was clothed with armor and seated upon his horse. The helmet, the breastplate (or cuirass), the sword and shield were parts of his armor, and there were still other parts, numbering about twenty-six pieces in all. We have pictured in our lesson to-day the four principal parts, and we would apply them to the outfit of the twentieth century knight, who, in the name of God, will fight for

> "The wrongs that need resistance,
> For the cause that needs assistance."

The Oath

"True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal,
King of our lives, by thy grace we will be Under the standard exalted and loyal,
Strong in the faith we will battle for thee"

The Christian Warfare

Soon rested those who fought, but thou
Who minglest in the harder strife
For truths which men receive not now,
Thy warfare only ends with life.

Yet nerve thy spirit to the proof
And blanch not at thy chosen lot;
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown—yet faint thou not.

"The Lord God is a Sun and Shield."

Truth crushed to earth may rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers,
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshipers.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

CHAPTER XIX.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY H. M. PETTIT

Chinese Hospitality

WE wuz all invited one day to dine with a rich Chinaman Robert Strong had got acquainted with in San Francisco. Arvilly didn't want to go, and offered to keep Tommy with her, and the rest of us went. The house wuz surrounded with a high wall, and we entered through a small door in this wall, and went into a large hall openin' on a courtyard. The host met us and we set down on a raised seat covered with red cloth under some big handsome lanterns that wuz hung over our heads. Servants with their hair braided down their backs and with gay dresses on brought in tea—as good as any I ever drank—and pipes. Josiah whispered to me:

"How be I agoin' to smoke tobacco, Samantha? It will make me sick as death. You know I never smoked anything but a little catnip and mullen for tizik. I wonder if he's got any catnip by him; I'm goin' to ask."

But I kep' him from it, and told him that we could just put the stems in our mouths, and pretend to smoke enough to be polite.

"Hypocrasy," sez Josiah, "don't become a deacon in high standin'. If I pretend to smoke I shall smoke, and take a good pull." And he leaned back and shut his eyes and took his pipe in his hand, and I guess he drawed on it more than he meant to for he looked bad, sickish and white round his mouth as anything. But we all walked out into the garden pretty soon and he looked resuscitated.

It was beautiful there; rare flowers and exotics of all kinds, trees that I never see before and lots that I had seen, sparklin' fountains with gold fish, grottos all lit up by colored lanterns, and little marble tablets with wise sayings. Josiah said he believed they wuz duck's tracks, and wondered how ducks ever got up there to make 'em, but the interpreter read some on 'em to us and they sounded first rate. Way up on a artificial rock, higher than the Jonesville steeple, wuz a beautiful pavillion with gorgeous lanterns in it and beautiful bronzes and china.

Strange Celestial Gardening

In the garden wuz growin' trees, trimmed all sorts of shapes, some on 'em wuz shaped like bird cages and birds wuz singin' inside of 'em. There wuz one like a jinrikisha with a horse attached, all growin', and one like a boat, and two or three wuz pagodas with gilt bells hangin' to 'em, another wuz shaped like a dragon, and some like fish and great birds. It wuz a sight to see 'em, all on 'em a growin', and some on 'em hundreds of years old. Josiah says to me:

"If I ever live to git home I will surprise Jonesville. I will have our maple and apple trees trimmed in this way if I live. How uneek it will be to see the old snow apple tree turned into a lumber wagon, and the pound sweet into a corn house, and the maples in front of the house you might have a couple on 'em turned into a Goddess of Liberty and a statter of Justice, you are such a hand for them two females," sez he. "Of course we should have to use cloth for Justice's eye bandages, and her steelyards I believe Ury and I could trim out, though they might not weigh jest right to the notch."

And I sez, "Justice has been used to that, to not weighin' things right, it wouldn't surprise her." But I told him it would be sights of work and mebby he'll give it up.

Soon afterwards we wuz all invited to dinner in this same house. And so ignorant are the Chinese of Jonesville ways, that at a dinner the place of honor is at the left instead of the right of the host. Everything that can be in China is topsy tervy and different from us. I wuz chose for that honorable place at the left of our host. We all stood for quite awhile, for it is China table etiquette to try to make the guest next to us set down first, but finally we all sot down similtaneous and at the same time. Josiah thinks that it is because China is right down under us the reason that she gits so turned over and strange actin', but 'tennyrate, endin' our dinner as we do with sweets, it didn't surprise me that we begun our dinner by havin' sweet meats passed, each one helpin' ourselves with chop sticks, queer things to handle as I ever see, some like the little sticks I have seen niggers play tunes with. Josiah seemed to enjoy hisen the best that ever wuz, and to my horrow he took both on 'em in his right hand and begun to play Yankee Doodle on 'em.

IN THE "STREET OF BENEVOLENCE"

A Hint to Josiah

I stepped on his foot hard under the table, and he broke off with a low groan, but I spoze they would lay it to a foreigner's strange ways. After the sweetmeats wuz partook of we had dried melon seeds, the host handin' 'em round by the handful. Josiah slipped his into his pocket. I wuz mortified enough, but he said:

"Of course he wants us to plant 'em; nobody but a fool would expect us to eat melon seeds or horse feed."

I wuz glad Josiah didn't speak in China, I guess they didn't understand him. A rice-wine wuz passed with this, which of course I did not partake of. Much as I wanted to be polite I could not let this chance pass of holdin' up my temperance banner. I had seen enough trouble caused by folks in high station not holdin' up temperance principles at banquets, and I wuzn't to be ketched in them. It didn't taste any better to me than a chip. It seemed to be cut in little square yeller pieces, kind of clear lookin', some like preserved citron only it wuz lighter colored, and Josiah whispered to me:

"We can have bird's-nest soup any day to hum, Samantha. Jest think of the swaller's nests in the barn and robin's nest and crow's nest, why one crow's nest would last us a week."

Bird's-Nest Soup

"It would last a lifetime, Josiah, if I had to cook it; sticks and straw."

"Well, it would be real uneek to cook one, or a hornet's nest, and would be a rarity for the Jonesvillians, and in the winter, if we run out of bird's-nest, you could cook a hen's nest."

But I sez, "Keep still, Josiah, and let's see what we'll have next."

Well, we had ham, fish, pigeon's eggs and some things I didn't know the name of. The host took up a little mess of sunthin' on his chop stick and handed it to me. I dassent refuse it, for he meant it as a honor, but I most know it wuz rat meat, but couldn't tell for certain. I put my shoulder blades to the wheel and swallered it, but it went down hard.

Bowls of rice wuz passed round last. Between the courses we had the best tea I ever tasted of; only a few of the first leaves that open on the tea plant are used for this kind of tea, and a big field would be gone over for a pound of it. After it is cured it is flavored with the tea blossom. I had spozed I had made good tea to home on my own hot water tank, and drinked it, but I gin up that I had never tasted tea before.

On our way home we went through the Street of Benevolence and I wuz ashamed to run Miss Meechim in my mind.

They name their streets real funny; one street is called Everlasting Love or it means that in our language, and there is Refreshing Breezes, Reposing Dragons, Honest Gain, Thousand Grandsons, Heavenly Happiness, and etc., etc.

An Idea for Jonesville

Josiah said that he should see Uncle Sime Bentley and Deacon Henzy about naming over the Jonesville streets the minute he got home. Sez he, "How uneek it will be to trot along through Josiah's Never Ending Success, or Prosperous Interesting Josiah, or the Glorious Path master, or the Divine Travelin' Deacon, or sunthin else uneek and well meanin'."

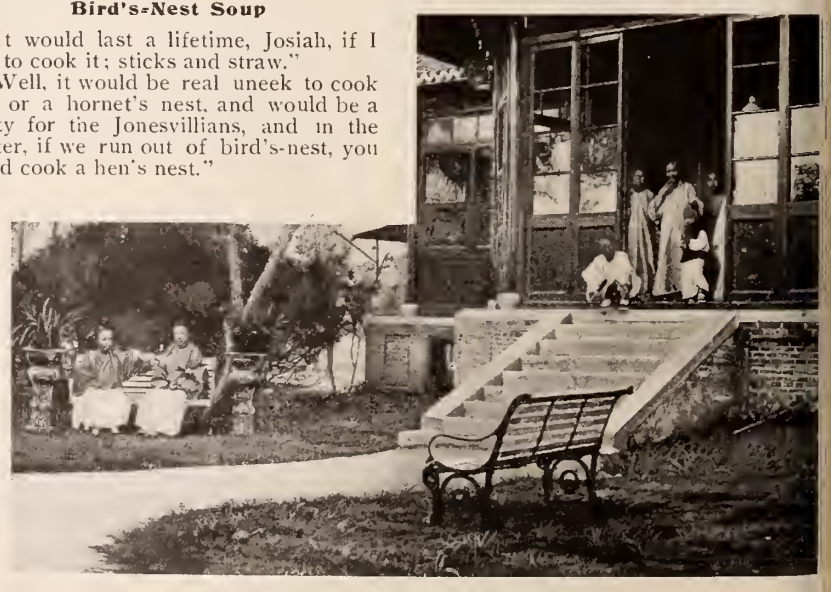
Sez I, "You seem to want to name 'em all after yourself, Josiah. Uncle Sime and Deacon Henzy would probable want one or two named after them."

"Well," sez he, "we could name one Little Uncle, and one Spindlin' Deacon, if they insisted on't."

Josiah wuz in real good sperits, I laid it partly to the tea, it wuz real stimulating; Josiah said that it beat all that the Chinese wuz so blinded and out of the way as to do things so different from what they did in Jonesville. "But," sez he, "they're politer on the outside than the Jonesvillians even down to the coolers."

Sez I, "Do you mean the coolies?"

"Yes, the coolers, the hired help, you know," sez he. "Catch Ury fixin' his eye on his left side coat collar when he speaks



IN A CHINESE GARDEN

o me not dastin' to lift it, and bowin' and crapin' when I told him to go and hitch p, or bring in a pail of water, and catch im windin' his hair in a wod when he uz out by himself and then lettin' it down is back when he came to wait on me."

Sez I, "Ury's hair is too short to braid."

"Well, you can spozen the case, can't ou? But as I wuz sayin', for all these oolers are so polite, I would trust Ury s fur agin as I would any on 'em. And hen they write jest the other way from e do in Jonesville, begin their letters on he hind side and write towards 'em; and o with planin' a board, draw the plane owards 'em. I would like to see Ury try hat on any of my lumber. And because ve Jonesvillians wear black to funerals, hey have to dress in white. How would looked at my mother-in-law's funeral vith a white night gown on and my hair raided down my back with a white rib- in on it? It would have took away all he happiness of the occasion to me.

Celestial Peculiarities

"And then their language, Samantha, t is fixed in such a fool way that when hey want a word different, they yell up he same word louder and that makes it lifferent, as if I wuz to say to Ury kinder ow and confidential, 'I shall be the next resident Ury;' and then I should yell up he same words a little louder and that would mean, 'Feed the brindle steer;' here hain't no sense in it. But I spoze one thing that ails them is their havin' to stand bottom side up, their feet towards Jonesville. Their blood runs the wrong way. Mebby I shouldn't do any better than they do if I stood so the hull of the time; mebby I should let my finger nails grow out like bird's claws and shake my own hands when I meet company instead of theirn. Though," says Josiah, dreamily, "I don't know but I shall try that in Jonesville; I may on my return from my travels walk up to Elder Minkley and the bretheren in the meetin'-house, and pass the compliments with 'em and clasp my own hands and shake 'em quite a spell, not touchin' their hands. I may, but can't tell for certain; it would be real uneek to do it."

"Well," sez I, "Josiah, every country has its own strange ways; we have ourn."

Sez he, "How you would scold me if I wuz to wear my hat when we had company, and here it is manners to do it, and take off your specs. Why should I take off my specs to meet Elder Minkley?"

"Well," sez I, "there hain't anything out of the way in it, if they want to."

Sez Josiah, "You seem to take to China ways so, you and Arvilly, that I spoze mebby you'll begin to bandage your feet when you git home, and toddle round on your big toes."

And I sez, "I d'no but I'd jest as soon do that as to girt myself down with cossets, or walk round with a traulin' dress wipin' up all the filth of the streets to carry home to make my family sick."

But it is a awful sight. I had the chance right there in Canton to see a foot all bound up to make it the fashionable size.

Chinese Footbinding

The four small toes wuz twisted right under the ankle, and the broken crushed bones of the foot pressed right up where the instep should be. The pain must have been sunthin terrible, and very often a toe drops off, but I spoze they are glad of that, for it would make the little lump of dead flesh they call their feet, smaller. They wear bright satin shoes, all embroidered and painted, and their little pantelettes cover all but the very end of the toe. They all, men and wimmen wear a loose pair of trowsers which they call the foo, and a kind of jacket which they call a sham.

"A fool and a sham," Josiah called 'em all the time. The wimmen have their hair all stuck up with some kind of gum, making it as good as a bunnet, but I would fur ruther have the bunnet. Sometimes they wear a handkerchief over it. Wimmen hain't shut up here as they are in Turkey, but no attention is paid to their education and they are looked down on. Men seem to be willin' to have wimmen enjoy what religion they can, such as they have. But her husband won't let her set to the table with him, and he can whip her to death and not be touched for it, but if she strikes back a single blow he can get a divorce from her.

I thought wimmen wuz worse off here than they wuz in America, but Arvilly argyed that our govermunt sold stuff and took pay for it that made men beat their wives, and sold the right to make wicked wimmen and keep 'em so, and took wimmen's tax money to keep up such laws. And she went over such a lot of unjust laws that I didn't know but she wuz right, and that we wuz jest about as bad off in some things. They marry dretful young in China. Little babys are engaged to be married right whilst they're teethin', but they can't marry I guess till they are ten or twelve years old.

ON THE WAY TO JAPAN

Off to Japan

From Canton we went back to Hongkong, intendin' to go from there to Calcutta. But Dorothy felt that she must see Japan while she wuz so near, and we concluded to go, though it wuz goin' right out of our way in the opposite direction from Jonesville. But when Dorothy expressed a wish Robert Strong seemed to think it wuz jest as bindin' on him as the law of the Medes and Persians, whatever they may be, and Miss Meechim felt so too, so though as I say it wuz some as though I should go to she that wuz Submit Tewksberrys round by the widder Slimpseys and Brother Henzy's. We found some mail here to the tarven, letters from the dear children and our help. Thomas J. and Maggie wuz gittin' better, and the rest well, and all follerin' our journey with fond hearts and good wishes. Philury and Ury writ that everything wuz goin' well on the farm and the Jonesvillians enjoyin' good health. Arvilly got a paper from Jonesville and come in to read it to us. It had been a long time on the road. It said that a new bill was a-goin' to be introduced to allow wimmen to vote, but she didn't seem to be encouraged about it much. Sez she: "The law won't do anything about that as long as it is so busy grantin' licenses to kill folks via Saloon and Canteen and other houses of death and ruin and canals and trusts and monopolies to protect to steal the people's money."

But I sez, "I do hope the bill will pass for the sake of Justice, if nothin' else. Justice," sez I, "must have been so shamed to see such things goin' on that she wuz glad she wore bandages over her eyes; and her hands have shook so she haint weighed even for some time: to see her sect taxed without representation, punished and hung by laws she has no voice in makin'."

Josiah sez, "I admit that that is ruther hard, Samantha, but that hain't the nick on't. The pint is that wimmen hain't got the self-control that men has. The govermunt is afraid of her emotional nater; she gits wrought up too quick. She is good as gold, almost a angel, in fact, as we male voters have always said. But she is too hasty; she haint got the perfect calmness, the firm onmovable sense of right and wrong, the patience and long sufferin' that we men have; she flies off too sudden one way or t'other; govermunt well fears she would be a dangerous element in the body politick."

Arvilly had been turnin' the paper over and she read out: "The governor of Kentucky shot down by a assassin. All the men in the place riz up and quarrelin' some on one side and some on the other. Two bodies of troops called out by the two men. Two governors in Kentucky now, for they won't either of 'em give up, one takin' his oath of office on his deathbed where he had been struck down by the hand of a murderer, the other sworn in in a distant part of the State where his partisans protect him with rifles and bowie knives. The editor comments on the number of public men who have been assassinated, presidents and statesmen, and the brawls and fights in Congress."

Sez Josiah, "I guess I will take Tommy and go out for a little walk, Samantha. I feel kinder mauger."

"I should think you would," sez Arvilly, lookin' hull reams of by-laws and statutes at him.

And I sez, "Whilst you're a-walkin', dear Josiah, you might meditate on the danger to the govermunt from woman's emotional nature and the patience and long-suffering of men voters." I said it real tender and good, but he snapped me up real snappish.

"COME, TOMMY"

Sez he, "I shall meditate on what I am a-minter. Come, Tommy." And they went out.

The next day we started for Yokohama and arrove there with no fatal casualties to report, though my pardner wuz real sea-sick but brightened up as we drew nigh to shore. Here and there a little village with quaint houses could be seen, and anon a temple or shrine riz up above the beautiful tropical foliage and further off the Fujiyama, the sacred mountain, riz up above the other mountains.

We come into the harbor about half past three and arrove at our tarven about five. When we drew nigh the shore almost naked boatmen come out to meet us in their sampans, as they call their little boats (Josiah called 'em "sass pans" right to their face but I don't spoze they understood it). They wuz to take us into the shore and they wuz yellin' to each other fearful as they pushed their boats ahead. Their toilettes consisted mostly of figgers pricked into their skins, dragons and snakes seemed their favorite skin ornaments, the color wuz blue mostly with some red. Josiah sez to me as we looked down on 'em from the dock:

"Them coolers wouldn't have to carry a Saratoga trunk with 'em when they travel; a bottle of ink and a pin would last 'em through life." It wuz a real hot day, and Josiah continered, "Well, their clothin' is comfortable anyway, that's why their called coolers, is because they're dressed so cool," and, sez he, "what a excitement I could make in Jonesville next summer in dog-days by introducin' this fashion."

I looked on him in horrow, and he added hastily, "Oh, I should wear a short tunic, Samantha, comin' down most to my knees, with tossels on it, and I shouldn't wear snakes or dragons on my skin, I should wear some texts of Scripter, or appropriate quotations as Josiah, the fair, or Josiah, the pride of Jonesville, runnin' down my legs and arms, and I shouldn't have 'em pricked in, I could have 'em painted in gay colors."

"Oh, heavens!" sez I, lookin' up to the sky, "what won't I hear next from this man!"

"I hadn't said I should do it, Samantha; and 'tennyrate it would be only through dog-days. I said what a excitement it would make if I concluded to do it."

Sez I: "It is a excitement that would land you in Jonesville jail, and ort to."

But at that minute Arvilly and Miss Meechim come up to us and broke off the conversation. Japan boatmen jest wear a cloth round their loins, and some of 'em had a little square of matting fastened by a rope round their necks to keep the rain offen their backs.

After goin' through the custom house, where we got off easy, we went to a tarven called the Grand Hotel and had a good night's rest.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. These questions are printed Four weeks in advance so as to afford all our readers an opportunity to answer them.
2. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.
3. Answers must be received at this office two weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.
4. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.
5. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.
6. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.
7. Write only on one side of the sheet and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.
8. Address all communications intended for this department, EDITOR THE MAIL BAG,

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

These Questions Will be Answered May 9

1. Which is likely to be the happier man, he who has but small means and comparatively small opportunity to give, or he who has large means and could, if he would, give much away?

2. What, in brief, are the varying beliefs among Christians concerning the condition of the elements used in the Communion of the Lord's Supper?

3. Of what practical benefit to the world have the various expeditions to the North Pole been, or would their success ensure?

4. What, in the space of not over one hundred words, would be the best presentation of the claims of the Bible to divine origin, such presentation being specially prepared for the somewhat sceptically inclined?

5. Who are the world's ten greatest philosophers, in their chronological order?

6. What texts most clearly state the soul's immediate ushering into glory after death?

7. What may be regarded as the more important influences at work for the betterment of the American nation?

8. What may we expect will be the next great forward achievement in the practical application of science for the welfare of mankind?

9. If the Revised Version is better than the Authorized Version, why is the former not more generally read in the churches?

10. Is the use of the individual cup at the Holy Communion a Scriptural and a better practice than the cup out of which all communicants drink?

Questions of the Week

1. What have been the chief beneficial results of the Christian Endeavor movement?

It has helped the young to find their mission; has spurred the churches to utilize latent talent; trained the young for more active participation in devotional services and church work; developed familiarity with the Bible; raised up a throng of systematic and proportionate givers; strengthened the sense of obligation for the welfare of souls at home and abroad; intensified and made more intelligent denominational and congregational loyalty, and promoted inter-denominational fellowship and true Christian unity; quickened the civic conscience, and deepened the current of heart-religion. J. H. BOMBERGER.

2. Why do we find women in larger attendance upon the Sunday and week-night services of our churches than men?

Women are more devout than men and as a rule have a more solemn sense of religious duties. This fact alone turns their thoughts churchward when the thoughts of men are in other directions. Women are so much in their homes that they are often glad to go to church for a change, while men, being most of their time away from the house, get their change by staying at home. Men again allow business, outdoor occupations, clubs and social pleasures to interfere with attendance upon church to an extent that women do not.

E. C. STEWART.

3. On what ground did Sunday take the place of the Sabbath among Christians?

The change from Saturday to Sunday was made (1) By the authority of the Apostles, delegated them by the Lord, Matt. 16:19. They kept the "first day of the week," Acts 20:7; I. Cor. 16:2. Says Neander: The Apostles "rejected the Sabbath . . . to avoid the risk of mingling Judaism and Christianity," and also (2) because on that day Christ rose from the dead, and appeared no less than five times to his followers. (3) The outpouring of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost occurred on Sunday. G. E. KRAUTH.

4. How should an amateur prepare for the delivery of an address on some social or literary question?

Study the subject thoroughly on all sides of it. After a thorough saturation, write from the fullness of your heart. When your manuscript is complete, lay it aside for a few days; then critically examine it, adding here and expunging there. Too much care cannot be given to the arrangement of the subject matter, as a logical order tends to promote ease in the listeners. When the paper is finished, commit to memory or learn so well that the reading may be easy and fluent. Practice speaking or reading it until satisfied that you have it well in hand.

ADA ANDERSON NEW.

5. When Christ was born the heavenly host sang "On earth peace, good will to men." This would indicate that Christ's mission was one of peace. What, then, did the Saviour mean when he said, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay, but rather division?"

The religion of Jesus Christ is pre-eminently a system of peace, and if universally accepted and obeyed would establish a kingdom of peace over all the earth. Hence, angels celebrated the advent. But the principles of this kingdom are diametrically opposed to the natural desires and passions of the human heart, therefore men oppose the establishment of this peaceful kingdom. Foreseeing the external evidence, abounding in historical and geographical errors, promoting superstition, justifying deception and teaching false doctrine. PAUL DOLTZ.

8. What is the nearest approach among human inventions to perpetual motion?

Some ingenious clock machinery has been invented which is guaranteed to run for decades of time, but there is a limit somewhere. As any machinery that gathers or generates force must sooner or later wear out, and so cease operating, perpetual motion is not achievable. Putting the Falls of Niagara under tribute for electrical power, the use of the tide-wheel, and Prof. Tripler's process for making liquid air are about as near as man has come to the achievement of perpetual motion.

C. T. RIPLER.

9. What number of words are there in the English language; what is the number used in literature, and what number in ordinary conversation in every-day life?

There are more than 200,000 words in the English language. Shakespeare did not use more than 16,000 different words, nor Milton than 8,000. A graduate from one of our largest universities should be able to use intelligently between three and four thousand words. The knowledge of about 2,000 words will enable a person to read the average newspaper, magazine or book with comfort. In ordinary conversation less than 1,500 words are employed, while there are undoubtedly persons of sparse education who do not use more than 500 words. S. E. SMITH.

10. Is municipal ownership of trolleys desirable and would it be likely to benefit the community owning the same, by increased public improvements or reduction of taxation?

Yes. The profits now declared on watered stock could be used to reduce taxation. Cities can borrow money to buy and build roads at lower rates than private corporations. Fares could be reduced; the roads operated more safely and with more consideration for the public than by private corporations whose stockholders are looking only for immediate returns in money. Water supply and public education are now managed very successfully by the municipalities, and statistics conclusively prove that gas and electric lighting may be managed and supplied by cities at a saving of over thirty per cent., as compared with private ownership. Precisely the same results would ensue in the municipal management of trolleys. H. C. UNDERHILL.

AN EASTER MORNING ANTHEM

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

OUT of the darkness, out of the cold,
Up from the cradle of close-clinging mould,
Filling the world with their smile and their cheer,
Lo! in the spring-time, the flowers appear.

Gone is the winter, and scattered the gloom,
Sweet is their fragrance, the Easter-buds bloom,
Lily and rose in their beauteous array,
Lighting the King on His conquering way.

Lift the glad anthem till heaven's reply
Thrills from the angels who praise in the sky.
Jesus is risen! Dear heart, let us bring Chorals of glory to Jesus our King.

Sweet on the air is the flower's pure breath;
Broken the power of sin and of death;
Fear we no longer the dusk of the tomb,
Lo! in the Easter, life's white lilies bloom.

Miscellaneous Questions

In the next issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in response to requests from many quarters and for the convenience of new subscribers who have lately joined our circle of readers, we shall publish a synopsis of those chapters of "Aunt Samantha's Journey 'Round the World" that have already appeared. This will be an excellent opportunity for all who did not read the opening chapters of this remarkably interesting story to become familiar with it from the beginning. By reading the condensation of the early chapters, they will be enabled to appreciate and enjoy those that follow—the best of it being yet to come.

E. S., Prescott, Wis. 1. On what day did Thanksgiving come in 1895? 2. What was the origin of the Potters' Field and why so called?

1. On Thursday, November 28. 2. The use of the term as applied to burial places for the poor, owes its origin to the fact that the piece of ground purchased by the priests with the thirty talents of betrayed money which Judas rejected, was called by this name, doubtless because of its connection in some way with the royal establishment of pottery once existing at Jerusalem and referred to in I Cron. 4:23.

G. A., Chambersburg, O. Where was the first asylum or refuge for criminals?

The first asylum of this character mentioned in Scripture is the tabernacle. If a man killed another he might fly at once to the tabernacle and lay hold upon the horns of the altar. There, the "avenger of blood," as the nearest kinsman of the slain was called, might not touch him. Later, like protection was provided in the temple. Under the Mosaic law, too, cities of refuge were also established, three east, three west of the Jordan, where the manslayer might find security. In every case, however, he was subject to trial; and if it was proven that his deed was of malice and premeditation, he paid the penalty. Similar customs obtained among the ancient Greeks and Romans. In the early centuries of the Christian era, criminals or innocent people, pursued by enemies, sought the "sanctuary" and found safety there. The privilege came to be abused and rulers began to circumscribe it. In 1324 a nunnery, which was in its way a house of refuge for fallen women, was established at Naples. There were, doubtless, some sort of reformatory homes for such characters earlier than this.

A reader in Pennsylvania furnishes this interesting information:

KNOXVILLE, PITTSBURGH, PA.

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 21, in the article "The Mormon Tablets," it says Solomon Spaulding, of Ashland, Conn., was the author of the manuscript from which The Book of Mormon was written. May I be allowed to state through your paper that Rev. Spaulding wrote his book in the village of Amity, Washington county, Pa., and that his remains lie buried in the village graveyard. The writer has been in the house where he lived and wrote. It is only recently that the oldest inhabitant passed away who heard Mr. Spaulding read his book to his neighbors. He was old and retired, and wrote for pastime. He would write an instalment of his book, and call in the neighbors and read to them. The old house on the village green still remains or was standing a short time ago. REV. FRANK N. FOSTER.

Benj. W. S., Watkins, N. Y. Has any intelligent and reliable foreigner been permitted, within the last fifty or one hundred years, to descend into the "Cave of Macphelah," beneath or adjacent to the mosque at Hebron—that is, into the chamber where mummies, or receptacles for the dead, would be found? If yes, who was it, and when, and what is in that chamber at the present time?

No; it is guarded with the greatest religious jealousy. Rev. J. L. Porter, Pierotti, Benjamin of Tudela and others, have written all that is known on the subject. The bodies of Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Rebecca, Jacob and Leah are believed to have been buried there.

Mrs. Jessie R. B., Albany, N. Y. "The Passion Play" is on exhibition in this city as a Punch and Judy show. The most solemn scene in our sinful world, to be treated so, is, in my opinion, sacrilegious. What does THE CHRISTIAN HERALD think of it?

It sometimes happens that the best way to condemn an evil which we are powerless to suppress is to utterly ignore it, and this particularly the case in the present instance, as to excite any agitation over it would simply advertise it—which is precisely what its conductors want.

H. L. S., Waterford, O. We have been reading Samantha's story in our home, and the question comes up as to the real number of American saloons in Manila. She says "hundreds and hundreds." Does she give facts in such statements or is that an exaggeration? We would like to know the real value of such statements.

There is not a doubt about their accuracy. Read Mr. Crafts' statement in our issue of March 21, page 236.

Mary L., Binghamton, N. Y. What is the population of the Transvaal?

About 760,000, of whom only 120,000 are whites. These were the figures two years ago.

In a recent issue the question was asked whether at any time in modern history as many as 3,000 converts had been baptized in a single day. The answer was given that in the Telegu Mission, India, 2,222 persons were baptized on July 3, 1878. Many letters have been received giving additional information concerning that interesting event. Eliza P. Munn, Fleming, N. Y., writes that only

Two persons administered the ordinance at a time, and the whole time occupied about ten hours. It was the largest number baptized, on profession of their faith in Christ, on one day since the day of Pentecost. All was done decently and in order. On Dec. 28, 1890, 1,671 were baptized at Ongole, but the account does not say how many there were to administer the ordinance, though in the case where 2,222 were baptized, only six different persons officiated, and two at a time.

Subscriber. Miss Holley lives at Bonnie View, Adams, N. Y.

J. A. C., Hillman. There is no evidence that tobacco was known in Bible times. It is not mentioned in Scripture.

Mrs. L. F. V., Burlington, Kan. Northfield, Mass., is a small country town, with a population of about 1,000.

Mrs. W. E. D., East Northfield, Mass. If an agriculturist in raising tobacco, corn or any other crop feels that he is doing wrong, he should certainly act upon his conscientious conviction. These matters can only be decided by the individual conscience.

The War in South Africa

NEWS from the seat of war during the week was comparatively uneventful. The most important of the items cabled was that of the death of Piet Joubert, the most skilful and honorable of the Boer leaders. He was sixty-eight years of age, but was still capable of great endurance, and was active in the service. He was wounded early in the war, but it was hoped that he had recovered. It is now evident that he had for many weeks been a very sick man. His death is a severe blow to the Boer cause. Though so able a general, he was no less able as a statesman. There is reason to believe that if his counsels had prevailed, there would have been no war, for he was strongly in favor of making the concessions to the outlanders, which at the outset would have satisfied the British Government. Telegrams of condolence were sent to his widow by Queen Victoria, and frank expressions of regret and respect were sent to President Kruger by Gen. Roberts and Gen. White, who both held him in high esteem as a brave and honorable foe. By his own advice, given shortly before his death, Gen. Botha succeeds him as commander-in-chief of the Boer forces. The general situation is not materially changed. Lord Roberts has apparently thought it unwise to attempt to proceed from Bloemfontein toward Pretoria until the safety of his communications is assured. The prudence of that course was proved on March 31 by a skirmish, which must have been exceedingly vexatious to the British commander. A small force under Col. Broadwood, which had occupied Boesman's Kop, about fifteen miles east of Bloemfontein, found themselves outnumbered by the Boers and were ordered to retreat and to join Lord Roberts at Bloemfontein. On their way they entered a deep valley both sides of which were strongly held by the Boers. The whole detachment, comprising 350 picked troops, the pride of the British army was compelled to surrender with seven guns. The chagrin of the commander must have been all the greater because of the aristocratic position of the officers. Among them are scions of England's most illustrious families. They appear to have fought bravely, but were surprised and outnumbered. A portion of the convoy made their escape. Gen. Roberts, immediately after he heard of the catastrophe, sent Gen. Colville to their rescue, but at the time of writing the result of his effort is not known. Numerous incidents are reported by correspondents, which show how human are these men who are doing their best to slay one another. Our illustration on this page is taken from a picture by an artist on the field. It depicts the scene at a truce in which the British and the Boers freely mingled together in the work of helping the wounded. It was difficult to believe that the men who were so sympathetic with the sufferers and so ready to help them were the very men who had caused the suffering.

THE LATE GEN. JOUBERT

Thy men shall fall by the sword and thy mighty in the war, and her gates shall lament and mourn (Isa. 3:25).

BRITISH AND BOERS CARING FOR THE WOUNDED DURING A TRUCE

Ineffective Arbitration

After a delay of nine years the court of arbitration to settle the dispute between Portugal on the one side and the United States and Great Britain on the other, in the matter of the Delagoa Bay railroad, has rendered its verdict. In 1883 a railroad was projected from Lorenzo Marques on the southeastern coast of Africa, to the Pass of Incomati on the Transvaal frontier, there to connect with the Transvaal railroad. The contract for its construction was awarded to Col. McMurdo, an American citizen, and the capital was subscribed in England. The road was built to within a short distance of the pass and opened for traffic in 1887. But Portugal was disputing with President Kruger about the delimitation of the frontier near the pass and there were other complications which prevented the road being finished. In June, 1889, the Portuguese Government confiscated the road and completed it. Thereupon our government made a claim on behalf of the representatives of Col. McMurdo, who had died, and Great Britain made a claim on behalf of British stockholders. After some negotiation it was decided to submit the dispute to the decision of three judges, who were to be appointed by the government of Switzerland. That court has had the matter under consideration for nine years and has now made an award of $3,062,800 to be paid by Portugal, after deducting the cost of the arbitration, the amount to be divided between the two claimants according to a scale yet to be fixed. The award is undoubtedly a disappointment, not only to the two governments concerned, but to the friends of arbitration the world over. It tends to discredit the principle of arbitration. When two governments quarrel and are urged to submit their dispute to arbitration, they may point to this instance, in which the arbitrators took nine years to reach a decision and then made an award ridiculously inadequate. The judges should have striven to do justice, if for no other reason, to encourage nations to resort to arbitration, instead of to war. The friends of peace might well address them in the words of Israel's statesman:

It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God, because of the reproach of the heathen, our enemies? (Neh. 5:9).

An Atheist's Protest

Among the cases before the justice of a New York police court recently, was that of a man who had been summoned for not sending his son to the public school. His boy, who is twelve years old, formerly attended school, but had absented himself. The truant officer notified the father of his absence and learned that the father had forbidden the boy to go. Thereupon the summons was issued. In his defence he said he and his children were aliens. He had kept the boy from school as he did not wish him to receive religious teaching. He further stated that he believed there was no God and he wished his boy to be reared in the same belief. The justice was shocked by the answer and told him that unless the boy was sent to school another summons would be issued and punishment inflicted. The father declared that such treatment was not just in a free country, but his protest was not entertained. Unhappily the small modicum of religious knowledge imparted in our schools is little likely to counteract the father's influence, even if he yields. One cannot but be sorry for such a child, because he will miss the very foundation of all useful knowledge:

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding (Prov. 9:10).

A Canine Patient

An officer who is serving on an ambulance corps in the British service in South Africa tells a remarkable story. It was after the sanguinary struggle at Spion Kop that the ambulance corps, under a flag of truce, went to the scene of conflict to bring in any of the British wounded who might still be living. There were more of them than had been expected, and the surgeons were kept busy dressing the wounds. Under one of the ambulances a liver-colored pointer was lying. He watched the surgeons at their work until the last patient had been attended to. The surgeons were putting away their instruments when the dog rose and limped to a surgeon, and, looking up in his face, uttered a piteous whine. The surgeon, who is a lover of dogs, spoke kindly to him, and the pointer held up a forepaw. It had been hit by a bullet and was evidently giving the animal considerable pain. The surgeon dressed the wound and lifted the dog into the ambulance. How many people might be made spiritually whole by the Great Physician if when they see others being saved they would, like that dog, apply for healing for themselves!

I obtained mercy that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him (I. Timothy 1:16).

Liable for Infection

A question of a railroad company's liability for loss was recently decided by the Supreme Court of Illinois. Suit was brought by a cattle dealer who had sent over a hundred head of cattle from Centralia to Seymour. After the arrival the animals fell sick of splenic fever and about one third of them died. As the disease was not prevalent at either the place from which they came nor the place to which they went, inquiries were made as to the cause of the outbreak. It was discovered that the cars that had been used for their transportation, had previously been occupied by cattle from another state in which the disease was raging. Experts were called to show that the germs of the disease would remain in the cars and would infect other cattle that might be conveyed in them. On this evidence the court decided that the railroad company must pay the sum claimed by the cattle owner. If that decision is confirmed, the railroad companies will be more careful to disinfect their cars. It would be well if parents would take analogous precautions to save their children from the contamination that comes from association with wicked persons, which is quite as insidious as the germs of disease:

Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners (I. Cor. 15:33).

News on the Wind

A remarkable story of the strange means by which intelligence of a calamity reached the man most concerned is related by the New York Herald. It says that among the passengers of a Pennsylvania ferryboat going from Jersey City to New York was a man who was suffering from rheumatism. The doors of the boat were opened by someone passing through and the wind carried a page of a newspaper in and deposited it on the passenger's knees. He did not raise his crippled arms to remove it, but let it lie there. His eyes rested idly on the columns for a few moments, when, with a cry, he sprang up, exclaiming that his wife was dead. The newspaper scrap told how a lady had gone from New York to Paterson, N. J., to nurse a sick friend. The friend had died, and her attendant had fallen ill of pneumonia and was dead, too. The people knew her name and that she came from New York, but did not know her street address and therefore could not send the news of her death to her family. Her body had been sent to the morgue to await a claimant. Her husband, who did not even know that she was ill, was inexpressibly shocked to read the intelligence in the scrap of paper so strangely brought before him and was so overcome that he had to be helped off the boat. It was marvelous that the wind should happen to carry to that particular man the intelligence in which he was most concerned. It ought to impress people with the truth of the doctrine of special providence. Sceptics who ridicule the power of prayer, forget that God has at his command all the elements by which he can carry out his purposes.

Lo these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand? (Job 26:14).

Easter Spices

N our celebration of Easter let us remember what it was that the women carried to the Lord's tomb on the first Easter morning. Why did not those women bring thorns and nettles? for these would have expressed the piercing sorrows of themselves and their Lord. Why did they not bring some national ensign, such as that of the Roman eagle, typical of conquest? No, they bring aromatics, suggestive to me of the fact that the Gospel is to sweeten and deodorize the world. The world has so much of putrefaction and malodor that Christ is going to roll over it waves of frankincense, and sprinkle it all over with sweet-smelling myrrh. A thousand years before this, Solomon had said that Christ was a lily, and Isaiah had declared that under the Gospel the desert would bloom like the rose; but the world was slow to take the floral hint. And so now the women bring handsfull and armsfull of redolence, and perhaps unwittingly confirm and emphasize the lesson of deodorization.

When Christ's Gospel has conquered the earth the last offence to the olfactories will have left the world; sweet, pure air will have blown through every home, and churches will be freed from the curse of ill ventilation, and the world will become two great gardens, the empurpled and emblazoned and emparadised hemispheres. Sin is a buzzard, holiness is a dove. Sin is nightshade, holiness is a flower. If you are trying to reform the world, open the windows of that tenement house and pour through it a draught of God's pure atmosphere, and set a geranium or heliotrope on the window-sill; cleanse the air, and you will help cleanse the soul. How dare this world so often insult that feature of the human face which God has made the most prominent feature in human physiognomy? To prove how he himself loves aromatics, I bring the fact that there are millions of flowers on prairies and in mountain fastnesses the fragrance of which no human being ever breathes, and he must have grown them there for his own regalement. And for the compliment the world paid Christ by giving him a sepulchre in Joseph's garden, he will yet make the whole earth a garden.

Yes, he expressed his delight with fragrance in the first book of the Bible, when he said: "The Lord smelled a sweet savor;" and he filled the air of the ancient tabernacle and temple with sweet incense; and there are small bottles of perfume in heaven, described in Revelation as golden vials full of odors. I proclaim an ambrosial gospel which will yet extirpate from the world all foulness and rancidity, and the last noisomeness and the last mephitic gas. Glad am I that, though the world had chiefly spikes for the Saviour's feet and thorns for the Saviour's brow, the Magi put frankincense upon his cradle and the Marys brought frankincense for his grave.

Poor Preaching

TO secure poor preaching, keep the minister on the trot. Scold him when he comes to see you, because he did not come before, and tell him how often you were visited by the former pastor. Oh, that blessed predecessor! Strange that they did not hold on to the angel when they had him. Keep your minister going. Expect him to respond to every whistle. Have him at all the tea parties and the "raisings." Stand him in the draught of the door at the funeral—a frequent way of declaring a pulpit vacant. Keep him busy all the week in out-door miscellaneous work; and if at the end of that time he cannot preach a weak discourse, send for us and we will show him how to do it. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, but if the plan of treatment we have proposed be carried out, we do not see that any church in city or country need be long in want of poor preaching.

Use Your Voice

IT is thought classic and elegant to have a delicate utterance, and that loud tones are vulgar. But we never heard of people being converted by anything they could not hear. It is said that on the Mount of Olives Christ "opened his mouth" and taught them, by which we conclude that he spake out distinctly. God has given most Christians plenty of lungs, but they are too lazy to use them. There are in the churches old people hard of hearing, who, if the exercises be not clear and emphatic, get no advantage save that of looking at the blessed minister. People say in apology for their inaudible tones, "It is not the thunder that kills, but the lightning." True enough; but I think that God thinks well of the thunder or he would not use so much of it.

Military Drill in Schools

THERE must be some systematic physical training in schools; why should it not be the military drill? The exercise is moderate and good. It is outdoors. It tends to erect bodies and graceful movement. But, it is objected, it promotes the military spirit. To make lads familiar with fire-arms and military tactics, will tempt them to become soldiers. Certainly, not every boy who is familiar with foot-ball becomes a professional player. But military skill may happen to be necessary. We needed military tactics in the war with Spain. What miserable work was made by our political generals and captains, in both instances. Either we have to maintain a large standing army, or our boys ought to have some sort of military training; not necessarily to become officers, but to be ordinary soldiers. But war is to be no more.

We pray for that, and labor for it; and having done all things, we stand. War may occur any day. It does not depend upon rulers, as it used to do. But it depends upon great civil leaders. This country did not want the Mexican War, but it came; the Civil War, but it came; war with Spain, but it came; war with the Philippines, but it came. Our boys must have some regular physical training. Let it be, at least for a certain class and age, the military drill.

HOW TO START A LOCAL FAMINE RELIEF COMMITTEE

A NUMBER of people have written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stating that they would like to start an India Famine Relief Committee in their town, and asking for information concerning the best mode of procedure.

We should say that the first thing to do is to write down a number of names of public-spirited men and women, and to each of these address an invitation about as follows:

Kind Friend:

A sore famine has visited India. Fifty millions of men, women and children are affected. Millions must die of starvation unless help is promptly send them. I am endeavoring to form a Relief Committee and earnestly invite your co-operation. Will you serve as a member? Systematic effort will speedily result in generous contributions and our community will thus be represented in this great international life-saving work. I enclose circular setting forth India's great need.

A meeting for the purpose of forming such a Relief Committee will be held in the parlor of ..... (or lecture room of ..... Church, or some other place adapted to the requirements) on Wednesday evening next, at eight o'clock. We are sure that we may count on your practical sympathy and hearty co-operation, and hope that you will find it convenient to join us in this movement.

Very cordially yours,

Send this letter to at least double the smallest number you may think sufficient to constitute the Committee.

If possible, before you prepare the circular, get three or four clergymen of your town to join you in sending out the call, and at the same time to supply you with a goodly number of very desirable names to whom it may be addressed.

Before the meeting, write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for such literature as it may be able to provide for the purpose of informing yourself on the real status of the India famine and the latest news concerning it, also for leaflets for distribution on the occasion of the meeting. Get some of the clergymen to agree to talk on the occasion and encourage the work, and settle with them as to which one of those present shall be called temporarily to the Chair during the organization proceedings. Then elect a Chairman, Vice-Chairman, a Secretary, one Corresponding Secretary, and a Treasurer. Let the Treasurer, if possible, be an officer of a bank. Then elect a Press Committee, whose duty it shall be to call upon the newspapers of your town and ask them to give the widest publicity to the famine needs and to the proceedings of your Relief Committee; also arrange with them to publish the names of all contributors, together with the amount contributed by them. Then appoint another sub-committee to visit all the Young People's Societies and all the churches, and persuade them to take an active hand in this grand and glorious work.

Each church may have its own sub-committees to operate among its own members and to report to the General India Famine Relief Committee. This will result in a series of operations that must be crowned with success and must induce numerous contributions for the cause. As soon as some money has been contributed, and as often as the treasurer of the fund may deem proper, send a remittance on account to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that the money may be cabled immediately to India and do the work for which it was contributed. Thus, ten dollars collected to-day in Ohio and sent on to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, reaching here the day following, may the very next morning be doing its work in India. Don't keep the money in the treasury but let it immediately start on its work of beneficence. Every day's delay must result in loss of human life.

Positively No!

W. J. McN., Paterson, N. J., writes us as follows:

Please tell me whether Dr. Talmage or Mr. Klopsch, when they went to Russia in 1892, on their mission of famine relief, were decorated by the Czar?

No, neither Dr. Talmage nor Mr. Klopsch was ever the recipient of any decoration from any ruler, nor would they consent to accept a decoration from any government for the work they have done, or are now doing, simply as laborers in the Master's vineyard.

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. P. S. Henson, of the First Baptist Church of Chicago has baptized nearly one thousand converts during the eighteen years of his pastorate of the church. About 2,500 new names have been added to the list of its membership.

It is proposed to establish an American school in Palestine for study and research. Prof. C. H. Toy, of Harvard, has issued an appeal for funds to build and endow it. Prof. J. H. Thayer is chairman of the committee in charge of the undertaking.

The Bishop of London in his recent charge expresses the opinion that the large increase in the use of the confessional is due to the decrease in respect for parental authority and the respect on the part of young people for the good judgment of their parents.

The French evangelical missionaries on the Zambezi River, Africa, report the baptism of the heir to the throne of the country—Litia, son of Lewanika. He has been a professed Christian, except for one or two lapses, since 1891, during which time he has been on probation. He appears now "to have come forth a new man." His wife and only child, a son, were baptized with him.

A good example in church work has been set by the people of Nordhoff, Cal. There were two mission churches there, one of which was Presbyterian and the other Congregational. The people brought the churches side by side and have made one church organization, which is now self-supporting. One of the buildings is used for church services and the other for Sunday School and social purposes.

Nearly seven thousand Americans will be exhibitors at the approaching Paris Exposition. Efforts are being made to induce all to unite in the observance of the Lord's Day. Secretary of State Hay has instructed the United States Ambassador and the Commissioner General to co-operate in the endeavor to secure united action in the matter. If it is successful, the machinery will not run on Sundays, nor will any manual labor be performed in the American section.

The King's Daughters' Settlement, at 48 Henry Street, New York, is accomplishing a wonderful work among the poor of the city. Its operations now include: a free circulating library, a bath-room, a flower mission, a playground, a kindergarten, a sewing school, three cooking classes and a Penny Provident station, beside the fresh-air work; the Sunday "Happy Hour," eighteen clubs for boys and girls, two for young women, two for mothers and one for fathers.

Mr. A. G. Robinson, the Philippine correspondent of a New York journal, states it as his deliberate opinion that the opposition to the United States in the islands is due largely to a doubt in the minds of the people whether, under American government, they would be delivered from the intolerable oppression of the friars and the monastic orders of the Roman Catholic church. If the people could be assured that the vast area of land claimed by the church would be nationalized and the exactions of the monks prohibited, a long step would be taken toward pacification.

Dr. H. M. Wharton's meetings at Worcester, Mass., have attracted enormous congregations. Mechanics' Hall, in which they were held, though accommodating 4,500 persons, was not large enough to hold the crowd that came. Washburn Hall was opened for overflow meetings, and that too was filled. Dr. Wharton asked the converted people present to leave, so as to make room for seekers, and a large number complied. The seats were speedily filled. Subsequently a space at the front was cleared and a large number of anxious persons knelt while Dr. Wharton and the workers prayed with them.

A GLORIOUS EASTER TRIBUTE

The Leading Women of America Bear Testimony for Jesus, and Avow their Faith in the Doctrines of Christianity

MRS. H. C. HANSBROUGH
Wife of Senator from North Dakota

MRS. THEO. W. BIRNEY
President, Mothers' Congress

MRS. BENTON McMILLIN
Wife of Governor of Tennessee

MRS. P. J. McCUMBER
Wife of Senator from North Dakota

Oh, joy to her who, first allowed,
When roused from weeping o'er His shroud,
By His own calm, soul-soothing tone,
Breathing her name as still His own!

AT this glad Eastertide, when the whole Christian world is joyfully celebrating the anniversary of the Saviour's resurrection, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the privileged messenger to bring to the altar a most fragrant tribute—the heart-offering and Christian testimony of the grandest and most representative women of our nation. In Judea of old it was the women who clung most closely to the Master amid all his trials and sufferings; they walked sadly by his side along the "Way of Sorrow"; through their tears they watched him expire on Calvary and they were specially honored in being the first to see him and hear his voice on that perennial Easter morning after he had broken the bonds of death and the grave. It is peculiarly appropriate that on this, our latest Easter, their voices should be heard in greeting and recognition, and in the giving of glad testimony to their unfaltering devotion to Him who died and rose again:

Hallelujah, He is risen!
Death for aye hath lost his sting;
Christ, Himself the Resurrection,
From the grave His own will bring.

About a year ago, at a time when the Christian integrity of the nation's leaders had been grossly assailed, and when the charge had been made that infidelity was rampant in high places, and that posts of the greatest honor and distinction were filled by unbelievers and agnostics, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published the outspoken testimonies of our President and Cabinet, our leading statesmen in Congress, Supreme Court Judges, Army and Navy commanders, Governors and prominent educators. The refutation was complete, and the declarations for God and Christ and righteousness clear and unequivocal. At the suggestion of many who were influenced by this powerful presentation, it was decided to afford the leading women of the nation an equal opportunity of giving their testimonies before the world.

The questions propounded were the following:

"Are you a friend of Christianity and do you believe that it is a friend of humanity?

"Do you believe that Christianity is a masterful influence in civilizing humanity?

"Does your belief extend to the recognition of a Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ?"

A multitude of replies came from almost every State in the Union. Among the writers were the wives of senators, governors, judges, generals, congressmen, cabinet officers, and ladies prominent in religious, educational and social work. All were cordial and even fervent in their declarations of Christian belief, and the contributions, as a whole, prove that the women of the Union, speaking through their ablest representatives, are stanch and loyal supporters of the Christian faith. It affords the most complete refutation of the statement so often heard that women who socially and intellectually fill the most exalted positions "care nothing for religion." To print all the letters in full would require many pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. First on the list naturally come the letters from the Cabinet ladies. Mrs. John Hay, wife of the Secretary of State, gives this brave and beautiful declaration of her belief:

As a child, I was taught that God was my heavenly Father, and that through his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, salvation was brought into the world. As I have grown older, this belief has become the underlying foundation of my life, and experience has taught me that Christianity is not only the friend of mankind, but is also the dominating influence in the civilization of the world.

MRS. JOHN HAY.

From the wife of the Postmaster General, we have this unequivocal testimony:

God is our Father; it should not be possible for any of us to be other than his friend. I believe that

MRS. S. B. ELKINS
Wife of Senator from West Virginia

MISS FLORA WILSON
Daughter of Secretary of Agriculture

MRS. MARCUS A. HANNA

MRS. N. B. SCOTT
Wife of Senator from West Virginia

MRS. ASA S. BUSHNELL
Wife of ex-Governor of Ohio

MRS. JUDITH ELLEN FOSTER
The Noted Lecturer

MRS. JULIUS C. BURROWS
Wife of Senator from Michigan

MRS. WILLIAM E. MASON
Wife of Senator from Illinois

MRS. JOHN W. FOSTER
Wife of the Distinguished Diplomat

Christianity is a masterful influence in civilizing humanity. The highest civilization of ancient times fell, through the want of it. "Happy are the nations whose God is the Lord." My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ.

ELLA H. SMITH.

Mrs. Ella C. Heath, wife of the Assistant Postmaster General, declares:

The Bible is the text-book of the reading world; therefore Christianity is the forerunner of civilization. I do not see how any one could go to sleep at night, confidently believing that he or she will wake in the morning, without believing in the divinity of Christ.

MRS. ELLEN A. RICHARDSON
Ex-Pres., George Washington Memorial Asso.

An equally direct and helpful testimony comes from another Cabinet lady, the wife of the Assistant Secretary of State:

My idea of the highest Christianity is exemplified in the life of him "who went about doing good." In this practical age that Christianity must be lived, not talked, the man who loves his fellow-man and tries in his everyday walk to make the life of his fellow-man better, easier, happier, is living a Christianity which needs no words to recommend it. It is this kind of a Christianity which has brought the world to its present state of civilization.

MRS. DAVID JAYNE HILL.

From the wife of the Secretary of the Treasury comes this declaration:

True civilization has progressed just so far as, in private or national life, the principles of the Golden Rule and the Sermon on the Mount are acted upon. These principles are the most perfect yet stated as ideals of spiritual life.

SUSANNA PHELPS GAGE.

A Distinguished Testimony

Surely there never was penned a simpler, grander, more earnest testimony to the Christian faith than this by the widow of ex-President U. S. Grant:

What would we do in this changing world without the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ to keep, comfort and sustain us? It is the greatest thing in the world; nothing else compares with it, and it is the one influence, above all others, that civilizes humanity and that will bring the ultimate peace on earth and good will among men. From my infancy I was taught to reverence and love the God of my forefathers; my honored husband was actuated by the same belief, and I can scarcely understand why anyone should doubt the reality of religion. I certainly believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost.

JULIA DENT GRANT.

MRS. F. H. GAFFNEY
Nat'l Pres., Women's Council

MRS. J. L. McLAURIN
Wife of Senator from South Carolina

MRS. WM. O. BRADLEY
Wife of ex-Gov. of Kentucky

From Mrs. Gray, wife of Justice Gray, of the United States Supreme Court; Mrs. Amanda McKenna, wife of Justice McKenna; Mrs. Lily M. Shiras, wife of Justice Shiras, and other prominent ladies come most cordial affirmative letters.

In her communication, Mrs. Shiras has this noble utterance:

The millennium day will dawn when man is actuated by love to God and love of his fellow-man.

Miss Flora Wilson, the accomplished daughter of the Secretary of Agriculture, adds to her affirmative response:

That quality in human nature which requires something uplifting, ennobling, inspiring, finds its call answered in the teachings which God, the maker of heaven and earth gave through Christ, his Son our Lord.

Mrs. M. A. Hanna sends a short letter declaring the fullest belief in Christianity.

Governors' Wives Testify

From the wives of the Governors of different States a number of very beautiful letters of voluntary Christian testimony have also been received, the perusal of which cannot fail to be helpful and encouraging to many. Each letter has a peculiar individuality of its own. The honored mistress of the gubernatorial mansion of Pennsylvania writes:

Christianity is the best friend of mankind, and I should be very sorry if I could not say that I am its friend. It is its teachings that have brought into existence the hospitals and homes for the poor, and taught man to have love for his fellow-man. My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ.

MRS. WILLIAM A. STONE,
Wife of the Governor of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Emma F. Thomas, wife of the Governor of Colorado, concludes her communication with this ringing declaration:

My belief in God the Father and in Jesus Christ his Son is as immovable as are the everlasting hills of our beautiful Centennial State.

"I have loved our Saviour since early childhood," writes Mrs. Eva Steunenberg, wife of the Governor of Idaho, "and believe he is the best and truest friend of mankind."

Another Governor's wife sends this beautiful tribute:

Even did I not believe in the divinity of Christ—which I most certainly do—I should have to subscribe myself as a friend of Christianity; for its teachings have taught the brotherhood of man and have been the underlying foundation of every philanthropy the world has had from the time of Christ till now. It has preceded and is the dominating influence in all civilization.

MRS. ROBERT B. SMITH,
Wife of the Governor of Montana.

A Conquering Creed

This from the Green Mountain State:

The teachings of Jesus will go on civilizing and Christianizing until at last "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that he is Lord of lords." "For there is one God and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."

MRS. EDWARD C. SMITH,
Wife of the Governor of Vermont.

"The true Church of Christ always makes progress," writes Mrs. L. M. Shaw, wife of the Governor of Iowa, "and will go on conquering—and to conquer—to the end of the world."

Mrs. Agnes P. Scofield, wife of the Governor of Wisconsin, sends an unhesitating "Yes" to each of the questions.

Mrs. Katherine P. Rollins, wife of the Governor of New Hampshire, in her letter declares: "It is the teachings of Christianity which makes the civilized world a desirable place in which to live."

A cordial affirmative to all three questions comes from Mrs. W. A. Poynter, wife of the Governor of Nebraska, who adds: "Christianity is the basis of the highest civilization the world has ever known. I believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."

A letter that seems like a page of personal experience comes from the Pine Tree State, viz.:

From my childhood I was taught to believe in Christianity, and all my experiences through life have taught me that it is the best friend of mankind. The argument is sometimes advanced that civilization has brought the world to its present state, but history teaches us that a civilization without God does not stand the test of time. God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and Jesus Christ his Son, are embraced in my belief.

MRS. LLEWELLYN POWERS,
Wife of the Governor of Maine.

MRS. WILLIAM J. DEBOE
Wife of Senator from Kentucky

MRS. PERRY S. HEATH
Wife of First Assistant Postmaster General

MRS. RICHARD R. KENNEY
Wife of Senator from Delaware

MRS. EDMUND W. PETTUS
Wife of Senator from Alabama

MRS. WILLIAM P. FRYE
Wife of the Presiding Officer of the Senate

MARION HARLAND
(Mrs. Terhune)

MRS. JOHN C. SPOONER
Wife of Senator from Wisconsin

MRS. B. L. WHITMAN
Wife of President of Columbian University

MRS. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS
Wife of Senator from Indiana

MRS. MARIANA W. CHAPMAN
New York's Honored President of the Suffrage Asso.

This from the wife of a Southern Governor reveals an eloquent advocate of the faith:

I believe that Christianity has given friends to the friendless and homes to the homeless; it has fed the hungry and clothed the poor; it is the only system of religion that provides alleviation for the sufferings of humanity, and offers consolation to the sorrowing soul. We have but to look about us for evidence of this. We have but to compare our happy lot with that of the unfortunate women of heathen lands, where the Bright Morning Star of Christianity does not shed its beneficent light.

MRS. BENTON MCMILLIN,
Wife of the Governor of Tennessee.

More Joyful Testimonies

"China, India, Africa, and many islands of the sea, are an evidence of what progress civilization takes without Christianity," writes Mrs. Elizabeth T. Lowndes, wife of the ex-Governor of Maryland, while declaring herself an orthodox Christian. This letter from another Governor's wife is somewhat in the same vein:

Without Christianity, I do not believe that humanity would have become what it now is. There is a quality in human nature which, in order to fulfil its better possibilities, calls for the recognition of the principles of Christianity. It is my belief that all creation points to the existence of a Supreme, a Divine Being, and that the more closely one keeps in touch with nature, the more sure he is of this fact.

It is noticeable that a very large majority of the distinguished writers are women who have evidently made a careful study of the record of Christianity's triumph in the moral and social elevation of women. Letters like the following show this to be the case:

Christianity has done for the world what all other religions, all other influences, could not do. It is sometimes said that the advancement of civilization has brought about the present condition of things in the world today, but the Divine Teacher said "By their fruits ye shall know them." If civilization has wrought the advancement which is seen in Europe, England and America, why has it not done so in China, India and Africa? We need but to contrast the condition of the women of these countries with that of our own sex in this happy land to realize what Christ has done for women. To all mankind he is, without doubt, the best Friend.

MRS. F. B. FANCHER,
Wife of the Governor of North Dakota.

An ex-Governor's wife writes:

Wherever the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ has not gone, there woman is kept often in degradation, usually in ignorance, and never the equal of man. How can I be other than the friend of that which has done so much for my sex? All nature proves to me that God is the Supreme, over-ruling force in this and all other worlds. The millions of those who have experienced the peace which a trust in Him engenders is the indubitable proof of the Divinity of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

MRS. W. H. ELLERBE,
Wife of ex-Governor of South Carolina.

"I believe Christianity is the chief corner-stone, the greatest of all civilizing influences. I believe in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord. I love his name, his service, and watch for his coming," writes Mrs. William O. Bradley, wife of the ex-Governor of Kentucky.

From one of our youngest territories this letter comes:

Genuine Christian influence will do more toward civilizing the world than all else combined. Christ is the greatest teacher the world has ever known. Could the principles that he taught be made the universal practice, the day-dawn of heaven would be realized on earth.

MRS. C. M. BARNES,
Wife of the Governor of Oklahoma.

Letters giving a fervent affirmative to all the questions have also been received from Mrs. George W. Atkinson, wife of the Governor of West Virginia; Mrs. Ada Bushnell, wife of the ex-Governor of Ohio; Mrs. Elisha Dyer, wife of the Governor of Rhode Island; Mrs. Joseph F. Johnston, wife of the Governor of Alabama; Mrs. Myron H. McCord, wife of the ex-Governor of Arizona and Mrs. Miguel Otero, wife of the Governor of New Mexico.

From Senatorial Homes

Seldom have testimonies so direct and convincing been offered than those that come, like fragrant Easter incense, from the ladies of the leading Senatorial households. The wife of the United States Senator from Alabama writes:

By the grace of God, I am a friend of Christianity, a firm believer in the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, and believe it to be the most exalting and ennobling influence upon man. It fits him for a better life here and prepares him for the life hereafter. I sincerely believe that Christianity is a masterful influence in raising and civilizing humanity. I do believe in God as the Supreme Being, our Creator, our Preserver and Ruler of the universe. To him be all honor and glory!

MRS. EDMUND WINSTON PETTUS.

Equally touching and full of the spirit of true religion is the following, from the wife of another Senator:

Pure Christianity as taught by Jesus Christ

MRS. CHARLES EMORY SMITH
Wife of the Postmaster General

MRS. JOHN HAY
Wife of the Secretary of State

MRS. E. M. WHITTEMORE
Founder of Door of Hope

MRS. FRANCIS E. WARREN
Wife of Senator from Wyoming

KATE TANNATT WOODS
Editor and Author

MRS. GEORGE L. WELLINGTON
Wife of Senator from Maryland

MRS. MAY WRIGHT SEWALL
President of International Council of Women

MRS. GEORGE TURNER
Wife of Senator from Washington

MRS. EMILY M. C. KILVERT
Secretary Cuban League

MRS. ANDREW E. LEE
Wife of Governor of South Dakota

MRS. C. M. BARNES
Wife of Governor of Oklahoma

MRS. LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE
Author and Lecturer of Nazareth, I believe in; but understand me, between pure Christianity and Christianity so-called, there is a vast difference. Certainly the sermon on the Mount and the Golden Rule could not do otherwise than civilize humanity. If practised in every day life, how could such teachings, such an example, such a beautiful life, fail to benefit the whole world? When mankind outgrows the creeds of past ages, taught so long as truths, and learns to walk by the Light, then will all these so-called mysteries be solved to his understanding; then he will not be held in bondage to false teachings, for "The Truth shall make him free!" MRS. GEORGE C. PERKINS, Wife of U. S. Senator from California.

Senators' Wives Testify

Here is a group of letters, each of which breathes the spirit of the Master:

I should regret if I could not subscribe myself a friend of Christianity, for there is no doubt in my mind that it is the best friend of mankind and the most potent influence in the civilization of humanity. My belief extends to a recognition of a Supreme Being and to the acknowledgment of Jesus the Christ as the divine Son of God. MISS PAULDING, Niece of U. S. Senator Depew.

God is my Father, Christ my Redeemer, and the Holy Spirit my Comforter. I rejoice to be able to give my testimony—and I speak from a long lifetime—of the help and strength I have received from my faith. Women are now the greatest ministers in God's work. They are the moral support of the world, and in his name are they purifying and elevating his creatures. MRS. CANDIA B. MONEY, Wife of U. S. Senator from Mississippi.

I do believe that Christianity is a powerful factor of civilization, and my belief does extend to a recognition of and reverence for a Supreme Being. Concerning incarnation, I hold the more inclusive view, recognizing not only the divinity of Jesus, but also the progressive incarnation of God in the life of humanity.
EDITH J. W. MASON,
Wife of U. S. Senator from Illinois.

I believe the highest type of humanity can only be developed under the inspiration and influence of a Christian civilization. How could there be a Christian religion without a belief in God and the divinity of Christ?
MRS. NORA B. MCLAURIN,
Wife of U. S. Senator from South Carolina.

Wherever its principles are inculcated and practised, man reaches his highest state of civilization. I believe that God is the Creator and Supreme Beng of the universe; that he made all men of one flesh, and that they are most like him when they love their fellowmen and do what they can to help them over the rough places in life.
JENNIE MCCUMBER,
Wife of U. S. Senator from North Dakota.

A Sympathetic Christ

A thousand times Yes to each and all of your questions. True Christianity is most powerful in civilizing humanity, for it is the inspiration of the secular life, the breathing of an eternal spirit through the temporal world. I believe in the Fatherhood of God and the divinity of his Son. Who is Christ? He who fed the hungry, visited the sick. Who are Christ's? Every one that loveth is born of God.
MRS. JAMES HENDERSON KYLE,
Wife of U. S. Senator from South Dakota.

I believe Christianity to be the best friend man can have, and it is the greatest power for civilization the world will ever know. I believe in the Supreme Fatherhood of God and in the divinity of Jesus Christ, his Son.
MRS. RICHARD R. KENNEY,
Wife of U. S. Senator from Delaware.

I believe Christianity is a mighty influence in civilizing humanity and that it has been our most powerful prenatal influence for good, whether we acknowledge it or not. My hopes most earnestly recognize the Supreme Being; my life is the daily effort to live up to my hopes! Christ is divine to me. I interpret unconventionally perhaps; but our forefathers came through suffering to suffer in a new, wild country, for the right to think religiously without criticism or molestation, and I believe in living religion, not professing what we make no hourly effort to live.

Deeds more than words,
Love—not hate,

and the invincibility of hope now and hereafter. MARY B. CHAPMAN HANSBROUGH, Wife of the U. S. Senator from North Dakota.

I heartily believe in "true religion and undefiled," and experience shows that wherever it is practised, by the individual or the nation, there the highest happiness and prosperity are attained. AGNES V. SCOTT, Wife of United States Senator from West Virginia.

The influence of Christianity is beneficent; it gives hope to the hopeless, and leads mankind to forsake degrading ways, and, above all, it civilizes, in that it makes truly gentle men and women. I believe in the Supreme Being called God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, the divine Saviour of the world.
MRS. JOHN C. SPOONER,
Wife of U. S. Senator from Wisconsin.

Christianity is the truest friend mankind has ever had—the only civilizing influence humanity has ever had or will have. No thinking being who studies nature can fail to believe in a Supreme Being, as I do most firmly. I believe in the divinity of Christ. How could I do otherwise, for to this teaching and influence women owe the proud position they hold in all Christian countries to-day.
ANNIE E. FOOTE STEWART,
Wife of U. S. Senator from Nevada.

Christianity Best of All

"I believe in everything good for mankind," writes Mrs. Jeter C. Pritchard, wife of U. S. Senator from North Carolina, "and in Christianity as the best and greatest good of all: that Christianity alone can fully civilize man and make him fit to live in this beautiful world, and to live with Christ in heaven."

"Christianity is without doubt the most potent influence in civilizing and uplifting the world: the only religion that teaches selfish man to regard the rights of the poor and weak as equal to the rights of the rich and powerful," writes Mrs. John W. Daniel, wife of U. S. Senator from Virginia, in the same letter in which she declares her faith in Christ's divinity.

Christianity softens, purifies, ennobles and elevates a person as nothing else can do. And what is true of the individual is true of a nation. I believe in God the Father, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ our Lord.

Such is the testimony of Mrs. Wm. J. Deboe, wife of the U. S. Senator from Kentucky.

This emphatic testimony comes from Mrs. David B. Henderson, wife of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

It seems to me that every thoughtful person must concede the existence of an over-ruling, Supreme Power, and that no one can contest the masterful influence of Christianity in civilizing humanity. I am certainly a friend to it and believe it is the friend of mankind.

Affirmative answers to all of the questions, each conveying a sincere declaration of Christian belief, have also been received from Mrs. Agnes B. Quay, wife of the Senator from Pennsylvania; Mrs. F. E. Warren, wife of the Senator from Wyoming; Mrs. George L. Wellington, wife of the Maryland Senator; Mrs. Edith M. K. Wetmore, wife of the Rhode Island Senator; Mrs. J. H. Gallinger, wife of

From Army and Navy Homes

From the wives of Army and Navy fficers come some very beautiful letters. 'his is from a lady whose kindness and evotion endeared her to the brave boys- n-blue, many of whom she tended in ickness at the army camps during the ate war with Spain:

I am now nursing in the hospitals, trying to o what I can to help the uncomplaining sick nd suffering soldiers. I can only say I con- ider religion the greatest civilizer—the great- st power to cultivate and elevate humanity—n all the wide world; the greatest strength n the hour of need; the greatest comfort in orrow; the greatest support in trials our earts can ever know. I truly believe that no eart is ever satisfied—ever really happy—no natter what may be its prominence or rank r wealth or power or glory, unless it lives in nd leans upon and thoroughly realizes and ecognizes the tender love of a pitying heav- nly Father. And no one, no matter what nay be their sorrow or privations or poverty, r losses or trials, or physical suffering, can ver be utterly miserable so long as the love f God is in their heart. It is the only thing hat enables us to endure the agony of look- ng upon the dear dead faces of our dearest nd brightest and best. I can imagine no greater agony than to live without the love of God in our hearts, and without the hope of he eternal blessedness and peace of heaven.

ANNIE WHEELER,
Daughter of General Joseph Wheeler.

The wife of one of our best known Generals writes:

I answer "Yes" to all the questions most heartily and sincerely. Christ came to be mankind's friend. In all ages of the world he has proved to be his best friend, and only through the principles he set down is the highest civilization attained.

LAURA MERRITT,
Wife of General Wesley Merritt, U. S. A.

MRS. CLINTON B. SMITH
Pres. W. C. T. U. of District of Columbia

Captain Charles King, in Mrs. King's absence in Europe, makes reply in her behalf, and writes: "Knowing her faith, I have no hesitation in answering Yes for her to all three of your questions."

Here is a most direct and unequivocal testimony:

I believe in Christianity as the sole influence for good in this world. If any one does good works, and says he is not a follower of Christ, he simply does not recognize the origin of the good influence that is working through him. I believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ, because it is the only possible explanation of the effect of his influence.

MRS. F. E. CHADWICK,
Wife of Captain Chadwick of the U. S. Navy.

The wife of Captain Sigsbee, of the illfated Maine, writes:

I believe that Jesus Christ is "God manifest in the flesh" and "in him is all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." The Word of God contains all that is necessary for the elevation of the individual and for the Nation. To love God and one's neighbor and to practice the Golden Rule is to do one's whole duty.

ELIZA ROGERS SIGSBEE,
Wife of Captain Sigsbee, U. S. N.

An explicit declaration of Christian belief also comes from Mrs. Charlotte Taylor Evans, wife of Captain Robley D. Evans, U. S. Navy.

Intellectual Leaders Testify

From women eminent in the domain of intellectuality some very striking testimonies have been received. Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, from her home at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, sends this noble declaration of Christian belief:

THE TRIBUTE OF A NOBLE LIFE

To these questions I can reply very heartily in the affirmative; and I believe, too, there is in Christianity a power that can make the humblest, life more dignified, beautiful and noble.

Very truly

Helen Miller Gould

The foregoing is reproduced from Miss Gould's letter, dated from Lyndhurst, Irvington-on-Hudson, in which she declares herself a firm believer in the doctrines of the Lord Jesus. Miss Gould's splendid services to humanity are everywhere known.

As I am a friend to mercy and truth and righteousness, and to all that is lovely and of good report, I am a friend to Christianity, which embraces these attributes. In this statement I take Christianity to mean a life and not a dogma. And yet I would not be understood as opposed to creeds; I do not think Christian sentiment would long survive if Christian creeds vanished. Empty the vase of rose leaves, and the perfume will linger awhile, but it will grow fainter and fainter, until there is none. So would the Christian sentiment disappear if the Christian doctrine was thrown away.

Christianity has taught men some of the sweetest words that were ever spoken: Freedom, brotherhood, friendship, home, country, unselfishness, charity, purity, love. It is Christianity that has lifted souls from the bottomless pit of selfishness, and made men break the bonds of the slave, and set the captive free; that has taught men to play the part of the good Samaritan—not forgetting the oil and the two-pence to the sick and the helpless. It is, in short, that one simple rule of Christianity, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you," which has been, and will continue to be the lever of the noblest civilization the world has seen; and which is day by day working towards that glorious end when the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man shall be the law of every life, and the sufficiency for every desire.

I not only believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ his only Son, and my Redeemer, and surety for life everlasting, I believe equally also in the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son and one and indivisible with them. And I see in this Triune God no difficulty to cause me one moment's doubt. I accept it with as much certainty as I accept the miracle of my own dual nature. I am soul and body. None of my physical senses touch my soul; I cannot see my soul. I do not know its shape any more than I know the shape of a thought or a desire. I have no idea how it is joined to my body; yet I know that by no possibility can I mistake my body for myself. Now as I can not understand, nor yet deny, my own dual nature—the mysterious union of my soul and body—I have no difficulty in believing in the Trinity of the divine nature. Therefore I adore as One, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. AMELIA E. BARR.

Very simple and beautiful is this declaration of Christian belief:

"Pure religion and undefiled before God the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep one's self unspotted from the world" James 1:27

Some poet has said:

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And the good that I can do.

CYNTHIA WESTOVER ALDEN,
Editor Woman's Department, N. Y. Tribune.

Another famous author sends this testimony:

Am I a friend of Christianity? Absolutely! and I believe it to be the strongest influence in civilizing humanity. There is not a shadow of doubt in my mind as to the existence of a Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

The following cluster of Easter testimonies from women well-known in the world of letters cannot fail to prove helpful to many:

Nothing but a deep religious trust has sustained me through the great sorrows and trials of my eventful life. Nothing has hurt me more than the cant and hypocrisy of those who constantly parade their religious views in an "I am holier than thou" manner. I believe in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; and I believe devoutly in living your religion. God makes no mistakes, and we can trust him here and hereafter.

MRS. KATE TANNATT WOODS.

From a Group of Authors

I can reply conscientiously that I am a friend of Christianity and that I believe it is the friend of mankind. I certainly believe that it is masterful in civilizing humanity, and my belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ.

MARY E. WILKINS.

Christianity is the most vitalizing force in the world to-day, and with all my heart I believe it is a potent influence in civilizing humanity. I believe in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ, his only Son our Lord.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I am most heartily and sincerely a friend of Christianity and believe it is the only hope of civilization and of the world. I believe most emphatically in the existence of a Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ.

MARION HARLAND.

I am a friend of Christianity and I believe that a little study of the social conditions of the world to-day will convince anyone that Christianity is the friend of mankind and the most potent influence in civilization. I believe in God the Father Almighty and in Jesus Christ his Son. MRS. WILL CARLETON,
Wife of the poet.

Among others who have contributed

MRS. ADDISON G. FOSTER
Wife of the Senator from Washington

each a fragrant blossom to this rare cluster of Easter blooms are many ladies distinguished in philanthropic and educational work, some as presidents of colleges, others presidents of various organizations that have helped to broaden the sphere of woman's activities.

From the successor of Frances Willard comes a characteristic letter in which she says:

I am a friend to Christianity, recognizing it as more potent than any and all other agencies since the world began, in benefiting the human race. The great reform and philanthropic movements of to-day are the outcome of Christ's gospel of love, peace, and good will. The civilizing influences of the life and teachings of Christ must be manifest to all fair-minded people—even to such as do not profess to try to follow him.

LILIAN M. N. STEVENS,
President National W. C. T. U.

Christianity Woman's Best Friend

"Christianity," writes Elizabeth S. Mead, President of Mount Holyoke College, "is woman's best friend, and the only friend that can restore in time the divine image lost by sin. In Christianity love to God must have for its correlate love to man. I subscribe to the Apostles' Creed."

Another woman of international fame writes:

I believe in Christianity; in the wisdom, the righteousness, the helpfulness of the teachings of Christ. Nominal Christianity has often, unfortunately, no apparent relation to Christ's teachings. But admitting that Christianity is summed up in the Golden Rule and the Sermon on the Mount and the Beatitudes, I believe in Christianity as the law of life. The teachings of Christ have had a powerful influence in subduing and purifying the human heart. Giving it what seems to me its noblest and most inspiring interpretation, I believe in the divinity of Christ as a pledge that humanity will, as a culmination of the evolutionary process, attain divinity.

MRS. MAY WRIGHT SEWALL,
President Int. Council of Women.

"It is the influence of Christianity in the body politic that engenders pure laws, which makes each man's weal the care of all," writes Mrs. Clinton B. Smith, president of the W. C. T. U., District of Columbia. "Naught but the Golden Rule

MRS. AGNES KEMP
One of Pennsylvania's Active Philanthropists

of Christ can bring the Golden Age of Man when it shall be easy to do well and hard to do evil."

Truly a sermon in brief is contained in this testimony:

I believe most firmly in a Supreme Being; that God is in the world "a Person not of ourselves, working for righteousness;" in Christianity as the divinest religion of the world, whose cardinal doctrines are practical love to God and love to man, and in Christ the great teacher who came to "save his people from their sins." MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE.

In addition to the glowing testimonies themselves many of the sentiments contained in the letters are well worthy of preservation. Mrs. Agnes Kemp, of the Suffrage Association, writes:

The true godly life is the only happy life; only that life which suppresses the lower nature and reaches upward toward the Divine Life can be happy.

Mrs. Emily Melville Cox Kilvert, secretary National Cuban League, writes:

Humanity would be as desolate without the recognition of a Supreme Being as a child would be without the consciousness of the compassion of human fatherhood, and Christ is the revealer of the divine paternity through his own perfect Sonship.

Miss Anna Gordon, the friend of Frances Willard, gives an affirmative reply to all the questions and sends this from Evanston, Ill.:

In Miss Frances E. Willard's living words I believe that "only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the Golden Age of Man."

An Eloquent Tribute

This letter, from Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, one of the ablest platform orators of our day, breathes the true Easter spirit:

In my place in the universe of God, I am a humble, reverent friend of that religion which brings us in conscious harmony with Nature and in loving and vital relation to the God of Nature and of Revelation, in whom I live, and move, and have my being. Knowing what Christianity does for me and for all people within my observation, who accept it, and its influence on many who claim to repudiate it, and rejoicing in the great fact of human brotherhood, I believe the Gospel of Christ is and must be the friend of mankind. It is the testimony of world-wide travel, observation and history that in proportion as Christianity wins its way, men and women rise physically, mentally and morally; children are blessed, the home is glorified as a sacred shrine, the old are tenderly cared for, and the unfortunate are guarded from harm. Yes, Christianity is the friend of mankind, and there is not now and never has been since history was written or its legends were told, any civilizing force comparable to Christianity. This force is constructive and cohesive among the units of society; and, therefore, nations and commonwealths are born.

In this faith I was born and reared. My father preached it among the hills of New England, and my mother lived it under the burdens and amid the joys of family life. I have taught this faith to my sons and daughters and expect to leave to them the testimony my mother, dying, gave to me.

I believe in Christianity, not only as religion, but as science and philosophy; morever, that it will have to be recognized as the only sound basis of political and social economics, the much-sought remedy for present harmful conditions. Not to recognition merely do I believe in the Supreme Being and the divinity of Christ, but to conscious touch and communion therewith by the inward way.

MRS. ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

Prof. Katharine Coman, of Wellesley College, writes:

Without belief in God and the religion of Christ, the best and sweetest things of this life would pass away, as well as that hope of the life which is to come, which soothes and sustains in the dark hour of death.

Faith Amid Trials

After testifying concerning her belief, Alice McL. Birney, National President Congress of Mothers, writes:

I am sometimes temporarily depressed by the thought of the mental and physical suffering in the world; my faith in God's infinite love and wisdom is steadfast, and I feel that some time all which now seems inexplicable to us will be made clear.

The wife of the greatest inventor in the world to-day, Thomas Alva Edison, sends a brief note of testimony in which, after declaring her belief, she adds:

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Judging from this standard there can be no refutation of the statement that Christianity has been and is the most potent influence in civilizing humanity. God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost is embraced by my creed. MRS. THOMAS A. EDISON.

The limitations of the space at disposal make it impossible to give more than a brief extract from many of the letters received. Here are a few which together make a notable cluster:

Civilization without Christianity would be a curse instead of a blessing to humanity.

MRS. JOHN W. FOSTER.

Without the teachings of the love of God and the brotherhood of man, what hopeless darkness would shut us in!

LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

It is the one thing needful to accomplish the civilization of humanity.

MRS. E. M. WHITTEMORE.

Were its precepts the practice of mankind to-day the world would be an ideal place.

LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE.

Love is always unselfish, and Christianity embodies the highest, purest love.

MRS. ANNIE HUMPHREY GAFFNEY,
President National Council of Women of the United States.

It will transform the whole earth into what its Maker intended it to be—a fit dwelling-place where he can visit his people as he did in the beginning.

CHRIST GATHERING LILIES

The Beautiful Blossom was the Master's Favorite—The Lovely Judean Lily and the Lesson it Teaches

BY AMELIA E. BARR

"CONSIDER the lilies of the field," said Christ. There were at that day a great many magnificent lilies of culture; lilies holding in their moonlight cups not only the scent but the care and love and even the adoration of centuries; such lilies as made old Nilus famous, and from whose golden heart, the Hindu scriptures say Brahma—one of the oldest sons of God—sprang; flowers at once so holy and so exquisite that a priest of the highest caste entering a room and seeing them there, bowed first to the flowers, even though a king was present.

And without doubt there were many kinds of such lovely lilies in Judea when Christ lived; but it was not to any lily of culture or worship, or inspirer of song, he referred. It was to the lilies of the fields around him. There was a homely tradition in my youth that these were the lilies of the valley, and our hearts would gladly believe that the heavenly scent and moonlight beauty of these exquisite bells were the "lilies of the field" which Christ took for his comforting text. But the lily of the valley only grows in cold or temperate climates, and it was far more likely the white and purple Judean lily, or the magnificent Martagan lily which, in the springtime, covers the hills of Galilee with inconceivable splendor.

But whichever lily it was, it was a wild lily, a flower of the field and the wilderness, and no garden exotic, a flower of little account in men's eyes—in the way, even—for some of the wild lilies of Palestine are hedged about with thorns, and some of them trouble the wheat fields and are angrily plucked up by the roots and left to wither -- all of them wild things of no use, except to clothe Mount Tabor with royal splendor, or make the fields around a blaze of crimson and purple glory. Yet God painted and perfumed their petals and God cared for them.

Now, in order not to miss the beauty and fitness of Christ's selection of wild lilies in place of the more lovely cultured lilies, we must consider to whom he preached his lily sermon. It was to "the poor," to "the common people," to the men and women who were held, at that day, in very small estimation—whose lives were so hard and bitter that it was easy for them to believe they were forgotten of God, as well as neglected by men—only a multitude of herds and peasants, of hard-working day-laborers and fishermen and despised publicans.

And Christ gathers a wild lily and points out to this lowly crowd its marvelous beauty and coloring. He shows them that God has clothed it in more royal magnificence than Solomon could buy with all the gold of Ophir. He tells them that God loves it and cares for it, and sends his rain and sunshine to perfect its wild, unregarded loveliness; and then looking round on the destitute crowd he asks, "Shall God not much more clothe you, O ye of little fath?" He comforts them with the assurance that their Heavenly Father knows they need food and drink and clothing. Never did the Saviour of men speak more gracious words than from the text of the wild lily; and to the very end of time humanity will love to remember him, standing on the Mount surrounded by wild flowers and preaching to the poor, the hungry, the naked, the sorrowful, that wonderfully comforting sermon from the text of the wild lilies.

So then, though it is the cared-for and the cultured lilies that mostly fill our grand churches and listen to our most eloquent preachers, Christ loves his wild lilies; and we know not how many of these poor, neglected flowers are really lilies of "the Bride," wild lilies owing nothing to the care of man, nothing to ecclesiastical training, nothing to the culture of education, but growing to perfect beauty in the rains and sunshine of God's loving discipline. They are only flowers of the wilderness; they have a wild, uncultured character; they are surrounded by repelling thorns; they have a hard fight for mere existence; but God put them in the very place where they are growing. He made room for them. He gave them their own beauty and perfume. He bid them lift their heads to heaven, to be filled from cup to root with his love and blessing.

"As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters." Is there any more beautiful emblem of the Church in the world? She is "a lily among thorns," pure and beautiful, and of the rarest fragrance; preserved by her innocence and holiness, though she is set among thorns. For it is worthy of notice that this emblem of the Church is not a garden lily; it is that species of wild Judean lily set round with thorns, and yet the royal singer of the Song of Songs must have had many kinds of exotic lilies in his palace gardens. He chose the uncultured lily as the emblem of the church, and has not God chosen the poor of this world heirs of his salvation, inheritors of the kingdom of heaven?

There is, however, one exquisite lily symbol in the Bible which refers to a cultured lily; but it is a lily cultured in the garden of the Church, and it brings with it the thought, to which all considerations finally tend—the thought of death. And we must not pass it by, for no emblem, either in revelation or nature, meets the subject of death so beautifully. "My Beloved—that is Christ—is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies." How exquisite is this representation of the Christian's departure! the Christ walking in the garden of his Church, and gathering the lilies that are ready to droop—the lilies that are full bloomed—and especially the lily buds, that are lovely in his sight.

Oh, then, mourning hearts, when your beloved ones lie in the beauty and languor of death, think of them as gathered lilies!—lilies gathered by Christ for eternity; lilies blooming forever in the paradise of God.

The Master is seeking lilies to-day,
  And he bends his steps to the lotus stream;
Golden-hearted, and pale, they lay,
  Full of wonderful peace like a holy dream.
    Calm-browed women, over whom the Dove
    Broodeth in still perpetual love,
    Watching and waiting with patient eyes;
    And he gathered them first for Paradise.

Then he paused where the sunshine was warm and bright,
  And the glorious lilies of Judah's land
In the heaven's own purple, the saints' own white,
  Bent lowly and lovingly down to his hand.
    Royal natures, unselfish and pure,
    Strong to contend and strong to endure,
    "The Master doth need you," that will suffice,
    Whether on earth, or in Paradise.

Stoopeth he now 'mong the long dewy grass,
  And sweet little lily-bells folds to his breast;
Ah, how he loves them! yet with grudging alas!
  We give to the Master the flowers he loves best.
    Frail wee blossoms not fit for the strife,
    The sorrow and pains of mortal life;
    Yet somewhere, we know, beyond the skies
    The lily-bells bloom in Paradise.

We see, but we see through our tears and sighs;
  The parable sweet is but dimly read,
Else to the heavens we should lift our eyes,
  Never bemoaning our loved as dead.
    The fairest blossom in all our home
    Suddenly fades from our loving eyes;
    Dead? No, for the Lord hath only come
    For lilies to plant in Paradise.

. . . EASTER-TIDE AND THE HOME . . .

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A Bermuda Lily Farm

NO one who has seen lilies only as we have them in our Northern gardens, a few clumps lifting green sheathing leaves and graceful cups of bloom, or a bed or two diffusing sweetness and shining in purity, can comprehend the glory of a tropical lily farm. No flower in the whole kingdom of nature lends itself to beauty when massed in a multitudinous array, as does the lily. Splendid in coloring, whether white, pink, scarlet, or mottled, sweet in lavish fragrance, stately in shape, of satin texture, and in every way satisfying to the most critical eye, a great lily field, stretching far across the level land, is a sight to remember. Surely Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these, and reverently we recall the Master's words, "Consider the lilies how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin," and we carry to the Father our burdens in entire confidence, for he knows what his children want before they ask, and his promise stands forever, "My God shall supply all you need."

There are immense tracts of ground in California devoted to lily culture for the market, and Bermuda, too, is renowned for this industry. Our beautiful pictures give the reader an idea of what goes on in Bermuda, when the lilies are in bloom, and the gardeners are cutting and packing them by thousands to send to colder climates for the Easter decorations of homes and churches. The florists' shops will blaze with these flowers, so carefully forwarded, and some of them will go to God's house on Easter Sunday, and others will exhale their final sweetness on the graves of the beloved dead, who sleep in Jesus to rise again, because he is the resurrection and the life.

In Spring Garb

When, as this season, Easter Sunday arrives tardily, in mid-April, it is safe to put away the wintry garb and don a new bonnet and gown. The young or old woman who discards warm woolen underclothing too early in our capricious climate may regret her folly, but when the trees are leafing out, the grass greening in the meadows, the brooks dancing, the hyacinths and jonquils blooming, and the whole world in brave attire, we need not be afraid of a new ribbon, or a fresh pair of gloves, or a toilette which is in harmony with the spring-tide brightness.

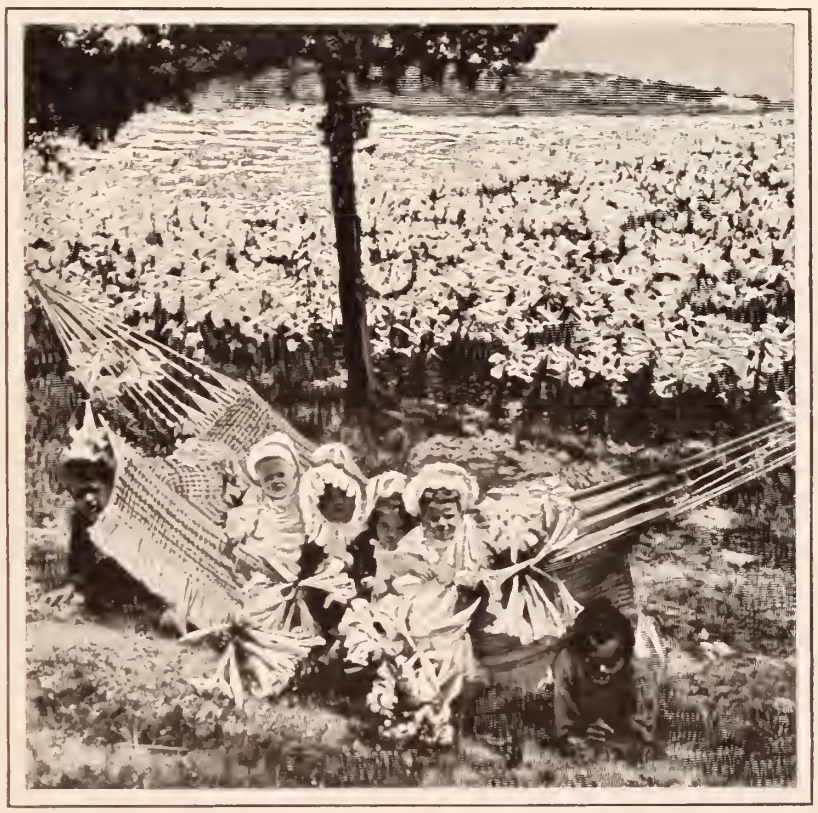
Young people need not be spurred up about this matter. They are quite alive to the propriety of new clothes when they can get them. Yet the young are in their own persons so attractive that they are, in a measure, independent of the aid derived from dress. Elderly ladies should be willing to take pains with their wardrobes and should never be reluctant to take a little trouble to have their gowns freshened up and their bonnets becomingly made. If mother or daughter is to be first considered in a purchase, let the daughter wait. Mothers should always come first, even in Easter finery, though some of the young people have not yet found this out.

Easter Flowers for the Blind

Although the blind cannot see the bright blossoms, their senses of touch and smell are so exquisite that they enjoy them as well as if they could see. Their fingers linger on the petals, and they love the rare perfume. Besides, the blind have an added sense of keen enjoyment when flowers are around them. I have seen a blind gentlewoman working in her garden and taking as much comfort in it and its growth as if she could see. Blind persons often say they see, and they do, with mental vision, though not with bodily eyes.

Gardens for Children

Children find it great fun to plant seeds and watch them come up. Almost every kindergarten has a garden plot where small folk experiment with nature. Beautiful spiritual truths may be impressed upon the child-mind by the teacher who helps the amateur gardener. Patience, faith, hope, charity, the presence of God in nature, the resurrection, all find illustration in the tiny seed that hid away in the earth, bursts forth a green shoot to unfold little by little into leaf and blossom.



THE CHILDREN AND THE LILIES

THEY are very like the lilies, the children
fresh and sweet,
Not yet by sorrow shadowed, not stained by evil ways;
The path is smooth and easy for their little tripping feet,
And only mirth and gladness time the measure of their days.

The birds that sing their matins are less carefree than these,
Who swing so lightly back and forth, and revel in the flowers;
Their rippling laughter echoes on the softly
perfumed breeze,
And, white or black, they have but joy in childhood's sunny hours.

The children and the lilies; perchance the great white throne,
Where many bands of children in lilied
grace are met,
Sends down to each pure little one a blessing of its own,
And Christ himself will not these lambs of his green fields forget.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—MRS. J. J. J. Your views are eminently sensible. Thanks for your letter.

—CHRISTIAN HERALD READER. Most growing children have too much homework to do, and parents should express their opinion to school superintendents and boards of education, as the teachers are powerless in the matter.

—STELLA ROSE. Any one who chooses may secure a good education at home by judicious reading. Consult your pastor about books. Physical culture is a matter of personal endeavor. Exercise daily and inhale and exhale deep breaths.

—MAUDE. "Arkansaw" is the right pronunciation. The talks in "Under the Evening Lamp" will not appear in book form.

—J.O.C. The dumb animals shall not be neglected. I shall soon say a strong word for them again. I think vivisection brutal.

—ELSIE DANA. Your little girl should wear simply made frocks for the next three years. Girls of six and seven years should not wear shirt waists.

—A SERVANT OF GOD. The work of a trained nurse is very hard, and requires more than ordinary health and strength. I fear yours is not equal to the strain. You may apply to any Hospital Training School in a great city, and blanks with full particulars will be forwarded you. Nurses receive board and lodging and a small monthly payment while they are in training.

EASTER BEATITUDES

"THERE used to be a great deal of pleasure here," said Helen Laidlaw looking sadly about the pretty manse parlor, but since grandma died, and little Ethel followed her, life has been desolate. We have three graves out there in the churchyard: mother's, she died when I was seven years old; my own little darling's, and the dear old grandmamma's; and now my husband and I are alone, and this is a very mournful house. Hear him tramping up and down the study. He is writing an Easter sermon, but his heart is aching for his mother and his only child."

"A man cannot write an Easter sermon unless in his soul is an Easter song," said Aunt Charity. "My dear Helen, what are you doing to cheer your good man?"

"I? Nothing, Aunt Charity. The spring of my life is broken; I have no pleasure nor profit nor even interest in any task or toil. My one desire is to keep the lowly graves beautified, and at Easter I shall cover them with lilies and roses. Would that Hugh and I were in heaven!"

"When the Lord wants you in heaven, Helen, he will send for you. Until then, dear child, you and Hugh must abide in your lot below. Try to get hold for yourself of the Easter beatitudes, and then you will be a true helpmeet for the minister."

"What are they?"

"Well, one is, 'They that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with him,' and another, 'Because I live ye shall live also.' The dear aged saint had spent many years in service here, and was ready for her crown; your own precious mother went fearlessly through the river, knowing that she was safe in the arms of Jesus; your child is angel-guarded and growing up in sinless beauty, in the Master's presence. No temptation nor trouble can ever touch her; no loss of fortune or of faith come to her happy heart. She is at home, waiting for you, and I cannot think she would like to see you distressed and grieving, when she is with Jesus."

"Dear Aunt Charity, I will pray," said Helen Laidlaw, "for the faith to comprehend the Easter blessedness. And now I will put on a smiling face, and strive to uplift and comfort Hugh."

"In the beauty of the lilies,
Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom
That transfigures you and me."

Easter Flowers for the Sick

If you know a dear "shut-in" who cannot go to church at Easter to hear the triumphant music, and join in the gladness of the most beautiful of the year's Christian festivals, send her a bunch of daffodils, or of carnations, or, if you prefer, let your offering to her be of violets or lilies of the valley. The flowers will tell her of your love, but they will do far more than that; they will carry straight to her heart in her darkened chamber, the message of the Saviour's love.

"God might have made the earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The oak-tree and the cedar-tree
And not a flower at all."

But this was not God's way. God filled our earth with bloom, as well as with things of use

PACKING LILIES FOR THE NORTHERN MARKETS

A Story of To-day

"The Lord's Bank"

In Two Instalments

BY MARY C. FRANCIS

CHAPTER I.

"NO; I'm not in!"

"Yes, sir."

"And, John."

"Yes, sir."

"I'm not in any more to beggars. Size them all up carefully and send them off. There's been a regular procession running up here for two weeks, and there has to be a stop put to it. I have to keep some of my money to run my business with or go into bankruptcy."

The head clerk bowed himself out obsequiously.

Henry Somerville turned with an impatient air to his desk, picked up the telephone receiver, and, calling up his wife, made arrangements for an early dinner and an evening at the opera. Having accomplished this his brow cleared somewhat, and, after briefly dictating half a dozen letters to his stenographer, he swung easily around in his wide leather chair and gazed contemplatively out at the scurrying snowflakes that now filled the air.

"HE TOOK THE SLENDER, SHIVERING FIGURE IN HIS STRONG ARMS"

He had done well, he reflected. All his life it had been give, give, give, always give, and who had ever given him anything? No one. Had he not made himself! Was he not successful and prosperous, a vestryman of St. Michael's, a well-known patron of the church's charities, of foreign missions, of various philanthropic enterprises, and did not all these things stand to his credit among the brethren? not that he admitted this last into his thoughts in so many words. It merely diffused itself pleasantly among his reflections like an aroma.

And then, proceeded his train of thought, in addition to all these, as if they were not quite enough, he had foolishly given to individual cases, hundreds no doubt, and probably most of them undeserving. It was easier to give than to investigate, and so he had given. Here, by some curious arithmetical process, the meagre sums he had gingerly and grudgingly parted with on those occasions suddenly multiplied in his mind's eye until they made an alarming total. How well that amount would look on a subscription list!

Somehow, as the white veil outside thickened, the warmth and comfort of his luxurious suite of offices sank into his senses with gentle persuasive power, and he rapidly formulated a system of philanthropy in which individual responsibility had no part, until a sudden flood of electric light and the stenographer by his side with the completed correspondence recalled him to his surroundings. He signed the letters and left the office an hour earlier than usual. On his way to the L, a poverty-stricken but decent looking man stepped up to him hesitatingly and said: "Sir, will you be so kind as to give me my carfare uptown?" And, such is the strange constitution of human nature, Henry Somerville had not for many days felt such a glow of invincible righteousness as he did in passing the humble suppliant without so much as a glance.

The dinner was all that an excellent dinner should be, and Henry Somerville had quite forgotten the evolution of his afternoon's theory when a chance remark by his wife recalled it to him and he forthwith elaborated it in full to her.

"You see, my dear," he concluded, "this whole thing of indiscriminate giving is wrong. Now that I have considered it fully I see that it is really criminal. Think of the annoyance to a business man of having a dozen appeals a day made to him right in the very rush of his business; think of the interruption, the delay, the irritation. Investigation under such circumstances is impossible. Amazed at being interrupted and anxious to get to work again as soon as possible, the man gives, and nine times out of ten undoubtedly gives to a professional beggar who, if a man, tells you he has a sick wife, and if a woman, says she has six hungry children at home. Now, even if these stories are true—and they're not more than half of the time—what business is it of mine!"

"Oh, Henry!" ejaculated his wife, "how can you speak so? You know we have responsibility in these matters."

"Now, don't misunderstand me, Helen. I have come to the conclusion that society as a whole is responsible for these things, and that I, as an individual, have discharged my responsibility when I have given to properly organized charities and missions all that I feel I can spare. In future I'm going to live up to this and get rid of this petty personal annoyance of first this beggar and then that whining for a quarter, for carfare, for a penny. I shall simply dismiss the brood in a bunch and let them be ground out by the regularly organized machinery."

"Henry," said his wife seriously, "you forget that many of the most deserving cases would be ground to powder in that official machinery. Before the routine of red tape could seal, sign and deliver their guaranty of deserving poverty they would be crushed between the upper and nether millstone. And then, think of the joy of giving! Think of the pleasure of welding more firmly another link in the common brotherhood of man! As for investigations, turn all the cases for which you have not time over to me, Henry, and I will investigate them."

"And spend all your time in the slums! No indeed."

"And, then, Henry, as to the amount. Are you sure you have given as much to these individual cases as you think?"

"I am very sure I have given more than they deserve. You are delightfully altruistic, my dear, but I shall live up to my resolution. Put on your bonnet; the carriage is due in five minutes and I want to be unfashionably early."

For weeks after that Henry Somerville went his way encased in a moral masonry that seemed impregnable. He talked about it some to his associates, and the more he talked the better it seemed. He developed eloquence in the matter and handled phrases like "the solidarity of human society," "the parasitic tendencies of modern life," and "the altruistic responsibility of the community" with astonishing fluency. Some of the less informed said that Somerville had become a Sociologist with communistic tendencies. Others, a grade below these in intelligence, said that he had evolved a system of philanthropy that would be possible only a century hence.

His wife said nothing.

Thus matters went on for several weeks; then one fine morning, immediately on his arrival at his office, a messenger blew in out of storm and hail and wind and handed him a telegram. He had made $3,000 on an investment in the west, which had long hung in the balance, and the check was now on the way. In an irrational moment he gave the boy a half dollar, and then the youth, shaking the rain out of his cap, said: "There's a man out there says he's got a message for you."

"All right, show him in, my boy." The messenger winked as he went out and jerked his thumb over his shoulder.

"I guess he's struck something rich.

"The Lord's Bank"

If you work him right now, you'll get something sure."

Henry Somerville's thoughts were busy with that $3,000 and he knew nothing until a weak and tremulous voice, the voice of poverty, said:

"Sir, I have never begged before, but I have tried in vain to find work, and now, for the sake of my family, I ask you to——"

Henry Somerville whirled in his chair. If he could only catch that messenger! But the lingo of his undigested philosophy came pat to his tongue. He was face to face with the proletariat, and the proletariat should understand that he was encountering society, in fact, the commonwealth.

"My good man," he began, in suave tones, the tones of a man whose bank account is growing, "my good man, I have already given to you and your family—given liberally."

The man stared blankly.

"You probably do not understand, but if you will apply at the proper headquarters you will be convinced of the truth of my statement. Call at this address," scribbling on a card, "and satisfy yourself in regard to the matter. John, show this man out and, who's this? Randolph Dinsmore! Show him in at once."

The mystified proletarian looked helplessly at the card and, stammering unintelligent thanks, was ushered out of one door as the prosperous promoter, Randolph Dinsmore, was ushered in at another. At least he was supposed to be prosperous. The company of which he was the general manager was capitalized at $1,000,000 and had an imposing list of ex-governors, ex-senators and ex-officials of various ranks on its board of directors. He was a smooth talker, and when he left Henry Somerville's office half an hour later he carried with him a check for $1,500 worth of stock in his company. He went directly to the bank.

It was not yet eleven o'clock. Feeling that he had already done a good day's business, Somerville sent for his stenographer and applied himself diligently to business for the next two hours and then bethought him to telephone a friend to accompany him to lunch that he might incidentally mention his good fortune.

As he lifted the telephone receiver the vociferous shouting of newsboys in the street penetrated his consciousness and he caught their shrill and blatant cry: "All about the failure of the Pan-American and Filipino Developing Company! Extraw! Extraw! All about the yawp! yawp! yawp! Extraw!"

He fell back in his chair.

John, the discreet, appeared.

"Did you ring, sir?"

"Yes, no, that is—John, get me a paper."

"Yes, sir."

The paper promptly appeared from behind, and its wet and glaring headlines flaunted their tale to him.

"Shall I say you are out at lunch, sir?"

"Yes."

It was the ordinary story of a swindle, nipped indeed, though scarcely in the bud, since the general manager had disappeared with cash known to aggregate $120,000 and perhaps more. At noon the mail of the concern had been seized by the post-office authorities, and the bank directors had ordered their account to be withdrawn—too late, however. The last check cashed had been one drawn to the personal order of Randolph Dinsmore by Henry Somerville for $1,500.

It was very late that night when Henry Somerville and his wife sat alone in their own apartments. He knew more than he had that morning. He knew that he, the astute man of business, had been cleverly fooled by an impostor, and that the unfortunate man whom he had sent to the mission had there met his wife, who had discovered the truth of his story and relieved his pressing need.

Silence had fallen between them after their mutual confidences, and then, turning to his wife, he said: "Helen, I have learned a lesson to-day and I see something that I never saw before. The Lord has prospered me and I have an account to render unto him. It has come to me like an inspiration that I am only the trustee of certain funds that belong to God and which he desires to be used for the relief of the poor and suffering. I see clearly the way to handle this fund in the best and most effective manner. Set it aside at once, make it a separate and sacred fund not to be touched for any other purpose, but only to be disbursed as occasion requires. We give this jointly to the Lord for his bank, and we are a committee of two, charged with the responsibility of distributing it. What do you think of it?"

His wife had slipped down by him on a hassock and her eyes were luminous in the firelight as she said softly: "Oh, Henry, the $1,500 is well lost if it has brought you to think of this. It is my ideal."

"And mine now. By giving it as a sum it is all given at once, and no matter how many applicants appeal, they are only getting their share. In fact, the more come the better, for we must do all we can with it. For the coming year we will set aside $1,000. If any of our depositors apply to-morrow payments will begin at once."

Henry Somerville met his first depositors in an unexpected manner. At midnight the next night he was hastily summoned to what was supposed to be the death-bed of a relative. In the early hours of the dawn the aged uncle was pronounced out of danger, and he was returning home chilled and dispirited from loss of sleep. The gray morning was raw and foggy. As he turned the heavy collar of his coat up he saw appear in the mist before him, like wraiths, two illy-clad children, a boy and a girl.

"Can you walk any faster, Sis?" asked the boy. "If you can, we won't be so cold."

"Yes, I can walk faster," said the child. She stepped out bravely; little patches of her bare, red legs showed through the holes in her stockings.

Somerville walked unnoticed close behind them.

"Do doctors come to sick people that haven't any money?" she asked, doubtfully.

"Of course they do—that is, if they don't, I'll make them come," replied the boy, with superb courage.

The heart of the man behind them yearned with a sudden stress of emotion. His own children were deep in rosy dreams in their warm, sheltered nests—and these! He came up to them in two steps.

"Who is sick, my little man?"

"Mamma, sir. Do you know where we can find a doctor? We've rung a lot of doctors' bells, but they're all asleep."

"I know a good doctor who goes to everybody and ——"

"But we haven't any money," broke in the girl.

"My, this doctor only goes to people who have no money. Where did you say she lived?"

The boy gave an address in the heart of a squalid district, and Somerville hailed a passing messenger and sent him to his own physician post-haste, with an imperative summons. Then, rousing a drowsy cabman from his somnolent state, he said to the boy: "Jump in," and taking the slender, shivering figure of the girl in his strong arms he drew her deep within the shelter of his great coat and pressed the icy little fingers in his own.

"Oh, gee, Bobby!" she shouted, as the cab rattled off, "I'm getting warm! Are you?"

Missionaries at the Canaries

Mr. T. M. Macknight, the well-known missionary, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Tafira, Las Palmas, Canary Islands, announcing that he has opened a Rest Home for invalid missionaries at Tafira, where those workers who have become enervated through exposure to the trying African climate may come for recuperation. Each missionary will be entertained free for two weeks and a longer stay may be arranged at a nominal cost. The Rest Home has an elevation of 1,000 feet above sea level, amidst vineyards, figs, and many beautiful walks. The temperature averages in the winter 60° Fahr. and in summer 71.7°, and the rain fall is only 10 to 15 inches. Such a place has been needed and had it been established earlier many valuable lives might have been saved for the Lord's work in Africa.

The Island Prison of Captured Heroes

ST. HELENA, THE PRISON OF NAPOLEON THE GREAT, TO BE OCCUPIED BY THE BOER GENERAL CRONJE AND HIS OFFICERS

LONGWOOD, WHERE NAPOLEON LIVED AND DIED

REPORTS are in circulation, though not as yet authoritatively confirmed, that Gen. Cronje and his officers who surrendered to Gen. Roberts at Paardeburg, on Feb. 27, will be sent to St. Helena for safe keeping. They are at present confined on board a man-of-war at Capetown; but it is feared that men accustomed to much exercise in the open air will not long maitain their health on shipboard. Gen. Cronje wrote to Lord Roberts to thank him for the kindness and consideration with which he had been treated and there is no doubt that the Boer leader is in comparative comfort, but he would be happier and more healthy on land. In view of that fact the deportation to St. Helena would probably be the wisest and most magnanimous procedure. At the close of the war he will doubtless be liberated, but present indications point to a severe and protracted struggle which may continue for several months, before that most desirable issue is obtained. Until then, the British authorities, knowing well his implacable hostility to them, and his prestige as a military leader, will take care that he does not escape. At St. Helena he would be safe while enjoying wide liberty and opportunities for open air exercise.

GEN. PIET CRONJE

The Island of St. Helena is the craggy summit of an ancient volcano. It is four thousand miles from the English coast, more than eleven hundred miles from Africa, and eighteen hundred from South America. Its extreme length is ten and a quarter miles and its width at the widest part eight and a quarter. It has an area of about forty-seven square miles, and its chief plateau is about twenty-seven hundred feet above the level of the sea. When the voyager to India had to go around the Cape of Good Hope, St. Helena was a frequent place of call, as it has an excellent harbor at Jamestown, but since the Suez Canal was cut, its importance has declined. The population is about six thousand souls. On the central plateau the vegetation is flourishing.

The fame of the island comes from its having been the scene of the imprisonment and death of Napoleon I. After the battle of Waterloo he returned to Paris, but the fickle French people, who had adored him in his prosperity, turned against him, after their nature, in his adversity and demanded his abdication. After spending three weeks in retirement endeavoring to arrange for a continued residence in France, and failing that for an escape to this country, Napoleon found himself cut off from every alternative but surrender to his English foes. He therefore gave himself up to Capt. Maitland, of the British ship Bellerophon. The government decided to send him to St. Helena. It was on Oct. 16, 1815, that he landed on the island. Thirty friends, selected by himself, accompanied him to share his exile. Among them were two physicians, whose services were needed owing to the critical condition of his health. A roomy substantial farm house, named Longwood, was placed at his disposal. Within a circuit of several miles he could roam at will, but if he wished to approach the coast, he must be accompanied by an English officer. As Napoleon himself said, no governor that could have been appointed would have satisfied him, but to Sir Hudson Lowe, who was made governor of St. Helena, he took an implacable dislike from the outset. He quarreled with him continually and Sir Hudson Lowe seemed destitute of the chivalrous tact which would have made their relations endurable. For nearly six years Napoleon lived there, spending his time among his books, writing his memoirs and wandering about the island. His health, however, gradually declined. His disease was cancer of the stomach and recovery was impossible. He died May 5, 1821, in his fifty-second year.

"PROVE ME"

Malachi 3: 10

BRING the tithes into the storehouse,
Let there be a bounteous store;
Then I'll pour you out a blessing,
Till ye have no room for more.

Prove me now, ye doubting children,
Let your faith attest my word;
Fill your measure of the contract,
Leave the balance to your Lord.

Stand no longer idly waiting,
Prayer unproved hath little power;
Vain your urging, without effort,
To advance the promised hour.

Bring your offerings to the altar,
Tithes of money, work and prayer;
Yea, with earnest consecration,
Give yourselves to service there.

Then will I, the Lord Jehovah,
Surely make my promise good;
Open wide the heavenly windows,
Pour you out a gracious flood.

Puerto Rican Relief Work

MUCH good work has been accomplished in Puerto Rico through the relief work inaugurated immediately after the great hurricane and maintained ever since by the contributions of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers and other generous friends. Mr. Warner Van Norden, treasurer of the American Relief Committee, writes to the proprietor of this journal, giving an interesting review of the work as a whole. He says:

"Our most active shipments were made in September and October, when the largest amount of distress existed in the Island of Puerto Rico. There was a persistent and urgent demand also for medicines, and medical appliances, which we aimed to meet promptly. Early in September we sent 352,000 pounds of rice and 360,000 pounds of beans, they being the cheapest class of nourishing food. Along with these we sent a vast quantity of light foods suitable for the sick, and those who had suffered a long time from starvation, including thousands of tins and boxes of tea, and large quantities of malted milk, lime juice, condensed milk, 1,000 large bottles of beef extract, and a quantity of miscellaneous food, most of which was suited more particularly for the sick or convalescent. The most continued demand, however, was for medicines and appliances for the relief of the sick, of whom there were vast numbers cared for by our administration, being the unfortunates who were suffering from the hurricane and its effects, or reduced in vitality by the want of nourishing food.

We sent repeated shipments, and in many cases large quantities of quinine, opiates, salol, sulphonal, surgical needles, bandages, catheters, antiseptics, ergot, camphor, considerable materials for hospital use, rubber bags, soap, salicylate of soda, absorbent cotton, trusses, eye glasses, bi-carbonate of soda and an infinite assortment of pills, cups, tin basins, sprinklers, bottles, splints, and various articles used in surgery. In addition to all these things, hundreds of dozens of towels, and quantities of unbleached muslin and cloth were also shipped. The bulk of these shipments were made between the end of August and the 1st of December. The cost of the goods sent at this time was nearly $50,000. We have, however, continued to forward goods as required week by week, our last gift being $500 in money, to be used for necessaries which can be purchased on the island to better advantage than we can ship them, and an acknowledgment of which I have just received by mail from General Davis.

"I venture to add that the large gift made by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, representing the numberless contributions of its friends and readers, came just in the right time, and enabled us to forward articles of absolute necessity for the relief of the suffering islanders. The committee feels that it is indebted to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the Bishop of Puerto Rico as its most earnest and generous contributors, both having accomplished a work which no one else seemed able to do."

A Little Girl's Bible

How it Saved a Criminal—Christian Work in Japanese Prisons

MENTION has been frequently made in these columns of the work done by Rev. Mr. Hara, the "Howard of Japan," among prisoners and ex-convicts in that country; and particularly of his labors in the Hokkaido prison, where 7,000 convicts were confined. For some time, Mr. Hara has been prosecuting his benevolent labors with marked success in Tokio, where his work has so recommended itself by its results that it has won for its sympathetic friends a number of prominent Japanese gentlemen, among whom are Hon. Mr. Hijikata, lately Minister of the Interior, several members of the Diet, the present Minister of Justice, and others of equal standing.

During the past two years Mr. Hara has lent assistance to 365 ex-convicts; of these, sixty-two are still living with him, and in training for some occupation that will make them an honest livelihood; the others are in comfortable homes, earning a support for themselves and those dependent on them. The following history of two ex-convicts helped by Mr. Hara are striking illustrations of the need and value of his work. One of these men, Mr. Maki, is an inmate of Mr. Hara's home. He plies his trade as a mason, while assisting Mr. Hara in missionary work. The other, Mr. Kobayashi, lives in another part of Tokio, follows the trade of a carpenter and supports his aged mother. He, too, is one of Mr. Hara's helpers. The two men are friends; they have been companions in crime and misfortune and now they are co-laborers for Christ and their fellow-man. It will be observed in our picture that Mr. Maki holds a book in his hand; it is a Bible which he values inexpressibly. The translation of the inscription on the fly-leaf reads: "Jesus is man's true savior. Whoever believes on Jesus is saved from sin." The story of Mr. Maki, his friend and his Bible are thus told by Mr. Hara:

"When I was Christian chaplain in Kushiro penitentiary some years ago, there were brought from Tokio to the Hokkaido two noted criminals. I observed that one kept in his sleeve a New Testament, which he occasionally read. After I had won his confidence he told me how he came by it. He said: 'I am a great robber and I deserve my punishment, but God has not forsaken. My mate and I, after long planning, broke into the Bible school at Yokohama, frightened and silenced the gate-keepers, and among other rooms entered the girls' dormitory, which we proceeded to despoil of any valuables we could find before the intimidated inmates could give the alarm. One little girl knelt down by her cat and prayed. My mate said: "She is praying because she is afraid." But no! she was praying for us. As we were stealing along a dark hall out of the building we heard the patter of feet behind, and we began to be frightened, thinking we were pursued, when we heard a gentle voice say: "Oh, sirs, please take this little book and read it." It was the little girl who had prayed. I was enraged; flung it back in her face and threatened to kill her if she didn't keep quiet. We hid among the graves of Yokohama cemetery, but when I went home that evening I was arrested, and next morning brought into court. We were examined; sentence was pronounced. Then the Judge held up a little book before me and said: "Do you know this? It is the book the little girl wanted to give you after you had stolen all her other treasures."

"'This time I kept it; and I am trying to read it. See, she wrote these words in it; and here also is my name, and under it, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." I read some of the little book to my mate. He was very downcast, and it comforted him, too.' These two men gladly received my instructions. They remained in the Kushiro penitentiary until, with many others, they were released by Imperial decree at the time of the Empress-Dowager's death a few years ago. They came at once to Tokio, and united with the church."

HAPPY FAMILY,

When They Got Rid of the Coffee Habit.

A little woman out in Oswego, Ills., tells about her husband having determined to see if he could not make her quit coffee drinking, which he believed to be the cause of her constant neuralgia and general nervousness, brought home several packages of Postum Food Coffee, which he had discovered, by trying elsewhere, to be good.

She says: "What in the world he brought home five packages for I could not understand; nevertheless I quit coffee and started in on Postum Food Coffee. I did not have much faith in the change doing me any good, but was astonished to discover that my neuralgia left me almost at once, and the nervous troubles kept getting less and less.

"Little daughter at that time had been ill and could eat little or nothing. She was pale and thin. As soon as I discovered how Postum treated me, I began to give it to her. She liked it very much, and would drink it when she would take nothing else. She began to pick up rapidly and got plump and round and rosy.

"I don't care what sort of food there is in Postum so long as it treats me as it has. It is plain enough the food contained in Postum Coffee is good, and that's all we want to know. I am rid of neuralgia and nervousness, and am a healthy woman. Husband has also been improved, and daughter is well and happy, as I stated above." With best wishes, Mrs. Nellie Treman.

A TRIUMPH OF SCIENCE.

Reader, do you know what real cocoa is? To economical housewives, and wide-awake people generally, the best cocoa and that of Van Houten are synonymous terms. The cocoa manufactured by that well-known firm is a preparation from the very best cocoa-beans, and contains all the valuable nutritive and stimulating properties natural to cocoa. The cocoa-bean contains an alkaloid called "Theobromine," which is the principle of the "cup that cheers, but does not inebriate."

The great point of difference between the stimulating properties of alcohol, and that of theobromine is, that the use of the former causes a subsequent depression, which is proportioned to the amount of stimulation it has previously brought about; the use of the latter (theobromine) is unattended by such unpleasant after-effects. Of course, only a first-class cocoa, such as Van Houten's, will work in the aforesaid manner. That cocoa has been described as "A triumph of science!" It is absolutely pure, entirely soluble, and easy of assimilation and digestion by the weakest stomach. It costs but a trifle, being less than one cent per cup; and it is the simplest drink to make ready, of the whole catalogue of possible beverages. It smells so good, and tastes so delicious, that when you try it you will certainly exclaim: "Ah! indeed, it is a triumph of science!"

A Novel Church Thermometer

REV. J. CLAYTON YOUKER, of Oak Park, Ill., has devised a novel and very successful method of raising sufficient money to pay for erecting a church edifice. The lot is a large one, at Washington boulevard and Euclid avenue. A chapel has just been dedicated, where the congregation meets for service while the larger church is being completed. Mr. Youker placed beside his pulpit a huge thermometer eight feet in height. After the dedication service, he explained that the enthusiasm of the meeting was expected to wax so warm that the mercury in the thermometer might rise to the $12,000 mark at the top of the scale. For each $100 contributed the mercury would rise one degree. Before the morning service was over the thermometer registered 52 degrees, equal to $5,200. In the afternoon snow began to fall as the service opened. In spite of this the fluid in the thermometer rose steadily, and at night stood at 100 degrees, equal to $10,000.

REV. J. CLAYTON YOUKER

Dr. Youker's new church will be known as the Euclid Avenue M. E. Church, of Oak Park, Ill. The congregation first held services in a deserted railway station, then in the parlor of a member's residence. This novel method of raising funds will doubtless be widely imitated.

Little Tots Helping Starving India

MARNE, IA., March 23, 1900.

Dear Christian Herald:—Mamma said I could write to ask if you had any of those mite boxes for India like you had in 1897. If so, would you send me three and I will take one to each of the Sunday schools in town? Mamma said she would explain it to them for me. Please let me know as soon as you can. Good-bye. From your little friend.

MAY DERBY,
(Six years old).

MAY AND ESTHER DERBY

Yes, little May; we have Mite Boxes in plenty and are sending you and Esther a package by this mail. We will be glad to supply Mite Boxes free to all the little folks in this broad land who wish to help save a life in India. It is the Lord's work and it is a grand and uplifting example to see the young children engage in it with such zeal. A blessing will surely rest upon those dear young workers.

The Red Letter Testament.

MCGREGOR, TEX., Mar. 24, 1900.

Dear Sir:—Many thanks. I think it the neatest book of the age. One can read it with a better understanding of what Jesus said, and that is the main feature we are after in the New Testament. I like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD better than any other paper. M. CAVET.

Christ's Words in Far Japan

UWAJIMA, JAPAN, Feb. 26, 1900.

Dear Editor:—The Red Letter New Testament has been received, and I am very much pleased with it. So are all my Japanese friends to whom I have shown it. It is just a good size for a traveling missionary and the print is excellent. It is unique and more satisfactory in every way than I expected it would be. W. P. TURNER.

ZOBO

THE MUSICAL MARVEL OF THE AGE.

You can play it. Not the slightest knowledge of music required. Hum into the mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest. It is a money-making and music-supplying feature for churches and all other entertainments.

CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND, PATERSON, N. J.

The above photograph represents the Church Choir Zobo Band of Paterson, N.J., which was organized by the church choir and organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for church purposes. It was a great success. Hundreds of church choirs have Zobo bands and find them of great value. Zobo Concerts always draw large audiences.

READ WHAT PASTORS AND ORGANISTS SAY ABOUT ZOBO:

Chas. W. Diehl, 107 West 127th Street, New York City, Music Director of S. S. Class of Harlem Presbyterian Church, says:

"I have used the Zobo Instruments in my Sunday School Class for the past year with big success."

Miss Hattie E. Kountz, of Springfield, S. D., organist, choir leader, says: "Zobo instruments received, and are all right, and we want more of them."

Rev. James C. Mitchell, of North Easton, N. J., says: "I have just received the Zobo cornet, and I am delighted with it; will organize a band."

Wm. F. Miller, organist and director of church choir of Park Ave. Baptist Church of Paterson, N. J., says: "I find the Zobo brass instruments to be first-class, and just what we needed. We have a 14-piece Zobo band and intend to enlarge it. We have had one Zobo concert and would say it was a big success."

Mac Blance Winfield, instructor of music at Gallaway Female College, of Searcy, Ark., says: "I am much pleased with the Zobo band instruments. I could not and would not do without them, either in my orchestra or in my clubs, as they give much beauty and volume to the orchestral parts." (This orchestra plays only high-class music.)

Also refer you to Rev. A. G. Stewart, of Raymond, S. D.; Rev. C. McKibbin, of East Grand Forks, Minn.; Rev. W. H. Sampson, of St. John, West New Brunswick, Canada; Rev. A. S. Willoughby, of Moorland, Ia.

Had we space we could quote thousands of such letters from pastors and prominent citizens who have Zobo instruments. With a full Zobo band A GRAND PIPE ORGAN EFFECT can be obtained. To Churches that have no pipe organ Zobo supplies the want at a small cost. Churches without a paid choir should organize a Zobo Church Choir band. It is a money-making and music-supplying feature. To you personally a Zobo cornet affords unlimited pleasure in your home, as you can play it with forcible effect without the aid of other Zobo instruments which usually constitute a complete Zobo band. The Zobo cornet is also an excellent accompaniment to a piano, organ, or any string instrument. We especially call the attention of vocalists to Zobo instruments, as they open up new possibilities for the improvement and high cultivation of the voice.

We were awarded first prize, Gold Medal, at the Greater American Exhibition, Omaha, Neb.

$1. SPECIAL OFFER. To introduce the new Musical Wonder, and to give you a chance to test our instruments and prove all our claims, we will send the Zobo Cornet, solid brass, highly polished and lacquered, 11 inches long, 5½ inch bell, with full instructions how to play, and our illustrated catalogue by mail, prepaid, for $1.00. This is an exceptional offer, and you should not miss it. We warrant each instrument just as represented, or money refunded. Send money by registered letter, post-office money order, a bank draft payable to our order, or have your store-keeper order for you.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

How Moody Met Sankey

The Beginning of a Spiritual Partnership that Lasted a Life-Time

THE International Convention of the Y. M. C. A., in 1871, was held in Indianapolis, Ind., writes E. G. Cleveland in Our Day. Mr. Moody had already gained some reputation from his Y. M. C. A. work in Chicago, and his success in missions. Ira D. Sankey had also been heard from outside of his home at Newcastle, Pa., for his ability to win souls by singing. Both had been at the convention one or two days before they met, and then only under rather novel circumstances. It was announced that "Mr. Moody, from Chicago," would conduct a prayer-meeting on a certain morning, at 6 o'clock, in a little room some distance from the Academy of Music, where the regular exercises were being held.

The service was half way through when Mr. Sankey arrived. He had scarcely been seated, when somebody touched him on the elbow, and turning around, he discovered that he was sitting beside the Rev. Robert McMillen, whom he happened to know quite well. McMillen asked Sankey to take charge of the singing at the service, explaining that there seemed to be nobody present who could lead. At the conclusion of a very lengthy prayer, McMillen nudged Sankey, and told him to start right in and sing. Without waiting for any further invitation, young Sankey arose and sang with wonderful feeling the words:

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

The congregation forgot to join in on the chorus, and Sankey finished the hymn by himself. Moody was well pleased with the singing during the remainder of the service. When the meeting was brought to a close, McMillen asked Sankey to step forward and he would introduce him to Moody. A procession was formed, which slowly made its way to the front of the room, where Moody was standing.

As Sankey drew near, Moody stepped out and took him by the hand.

"Where are you from?" Moody asked.

"Pennsylvania," replied Sankey.

"Married or single?"

"Married. I have a wife and one child." was the reply.

"What do you do for a living when you are at home?"

"I am in the government service," Mr. Sankey answered.

All this time Moody had been holding Sankey's hand. Looking into his face with his keen, black eyes, he said:

"You'll have to give up your government position and come with me. You are just the man I have been looking for for a long time. I want you to come with me. You can do the singing, and I'll do the talking."

Shortly afterward, when Mr. Sankey was more inclined to be wavering than anything else, a card was brought to him. He examined it and found it was from Moody, and asked him to meet him at a certain street corner that evening at six o'clock. Without knowing what he was wanted for, Sankey wrote an acceptance upon the back of the card and returned it to Moody. Together, with a few friends, he went to the appointed place at six o'clock that evening, and in a few seconds Moody came along. Without even stopping to speak, Moody walked on and into a store nearby and asked permission to use a store box. The permission was given, and Moody rolled the large box onto the street corner, and then calling Sankey aside, asked him to get up and sing something. Sankey complied, and after one or two hymns had been sung, Moody crawled up onto the box and commenced to preach. The workingmen were just on their way home from the mills and factories, and in a short time Moody had secured a large crowd. Mr. Sankey says he preached that evening from that storebox as he has never heard him preach since, and Sankey, before that week was over, had sent his resignation to the Sec'y of the Treasury.

A SIDE LINE

Good Work by a Traveling Man

A traveling man, Mr. Julius C. Meyer, of 5 Fairlawn street, Cleveland, has cured a umber of his friends of stomach troubles, yspepsia, bowel complaints, etc., by urging e use of Grape-Nuts breakfast food. He ys:

"A business man, a friend of mine, was so n down that he left his business several onths because he could not eat enough to pply the strength required to work. After pending hundreds of dollars in journeys to ineral springs for baths, in medicines, atendants, etc., without success, I recommend- Grape-Nuts food, and at the end of thirty ays he told me he never enjoyed a better apetite, was never more energetic or felt more ke work than then. This change came round entirely by reason of his leaving off e ordinary food and using principally Grape-Nuts at his meals. He said he would not be ithout the food at a dollar a pound.

"A lady friend of my wife was suffering so ith dyspepsia that she was compelled to give p her work, as no food would stay on her tomach for five minutes. The doctors told er there was no hope for her ever enjoying ood of any kind. She started in on Grape-Nuts and used nothing else for about three months, when she was completely cured and eady to attend to her business. She takes Grape-Nuts with her every day. She said to ny wife: 'Had it not been for you and Grape-Nuts, I surely would have died. I shall never orget your kindness to me.'

"In my own family we have used the food or about a year, constantly, and have all enoyed better health since its introduction. It as done us more good than we ever expected to get from a food."

There is a deep, underlying reason why Grape-Nuts food cures people of dyspepsia, nd builds them up into a fine condition of ealth and strength. Certain principles are bstracted from the grains and made up into he food known as Grape-Nuts, producing a owerful, concentrated food that gives certain and well-defined results. The proof is in he eating. There are hundreds of thousands f people that can give testimony regarding he strengthening properties of this famous ood.

AN EASTER SONG

GLAD Eastertide has come again;
Once more the people raise
Their voices in sweet songs of love,
And songs of heartfelt praise
To him who rose upon this day
From out his rock-bound grave;
To him who on the shameful cross
His life so freely gave.

That he might save a sinful world—
Yes, 'twas for this he died;
For this he suffered cruel pain;
For this was crucified—
But on the third day he arose,
Death could not hold its prey;
The Prince of Darkness vanquished lies,
The Prince of Peace holds sway.

And now we come to him in prayer,
Well knowing he will hear
Our earnest cry, and listen while
We our petition bear.

Our precious Saviour, bless us all;
Bless each and every one
Who comes to thee in prayer to-day,
Oh, keep us all thine own;
Let no temptation draw us back
Into the world again.
Be thou our strength, our shield, our help,
In pleasure, as in pain.

And all the wand'ring ones, O Lord,
Who still are far from thee,
Bring them, too, safe within thy fold,
Let them thy beauty see.

And Saviour, grant us this, our prayer:
Send to the nations peace;
Let the green olive branches thrive,
Let all contention cease;
Let brother clasp the brother's hand,
And cannon silenced be;
Let nation linked to nation stand,
And all be turned to thee.

The Gospel in the Tombs Prison

SOMETIME ago a committee of gentlemen interested in prison reform, including an ex-Governor of New York State, two Judges of the Court of Appeals and other noted laymen, reported that it costs the taxpayers on an average of $1,600 for every criminal brought to justice. This makes the work of protecting society against such people by the State an expensive luxury. The Gospel Mission to the Tombs aims not only at saving the unfortunates in the city prison, but reclaiming those who have fallen into sin, and restoring them again as good citizens at a much less cost. The missionary chaplain, Rev. J. J. Munro, devotes all his time to the work, Sunday and week days, and the report of his labor for the past year, just issued, will compare favorably with any work of the kind in any part of the land. During 1899, through this mission, many persons were savingly reached for Christ, and others were restored to their families who for years had lived profligate lives. Some have united with churches, while others are now living sober, honest and industrious lives. The work is undenominational and unsectarian and depends entirely for its support on gifts from those who love him who said, "I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Christian and philanthropic people can help to make it a success. Mr. George E. Sterry, treasurer, 79 Pine street, New York city, will answer all inquiries and acknowledge contributions.

Many Requests for Prayer

A Boston reader of this journal, Mr. Franklin N. Walcott, writes us concerning the religious gatherings in Tremont Temple:

"About a year ago THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave a brief account of the daily noonday prayer-meeting held in Tremont Temple. I have received more requests for prayer from all parts of the country from your readers, than from the readers of all other papers combined. These meetings began Jan. 30, 1899, at Tremont Temple, and they are now held at Tabernacle Baptist Church, Bodowin Square, Rev. Walter Calley, pastor. As this generous church gives us free use of their church, we have no expenses, pay no salaries, and take no collections. We have received over 4,000 requests for prayer, over 600 have reported answers to requests, and over 100 souls have been converted. We are interdenominational, and directed by a committee of ten, each belonging to a different church.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Samantha and the Poets

THOU messenger of righteous wrath,
By sorrow wrought,
Ring out o'er every trodden path
Love freighted thought,
Of how our glorious Christian lands
Of well earned fame,
Are struggling 'neath the murderous hands
Of licensed shame.

With tongue of fire these crimes condemn.
In love divine,
Speak thou these mighty truths to men.
And victory's thine.
Go forth, and benediction sweet
Shall on thee rest;
Men's hearts shall melt, and thou shalt meet
Those thou hast blessed.

Write thou, in words of burning flame,
With tear-dipped pen;
So shalt thou touch, with blush of shame,
The hearts of men.
Unfearing write, and thou may'st claim
The right to win
The golden sheaves of well-earned fame,
And bring them in.

And then our God shall raise in power
His kingly hand,
And for thee build a mighty tower
Of jewels grand.
And womanhood, with blessings rare,
Shall strew thy way,
And songs of gladness everywhere
Hallow thy day.

The World's Bitter Cry

How sore is the need of heathen lands for Christianity is told by that great traveler, Mrs. Isabella Bishop, in her recently published work. The impression made upon her by her observation of the countries through which she has traveled is thus summarized in her own words: "My journeys in Asia have given me some knowledge of the unchristianized Asiatic world. In those years I have become a convert to the necessity of missions, not by seeing the success of missions, but by seeing the misery of the unchristianized world. From the seaboard of Japan to those shady streams by which the Jewish exiles wept when they remembered Zion, and from the icy plateaus of Northern Asia down to the Equator, I have seen nothing but sorrow, sin and shame, of which we have not the remotest conception."

A Sermon that Changed a Life

From Mrs. L. H., a reader of this journal, we have received a letter from which the following passage is taken, as it may be helpful to others:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the best religious paper I ever read. Grandpa says the same. My children like it for its illustrations and my friends like it too. I think a consecrated pen and printing press are two of the greatest powers for God in the earth. They reach where a minister's voice is never heard. A good paper is never done. It may be passed from friend to friend and it always carries its uplifting beneficent influences with it.

My late husband was not a Christian. He was sick for about three months. About two weeks before his death he requested me to read Dr. Talmage's sermon for him. The text was "The Lord Sent the Hornet." I read until it explained that the ills and affliction were to draw us from earth to heaven. He realized the truth of the sermon. The sermon printed reached where the sermon preached could not. He died triumphant in Christ. Death had no terrors for him. He smiled and kissed us all good-by, and passed away from the hornets of this life to be forever with the Lord.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Transvaal Outlook, by Albert Stickney, is a timely and most instructive book on the present war in South Africa. It gives an accurate view of the military situation, with all its peculiar problems; discusses the military methods and tactics of both combatants; reviews the political situation; gives the Boer version of the Burghers' claims and closes with a strong appeal in their behalf. The book has three excellent maps, covering the fields of actual operations in Natal, the Free State and Cape Colony and the Transvaal. Cloth binding, 139 pp. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, publishers.

The Life and Work of Dwight L. Moody, by J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D. This is a book by one who for many years was a co-worker with Mr. Moody. In his preface Dr. Chapman says: "I write because I loved him and I felt that I might in this way pay tribute to the most consistent Christian man I have ever known. I am confident that there has not been, in these latter days, a man who was more truly filled with the Holy Ghost than he." The volume, which consists of 554 pages royal octavo, is well illustrated and bound in cloth. Price, $2. John C. Winston & Co., Philadelphia, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

The Racine Bath Cabinet
is a strong, double-walled room, rubber-coated inside and outside and fitted with a door. When ready for use, the walls are rigid, yet by merely tipping the cabinet you fold it in a second into a 6-inch space. It places in your home all the benefits of the best Turkish bath rooms.

For the relief of rheumatism, kidney and blood diseases, no other treatment can approach it. The hot air bath forces the impurities that cause the disease out from five million pores at once. In all sanitariums the Turkish bath is the most important treatment. All who value cleanliness, complexion and health will eventually own one of these cabinets. The quieting, refreshing, invigorating effects of the bath are the pleasantest sensations possible. One bath will always stop a cold.

The Racine Cabinet is the best one on the market. We sell on approval, to be returned at our expense, if not satisfactory, direct to users for $5, express or freight prepaid. Send to-day for our handsome illustrated catalogue, and order from that

Rheumatism and Gout

A prominent physician writes:

DEAR SIRS;—Replying to yours on the use of TARTARLITHINE as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are a little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished in years.

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

Joyous Service

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 22. Matt. 22: 1-14

SOCIETIES, it may be presumed, have the option of considering either the topic, or the parable, which has not the remotest connection with it, but was given to teach a very different, but no less important lesson. We can imagine with what sadness the parable was spoken. The invitation to the guests had been rejected with so much levity: it was about to be rejected with so much insolence and wickedness, that the Saviour's heart bled as he foresaw the punishment that must follow. It was not only exclusion from the feast that would result—a fate dark enough, but swift and severe retribution brought on by the criminality of the invited guests. So the places of those who had scorned the invitation were to be filled, and the invitation went out indiscriminately to wayfarers, who were not expecting such honor. But the standard of fitness was not lowered. The same conditions must be fulfilled by the new guests as were required of those for whom the feast was originally prepared. Purity and righteousness must characterize all who come to the King's banquet, whether they are Jews or Gentiles. According to Oriental custom, wedding garments were provided by the host, but one of the guests, thinking his own garments were good enough, rejects the garment the king had provided and appears in his ordinary attire. At once the king notices the omission and inquires how such a guest had found admission. Perhaps the man had thought that, in the emergency of filling the vacant places, he might presume on a relaxation of the rules. Evangelists and worldly preachers, eager above all things to make a record of numbers, are apt to convey such an impression. Their hearers are told that they have only to accept Christ, only to say, "I believe," and in a moment their souls are saved and angelic messengers fly up to heaven with the glad news of their salvation. A more mischievous doctrine cannot be preached. Men's souls are not saved by any such "hocus pocus." The turning from darkness to light, the renunciation of sin, the surrender of the soul to Christ for him to renew, which are involved in the wedding garment, are not done by the light utterance of a formula. Many, it is true, are called, and we are right in inviting all, but we have no right to deceive men as to the conditions of God's choosing. He does not choose any who want to keep their sin-stained garb; who are willing to enter if they may retain their selfishness, their worldliness, or their sinful habits and associations. They come to the feast, but when the King enters and sees them, their impudent intrusion is promptly dealt with. Without holiness, it is impossible to please him.

There is much in the parable to call for serious self-examination and for an earnest desire to have the wedding garment of a pure and spiritual nature which God gives to those who seek it; but nothing to enjoin the joyous service, which is also a duty. It is not by gloomy and depressed spirits that we gain true religion. The service of God is a joyous service, because it springs from a loyal, loving heart, which delights in rendering it. When the soul has been attuned to the divine harmony; when sin, the cause of opposition to God, has been removed and the soul is in accord with him, there is joy in the heart that the world can never give. Service, then, is not rendered because it is a duty, or because God commands it, but as the natural expression of the love which pervades the whole being. It is not strained, nor spasmodic, but flows from the renewed man out of the abundance of love in his heart. "I delight to do thy will O God" is the unconstrained utterance of his life, and he finds a joy in the doing it that is its own reward. It is easy to prove that our natures are so constituted as to find their highest gratification in service. Let anyone who is gloomy and dispirited do some kindness to another and he will find his spirits rise immediately. He will be happier for what he has done. There is no joy equal to the joy of disinterested service.

MAKE MONEY!
Agents clear $150.00 a Month selling the "BOSS" CHURN

Something entirely new in butter making. Makes butter of the best quality in 2 minutes. One agent said he made butter in 58 seconds, and got 10 lbs. of fine granular butter, while with the barrel churn he only got 8 lbs. 5 oz. from the same amount of cream. Figure this up and you will see that the "Boss" Churn pays for itself in a very short time.

You can churn a half gallon as easily as three or four gallons, thus doing away with the necessity of keeping the cream until it is over ripe.

By a system of gearing shown in cut you are enabled to agitate the cream a thousand times more strongly than with any other churn. This rapid agitation at once breaks the globules in the cream, and the butter is almost instantly made and gathered, two minutes being the time required to do this. It is the wonder of the 20th century. People never tire of seeing the butter come so quickly. The "Boss" Churn causes great excitement wherever it is shown. Great money maker, as well as butter maker. Bought in lots of half dozen you make over $15.00 clear profit; if you order in lots of a hundred you make $4.00 on each churn sold. Any hustling agent can sell one hundred a month easily.

Fully Guaranteed to do exactly as represented.
You can make a fortune selling them.

Do not delay—get to work at once in the greatest money-making business you ever handled. Get in ahead of others. The "Boss" is taking like wild-fire. Very simple, easily cleaned, will last a life-time. Make butter in two minutes before ten people and nine will buy. You can easily make $10.00 a day working for us. Nothing ever invented sells like it. Send at once for price list and circulars. Write anyway.

REGISTERED TRADE MARK.

SKIRT BINDINGS.

When you buy Bias Velveteen or Brush Edge Skirt Binding, get the best.

The way to tell the best is to look for the S. H. & M. registered trade mark on the back or on the label. If the trade mark isn't there the goods are not the genuine S. H. & M. and you should not allow anybody to convince you that they are "just the same" or "just as good." Nothing is as good as the best.

The S. H. & M. Bindings come in the widest variety of fashionable shades.

They fit the curves of the skirt perfectly—just as if they were a part of the fabric itself.

The S. H. & M. Bias Velveteen Bindings are the most elegant and distinctive bindings that can be made. They give that rich, velvet finish which every woman wants on the edge of her skirt. The S. H. & M. Brush Edge Bindings not only excel all others in the neatness of their appearance, but are by far the most durable bindings of the kind made.

All Skirt Bindings bearing the S. H. & M. trade mark are the handsomest and most serviceable and durable bindings that it is possible to make.

Nothing but the best bindings can be good enough for your skirts.

It costs much more to put bindings on a skirt than the original price of the bindings, and bindings which never look well nor fit well, soon wear out and have to be replaced, are by far the most costly bindings in the end.

All good dry goods stores sell S. H. & M. Skirt Bindings.

THE REAL AUNT SAMANTHA AT HOME

THE SIMPLE LIFE OF ONE WHOSE WRITINGS DELIGHT MULTITUDES

MISS MARIETTA HOLLEY AND HER CHARMING DOMESTIC SURROUNDINGS

"BONNIE-VIEW," THE HOME OF MISS HOLLEY, NEAR ADAMS, JEFFERSON COUNTY, NEW YORK

If literary fame is to be measured by the loving hold an author has upon the hearts of a great multitude of readers all over the globe Marietta Holley, whose writings have charmed the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the last four months or more, has already reached the very ummit of popularity. They have niled or wept with her in her arying moods, laughed at her irth-provoking sallies, or burned ith just indignation in sympathy ith her scathing denunciation of ice and wrong; they have thrilled ith her patriotism, and mourned ith her in her sorrow over the misortunes of our poor "soldier oys." The experiences of Josiah llen and Aunt Samantha, while n their travels, are told with a kill and piquant interest that fasinate all who read them.

But it is not merely as a literary ntertainer that Marietta Holley hines brightly above all her conemporaries; her writings stamp ier as a teacher and philosopher of io mean order. She writes ever vith a purpose, and it is always high one, as the remarkable chapers from her pen now running in hese pages sufficiently show.

Parentage and Training

Since the "Tour Around the World" began, we have received many letters from readers desiring to know something of the life and surroundings of the author, whose name has already become a household word in thousands of Christian homes. Miss Holley was born near Adams, Jefferson county, New York, where she still lives, and where five generations of her family have resided. Her maternal grandfather was Lemuel Taber, or "Squire Taber," as he was called, being a Justice of the Peace. He emigrated to Jefferson county from Rhode Island, and settled on a tract of land situated on the west bank of a small stream, called Bear Creek. He was finely educated for those days, and taught higher mathematics and surveying. The maiden name of his wife was Sarah Brightman. Miss Holley's paternal grandfather was David Holley, his wife's maiden name, Sarah Southworth. They came to Jefferson county from Connecticut, his widowed mother coming with them, and, like the other Connecticut Holleys, they claim to be the descendants of the eminent English astronomer, Edmund Halley, whose descendants in this country spell their name Holley. Halley was Secretary of the Royal Society and made many notable astronomical discoveries and was a friend of Sir Isaac Newton.

John Milton Holley and Mary Taber came immediately after their marriage to live in a cottage on the very spot where Miss Holley's home, called "Bonnie-view," now stands, and they never left that home until they were borne out to their last slumber. Here all their children were born, Marietta being the youngest of seven, the eldest dying in infancy. She received the rudiments of an English education at a neighboring school, and later, with the exception of teachers in music and French, she pursued her studies at home. Endowed with quick perception and ready wit, and being a close observer, with an ability to describe whatever she saw or imagined, she has been able to place before her readers some of the most entertaining books that have ever been given to the public. They have attained a wide reputation, and their humor has seldom been equaled and never surpassed. Underneath her wit, pathos and satire, one discovers a principle and a motive, coupled with an earnest desire to improve and benefit mankind.

MISS MARIETTA HOLLEY, THE DISTINGUISHED AUTHOR

Whose latest work, "Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife," is now running in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Famous in Many Lands

Miss Holley was extremely fond of music, and gave lessons on the piano for several years. She was also a lover of painting and literature, but she wisely chose the latter as her life-work. She is widely known as "Josiah Allen's Wife," and under this signature her writings have found a warm welcome with all classes, and in every civilized country of the globe. Large numbers of her last book were taken to Africa, and she has recently received from Japan words of warm appreciation and praise. Her works have been translated into other languages, and the foreign press has been quite as appreciative as the American. Few authors have received more warm, heart-felt words of appreciation. Benson J. Lossing, the distinguished historian, wrote:

Miss Holley is a wise and efficient reformer, an acute and moral philosopher, a genuine humorist, and a most skilful limner of special places of social life everywhere to be seen. Her "eppisodin'" sermons are dramatic and incisive; her philosophy is self-demonstrative and her humor always has beneficence and not mere amusement as its prime motive. It is genial, and yet so keenly satirical, that, like the scimeter of Saladin, that cleaved the floating gauze without disturbing its

1. These questions are printed Four weeks in advance so as to afford all our readers an opportunity to answer them.
2. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.
3. Answers must be received at this office two weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.
4. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.
5. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.
6. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.
7. Write only on one side of the sheet and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.
8. Address all communications intended for this department, EDITOR THE MAIL BAG,

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

These Questions Will be Answered May 16

1. Should unconverted persons be engaged, under any circumstances, as Sunday School teachers?
2. What is the greatest obstruction ever penetrated by a shell from a modern big gun, and what is the greatest distance a shot from one of these guns has been fired?
3. How many changes were made in the revised New Testament?
4. What is the origin of the word "poltroon"?
5. A Christian lady wonders why, during the past ten years, she has not received answers to prayers for the necessities of life, and for money needed to purchase medicines. What reasonable reply can be given to this harassing "why"?
6. Should a Christian trade with a grocer who keeps a liquor department in his store?
7. What was the first American newspaper?
8. Is there any reason to believe that Christ suffered, at any time during his earthly career, from sickness?
9. What living poet in the English language is entitled to pre-eminence, on the ground of poetic diction and ideas?
10. Our Saviour says, in Matthew 7: 13, 14, "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat." How can this statement be reconciled with the teaching that the world is to be brought to Christ?

Questions of the Week

1. Why is May so generally tabooed for weddings and June so popular?

The ancient Romans regarded June as the most propitious month for weddings, especially if the day chosen were that of the full moon or the conjunction of the sun and moon. Ovid tells us that this month was named in honor of Juno, the divine match-maker. May, on the other hand, was under the influence of spiiits adverse to happy households. These superstitions were retained by Rome's conquerors, passed on into the Middle Ages, and so down to our own day. G. E. KRAUTH.

2. Has a counsel a right in law or ethics to drag in or abuse an outside person while discussing a case, even though that case may be strengthened by the evidence?

Much depends upon the question whether the interests of justice demand the bandying about of a name of an outside party whose reputation may thus be blackened beyond reparation. If the person in question can be subpœnaed to give evidence, the truth may be brought out fairly and squarely and the witness will not be at the disadvantage of being made to set himself right before the court and the public, or to bear the stigma cast on him in a trial in which he was not permitted to appear. M. KNIGHT.

3. What five proverbs are most frequently quoted in ordinary American conversation?

The following proverbs rank in the order given in the list made up from letters received in answer to this question: 1. Honesty is the best policy; 2. A rolling stone gathers no moss; 3. A stitch in time saves nine; 4. The early bird catches the worm; 5. Birds of a feather flock together. The list of J. D. Meese, Pennsylvania, has the first, second and fourth of the five elect proverbs. K. D. Krenell, New York, has the second, third and fourth. No other list contains more than two of the five.—EDITOR MAIL-BAG.

4. Is there any symbolism in Bible numbers?

Numbers in the Bible are no doubt frequently symbolic, but in studying their symbolism, there is danger of drawing unwarranted conclusions. Number one suggests unity; three, the Trinity; four is the human number (four seasons, four quarters of the earth, four winds of heaven); seven suggests the union of the divine and human. It is also used very frequently in the Mosaic law. It is regarded as suggestive of perfection. There are seven petitions in the Lord's Prayer, and seven is used again and again in the Revelation. Twelve, which is the multiple of three and four—the human and divine—would seem to suggest heavenly abundance. The heavenly city has twelve foundations, twelve gates, twelve manner of fruits on its trees. R. S. STUART.

5. Who is the author of the following lines and to whom do the words in italics refer?

> I held it truth, with him who sings,
> To one clear harp in divers tones;
> That men may rise on stepping stones
> Of their dead selves to higher things.

The lines occur In Memoriam, by Tennyson. In vol. II. of The Life of Tennyson, by his son, it is stated that the allusion is to Goethe. Tennyson always admired the variety and depth of Goethe's writings and hence, as a contemporary, intimates, regarded him as the singer "in divers tones." JOHN D. MEESE.

[Persons who have overlooked the reference to Goethe of which Mr. Meese speaks have presumed that Tennyson thought of Augustine, of whom Longfellow writes:

> St. Augustine, well hast thou said,
> That of our failures we can frame
> A ladder if we will but tread
> Beneath our feet each deed of shame

EDITOR MAIL-BAG.]

6. Why were Cleopatra's needles so called?

The two red granite obelisks, or "Cleopatra's Needles," which formerly stood in front of the temple of Cæsar in Alexandria, Egypt, were popularly so called on account of a false tradition that they were brought to Alexandria in the time of Cleopatra. One of them now stands on the Thames embankment in London, and the other in Central Park, New York. ELIZABETH H. DAVIS.

7. What was the first English newspaper?

The first authentic English periodical newspaper now known to exist was issued in May, 1622, by Nathaniel Butler, Nicholas Bourne and Thomas Archer. This newspaper was established in London, under the title of The Weekly News. A copy can still be seen in the British Museum. It is entitled "The 23d of May—The Weekly News from Italy, Germany, &c, London, printed by J. D. for Nicholas Bourne and Thomas Archer."

JOSEPH C. HEIDMEYER.

[It is sometimes claimed that the English Mercurie, said to have been published in 1588, was the first English newspaper; but the claim is generally regarded as apocryphal.—EDITOR MAIL-BAG].

8. What is the most popular anonymous poem in the English language?

There is probably no more popular anonymous poem than the one beginning "If I should die to-night." Were Abraham Lincoln answering the question he would be likely to claim the distinction for his favorite poem, "O why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

S. M. CAMPBELL.

9. What letter of the alphabet may be said to have played an important part in the career of the great Napoleon?

The letter M is curiously coupled with Napoleon I. It was the initial letter of the names of several of the generals against whom he fought, six of his marshals, twenty-six of his generals of division, the two men who prepared his memoirs, and no less than twelve of his famous battles. Milan was the first enemy's capital into which he triumphantly entered, and Moscow was the last. It is worthy of notice, too, that his famous passage of the Alps, his declaration of war against England, his assumption of the title of emperor, and thirty other scarcely less important events of his life took place in the two months which begin with M (March and May). May was also the month of his death. GEORGE S. DUNN.

10. Has any light been shed on the act of Lamech, the commission of which he regrets in such strong terms in the record of Genesis 4: 23, 24?

The remarkable poem which Lamech uttered has perhaps never been satisfactorily explained. The view commonly taken has been that Lamech had slain a man in self-defence, and that the drift of his speech is to assure his wives, Adah and Gillah, by the preservation of the murderer Cain, that an unintentional homicide, as he himself was, could be in no danger. Jerome relates a tradition that the man whom Lamech slew, either accidentally or in self-defence, was Cain himself. The view, however, of some German theologians who read the third clause, "Had I slain a man for smiting me," making it hypothetical, is that the words are Lamech's song of exultation on the invention of the sword by his son Tubal-cain, in the possession of which he foresaw a great advantage over any enemies. Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. E. A., New Egypt, N. J. Has the biography of Christ ever been written?

"The Life of Christ" has probably been written a hundred times or more. These, by a wide variety of authors, from the early church historians down to the very latest in our own times, have in all cases been based mainly on the simple facts of the Gospel narrative, though many of the biographers have availed themselves of legend and tradition not mentioned in the Gospels, but preserved in early monastic manuscripts. Farrar, Edersheim and Dr. Talmage are among the most complete of the latter-day biographers.

J. R. C., Keosauqua, Ia. Were the feast of the Passover and that of the unleavened bread one and the same feast?

Yes. The Passover was designated as "the Feast of Unleavened Bread." It was one of the Jewish "Pilgrimage Feasts," the others being the Feasts of Pentecost, of Weeks, of Wheat-harvest (or First-Fruits) and of Tabernacles. The Passover was kept in the month Abib, in commemoration of the rescue from Egypt.

Herman W., Ellettsville, Ind. Who was Cain's wife?

Her identity has always puzzled the investigators. Tradition calls her "Save," or "Azura." The Biblical narrative implies the existence of a considerable population in Cain's time, since he feared that he would be murdered in return for the death of Abel (Gen. 4: 14). The neighbors, among whom he fled, must have been relatives of Cain, and he must have taken his wife from among his own kindred.

M. G., Granby, Conn. Who has charge of the work of collecting children to be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S summer home at Mont-Lawn?

The children who are given summer outings at Mont-Lawn are usually brought to us by the pastors, missionaries and Sunday School workers who labor among the poor of the New York tenement districts; and applications for outings are made by them to this office through letter or personal visit. Children who have been to the Home sometime come themselves, or write touching appea asking for another vacation there; mothe of the children also make request. Ov two thousand very poor children of the slun are given a ten days' outing each at Mor Lawn every summer. The cost per chil covering food, shelter, transportation ba and forth, medical examination and ca taker's attention, is $3 per child; $9 giv three little waifs an outing; and for $21 seve unfortunates can be made happy for ten day

Mrs. J. S. D., Rochester, N. Y. What was th origin of the rosary and by whom was it fir worn?

It originated with the early hermits a monks. Two church historians, Palladius a Sozomen, state that the Abbot Paul in th desert of Pherine, repeated the Lord's Pray in Latin 300 times, and at each repetitio dropped a small stone into his lap. The rosa as now used in Catholic churches, however, of comparatively modern origin. It is said have been brought from the East by retur ing Crusaders. It has been found in u among the Mohammedans and Brahmins well. In the Roman church, it was first use by the Dominican monks.

E. C., Lenoxdale, Mass. Do not such passag as John 18: 28 and 19: 14 imply that our Lo celebrated the Passover feast one day earli than the Jews of his time did?

Dean Farrar and some other commentato take that view, but the general opinion scholars is opposed to it. The accounts the other three evangelists are so definite a clear in fixing the time of the supper as that the Jewish Passover that we are bound to s if there is no way of harmonizing John's a count with theirs. There really is such a wa You must remember that the celebration the Passover covered seven days. This m morial meal, when the lamb was eaten, w preliminary. The Passover was to begin the fifteenth day of the month Nisan. Th according to Jewish reckoning, was the tin that we should call the evening of the fo teenth of Nisan, as the Jews reckoned th day from sunset to sunset. It was a time solemnity and gloom differing materially fro the festivities which followed and which we the Passover proper. It was probably tho to which John refers, when he speaks (18: 2 of the Jews dreading defilement lest th should not be able to eat the Passover. Th other passage (19: 14) where the day of th crucifixion is described as the preparation the Passover may mean the preparation f the great Sabbath of the Passover week, whi as John says (19: 31) "was a high day." Frid was generally known as the "preparation," a at that period of the year it was regarded very sacred. With these explanations John's words, the narratives of the oth evangelists are in harmony.

Inquirer, Luckey, O. 1. Were the inhabitants Galilee, in the time of Christ, Jews; if not what lineage were they? 2. Of what natio ality were the twelve apostles?

1. In the time of Christ, Galilee was one the three great provinces of Palestine, th others being Judea and Samaria. Galile though it comprised the ancient territories Issachar, Zebulem, Asher and Naphtali, h a greatly mixed population, in which th "heathen" element (Syrians, Phoenician Arabs, Greeks) preponderated, with only comparatively small proportion of Jews. Ev in the time of Isaiah it has been known "Galilee of the nations" (Isaiah 9: 1.) 2. Th apostles were all either Galileans by birth residence, except Judas Iscariot, who was native of Keriott, a village of Judea. A Governor's Eloquent Plea for India

Hon. G. W. Atkinson, Governor of West Virginia, has sent this "open letter" to the press of that State, in which he makes an eloquent plea for the famine-sufferers in India:

CHARLESTON, W. VA.

To the Citizens of West Virginia:—This office is in receipt of a communication from The Christian Herald, published in New York, a newspaper of general circulation and unquestionable responsibility, in which the statement is emphasized that a large portion of the population of India is in a starving condition, resulting from a famine, which, in the dispensation of a Divine Providence, seems to have fallen upon that country and its inhabitants. The Christian Herald is now loading two ships with supplies for the starving people, male and female, old and young, in different sections of far-away India. This great religious newspaper asks me to officially and publicly present the facts to the citizens of our State.

While a famine is impossible in a country like our own, and while we are now in the midst of plenty and prosperity on every hand, we should be willing and ready, it seems to me, to respond to the call of The Christian Herald to send to the publisher of that paper such sums of money as we can conveniently spare from our own needs, to be expended for the purchase of food and clothing for the tens of thousands that are now in the actual throes of starvation in India. The Christian Herald is entirely responsible, and any funds sent to that newspaper will be honestly and judiciously expended, and I trust that it will be the pleasure of a large number of West Virginians to promptly respond to its call for charitable aid.

Tributes from Great Minds

John G. Whittier wrote as follows, ncerning a book of poems which Miss olley published in 1887:

I have read thy poems with great satisfac-n. With the wit and wisdom of Josiah len's wife I have long been familiar. I read y beautiful poem, "The Deacon's Daugh-," with moist eyes.

Bishop J. P. Newman wrote of Miss olley's writings, that they are

An antidote for the blues, a tonic mental prostration, a cure-all for y kind of imaginary woe, a relax-on from intellectual taxation, a ovocation for wholesale laughter d an inspiration to godliness.

U. S. Senator Blair, the late ances Willard, and many other minent Americans, besides nu-erous other leading authorities literary matters, both here and road, have expressed similar gh opinions.

Miss Holley's father died sev-al years ago and she has abun-ntly proved her filial love by ring for her aged and widowed other and surrounding her with ery comfort until her death. Miniature water-alls, vine-covered summer-houses be-eath the shade of evergreens, rustic eats, and hammocks hanging in vari-ous shady nooks and corners evince the taste of their owner. Miss Holley is very fond of being out-of-doors, and during the summer months, when she does not write much, she passes a great deal of her time superintending the work on her grounds. Afternoons she is fond of driving on the pleasant roads surrounding Bonnie-view, for some of the finest and most striking scenery in northern New York may be found within two or three miles of her home.

Marietta Holley's liberality is well-known. She is an unostentatious giver, and is a never ceasing benefactor to those among whom her lines are cast. Her face is never turned away from the poor, nor is precious time or urgent duty weighed in the balance against merciful deeds. Although a busy woman, she excels in hospitality, yet there is in her character an entire absence of egotism or ostentation. A maiden sister resides with her, and a little girl who needed a home finds a warm shelter under her roof.

MISS HOLLEY AT WORK IN HER STUDY AT BONNIE-VIEW

The Author's Desk is Hidden by the Projecting Mantel

Miss Holley's first book was published in 1873; its title is My Opinions and Betsy Bobbett's. Her later works are as follows: Samantha at the Centennial, My Wayward Pardner, The Mormon Wife (an illustrated poem), Miss Richard's Boy, Samantha at Saratoga, Sweet Cicely, Poems, Samantha Among the Brethren, Samantha Among the Colored Folks, Samantha at the World's Fair, and Samantha in Europe. Her latest work, "The Tour Around the World," which she has specially undertaken for the benefit of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is affording intense delight and gratification every week to appreciative multitudes, who find the keenest enjoyment in her wholesome humor, no less than in her sturdy denunciation of wrong and championship of right.

By nearly every mail we receive letters expressing the writers' pleasure at being a sharer in the experiences of Aunt Samantha's tour. Some of these letters are extremely interesting. A few are given below:

Dear Editor:—I have been a reader of your excellent paper over six years, and it has always been an inspiration. And dear Aunt Samantha! If anyone is capable of holding up the mirror so that all the wrong-doers can see just how bad they do look, it is she. Aunt Samantha lays the axe right at the root of the tree. She will be reckoned one of the greatest modern reformers and ought to be cheered. MRS. HANNAH MEAD.

Dear Editor:—I like to read "Around the World With Aunt Samantha," as it is the best of Aunt Samantha's stories. I would not read it at first. A Writer With a Mission

"'A Trip Around the World' is told in such a unique way," writes Mrs. C. A. Chapman, Guilford, Conn., "and brings out so many straight truths." "I think Arvilly's talk to the army officers the grandest temperance argument I ever heard," is the opinion expressed by Mr. Joseph E. Each, of Iowa, La. From Dauphin Island, Ala., Corporal F. P. Vaughan, U. S. A., writes:

Express my congratulations to the author of "The Tour." The hits made upon the Canteens are very well put, and I most sincerely hope the story will help in a very large measure to abolish the sale of intoxicants in post exchanges, or on any military reservation under the control of the United States. I have served in the United States Army and therefore have practical knowledge of the evils arising from this cause. Many in the ranks are watching, as it were, for the "lights along the shore," and your light will shine a long way. I sincerely hope that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will find its way into every squad-room or tent in the United States Army and in the ranks of other nations.

A reader in Conway, Mass., writes:

In reading in the last issue, "Around the World," by Josiah Allen's Wife, I began to think that she might have an influence as great as Harriet Beecher Stowe's in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Our photographs present some of the picturesque surroundings of Miss Holley's rural retreat, and afford the reader a glimpse of the home life of this remarkable woman, whose gifted imagination and facile pen have won her high literary honors at home and abroad. Her intense earnestness and her zeal for the right; her wholesome and always delightful humor; her rare insight into human nature and its weaknesses, and, finally, her impulsive energy in attacking and unmasking sham, hypocrisy and wickedness wherever found, have made her name and her work very dear to the American people. By THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S widely extended circle of readers in all parts of the world, she has been most cordially welcomed. She has already won their esteem and admiration by the courage she has shown in grappling with some of the leading public evils and abuses of the day and has found a way to their hearts by her fidelity to Christian principle, and her loyalty to American institutions and the American home.

EASTER REJOICINGS

. . . . Text: John 19: 41
"In the garden a new sepulchre."

LOOKING around the churches this morning, seeing flowers in wreaths and flowers in stars and flowers in crosses and flowers in crowns, billows of beauty, conflagration of beauty, you feel as if you stood in a small heaven.

You say these flowers will fade. Yes, but perhaps you may see them again. They may be immortal. The fragrance of the flower may be the spirit of the flower; the body of the flower dying on earth, its spirit may appear in better worlds. I do not say it will be so. I say it may be so. The ancestors of those tuberoses and camelias and japonicas and jasmines and heliotropes were born in Paradise. These apostles of beauty came down in the regular line of apostolic succession. Their ancestors during the flood, under ground, afterward appeared.

The world started with Eden, it will end with Eden. Heaven is called a Paradise of God. Paradise means flowers. While theological geniuses in this day are trying to blot out everything material from their idea of heaven, and, so far as I can tell, their future state is to be a floating around somewhere between the Great Bear and Cassiopœia, I should not be surprised if at last I can pick up a daisy on the everlasting hills and hear it say, "I am one of the glorified flowers of earth. Don't you remember me? I worshiped with you on Easter morning in 1900."

My text introduces us into a garden. It is a manor in the suburbs of Jerusalem, owned by a wealthy gentleman by the name of Joseph. He belonged to the Court of Seventy who had condemned Christ, but he had voted in the negative, or, being a timid man, had absented himself when the vote was to be taken. At great expense he laid out the garden. It being a hot climate, I suppose there were trees broad-branched, and there were paths winding under these trees, and here and there were waters dripping down over the rocks into fish-ponds, and there were vines and flowers blooming from the wall, and all around the beauties of kiosk and arboriculture. After the fatigues of the Jerusalem court-room, how refreshing to come into this suburban retreat, botanical and pomological!

Wandering in the garden, I behold some rocks which have on them the mark of the sculptor's chisel. I come nearer, and I find there is a subterranean recess. I come down the marble steps, and I come to a portico, over which there is an architrave, by the chisel cut into representations of fruits and flowers. I enter the portico. On either side there are rooms—two or four or six rooms of rock, the walls of these rooms having niches, each niche large enough to hold a dead body. Here is one room that is especially wealthy of sculpture.

The fact is, that Joseph realizes he cannot always walk this garden, and he has provided this place for his last slumber. Oh! what a beautiful spot in which to wait for the coming of the resurrection! Mark well this tomb, for it is to be the most celebrated tomb in all the ages. Catacombs of Egypt, tomb of Napoleon, Mahal Taj of India, nothing compared with it. Christ has just been murdered, and his body will be thrown to the dogs and the ravens, like other crucified bodies, unless there be prompt and efficient hindrance. Joseph, the owner of this mausoleum in the rocks, begs for the body of Christ. He washes the poor mutilated frame from the dust and blood, shrouds it and perfumes it.

I think that regular embalmment was omitted. When in olden time a body was to be embalmed, the priest, with some pretension of medical skill, would point out the place between the ribs where the incision must be made; and then the operator, having made the incision, ran lest he be slain for a violation of the dead. Then the other priests would come with salt of nitre and cassia, and wine of palm-tree, and complete the embalmment. But I think this embalmment of the body of Christ was omitted. It would have raised another contention and another riot. The funeral hastens on. Present, I think, Joseph, the owner of the mausoleum; Nicodemus, the wealthy man who had brought the spices; and the two Marys. No organ dirge, no plumes, no catafalque. Heavy burden for two men as they carry Christ's body down the marble stairs and into the portico, and lift the dead weight to the level of the niche in the rock, and push the body of Christ into the only pleasant resting-place it ever had. Coming forth from the portico, they close the door of rock against the recess.

The government, afraid that the disciples may steal the body of Christ and play resurrection, order the seal of the Sanhedrim to be put upon the door of the tomb, the violation of that seal, like the violation of the seal of the Government of the United States or Great Britain, to be followed with great punishment. A company of soldiers from the tower of Antonia is detailed to stand guard.

At the door of the mausoleum a fight takes place which decides the question for all graveyards and cemeteries. Sword of lightning against sword of steel. Angel against military. No seal of letter was ever more easily broken than that seal of the Sanhedrim on the door of the tomb. The dead body in the niche in the rock begins to move in its shroud of fine linen, slides down upon the pavement, moves out of the portico, appears in the doorway, advances into the open air, comes up the marble steps. Having left his mortuary attire behind him, he comes forth in workman's garb, as I take it from the fact that the women mistook him for the gardener.

That day the grave received such shattering it can never be rebuilt. All the trowels of earthly masonry can never mend it. Forever and forever it is a broken tomb. Death, taking side with the military in that fight, received a terrible cut from the angel's spear of flame, so that he himself shall go down after awhile under it. The King of Terrors retiring before the King of Grace! The Lord is risen! Let earth and heaven keep Easter to-day! Hosanna!

Some things strike my observation while standing in this garden with a new sepulchre. And first, post-mortem honors in contrast with ante-mortem ignominies. If they could have afforded Christ such a costly sepulchre, why could not they have given him an earthly residence? Will they give this piece of marble to a dead Christ instead of a soft pillow for the living Jesus? If they had expended half the value of that tomb to make Christ comfortable, it would not have been so sad a story. He asked bread; they gave him a stone.

Christ, like most of the world's benefactors, was appreciated better after he was dead. Westminster Abbey and monumental Greenwood are the world's attempt to atone by honors to the dead for wrongs to the living. Poet's Corner, in Westminster Abbey, attempts to pay for the sufferings of Grub street.

Go through that Poet's Corner in Westminster Abbey. There is Handel, the great musician, from whose music you hear to-day; but while I look at his statue, I cannot help but think of the discords with which his fellow musicians tried to destroy him. There is the tomb of John Dryden, a beautiful monument; but I cannot help but think at seventy years of age he wrote of his being oppressed in fortune, and of the contract that he had just made for a thousand verses at six pence a line. And there, too, you find the monument of Samuel Butler, the author of Hudibras; but while I look at his monument in Poet's Corner, I cannot but ask myself where he died. In a garret. There I see the costly tablet in the Poet's Corner—the costly tablet to one of whom the celebrated Waller wrote, "the old blind schoolmaster, John Milton, has just issued a tedious poem on the fall of man. If the length of it be no virtue, it has none." There is a beautiful monument to Sheridan. Poor Sheridan, if he could have only discounted that monument for a mutton-chop!

O you unfilial children! do not give your parents so much tombstone, but a few more blankets—less funeral and more bedroom. If five per cent. of the money we now spend on Burns' banquets could have been expended in making the living Scotch poet comfortable, he would not have been harried with the drudgery of an exciseman. Horace Greeley, outrageously abused while living, when dead is followed toward Greenwood by the President of the United States and the leading men of the army and navy. Massachusetts tries to atone at the grave of Charles Sumner for the ignominious resolutions with which her legislature denounced the living senator. Do you think that the tomb at Springfield can pay for Booth's bullet?

Oh! do justice to the living. All the justice you do them, you must do this side the gates of the necropolis. They cannot wake up to count the number of carriages at the obsequies, or to notice the polish of the Aberdeen granite, or to reap epitaphal commemoration. Gentleman's mausoleum in the suburbs of Jerusalem cannot pay for Bethlehem manger, and Calvarean cross, and Pilate's ruffian judiciary. Post-mortem honors cannot atone for ante-mortem ignominies.

Again: Standing in this garden of the sepulchre, I am impressed with the fact that floral and arborescent decorations are appropriate for the place of the dead. We are glad that among flowers and sculptural adornments Christ spent the short time of his inhumation.

I cannot understand what I sometimes see in the newspapers where the obsequies are announced and the friends say in connection with it, "Send no flowers." Rather, if the means allow—I say if the means allow—strew the casket with flowers, the hearse with flowers, the grave with flowers. Put them on the brow—it will suggest coronation; in their hand—it will mean victory.

Christ was buried in a garden. Flowers mean resurrection. Death is sad enough anyhow. Let conservatory and arboretum contribute to its alleviation. The harebell will ring the victory. The passion-flower will express the sympathy. The daffodil will kindle its lamp and illumine the darkness. The cluster of asters will be the constellation. Your little child loved flowers when she was living. Put them in her hand now that she can go forth no more and pluck them for herself. On sunshiny days take a fresh garland and put it over the still heart.

Brooklyn has no grander glory than its Greenwood; nor Boston than its Mount Auburn; nor Philadelphia than its Laurel Hill; nor Cincinnati than its Spring Grove; nor San Francisco than its Lone Mountain. But what shall we say to those country graveyards, with the vines broken down and the slab aslant, and the mound caved in, and the grass a pasture-ground for the sexton's cattle? Indeed, were your father and mother of so little worth that you cannot afford to take care of their ashes? Some day turn out all hands and straighten the slab, and bank up the mound, and cut away the weeds, and plant the shrubs and flowers.

Some day you will want to lie down to your last slumber. You cannot expect any respect for your bones if you have no deference for the bones of your ancestry. Do you think these relics are of no importance? You will see of how much importance they are in the day when the archangel takes out his trumpet. Turn all your cemeteries into gardens.

Again: Standing in this garden of the new sepulchre, I am impressed with the dignity of private and unpretending obsequies. Joseph was mourner and sexton, and had entire charge of everything. Only four people at the burial of the King of the universe. Oh! let this be consolatory to those who through lack of means, or through lack of large acquaintance, have but little demonstration of grief at the graves of their loved ones. Long line of glittering equipage, two rows of silver handles, casket of richest wood, pall-bearers gloved and scarfed, are not necessary.

Not recognizing this idea, how many small properties are scattered, and widowhood and orphanage go forth into cold charity. The departed left a small property, which would have been enough to keep the family together until they could take care of themselves, but the funeral expenses absorbed everything. That went for crape which ought to have gone for bread. A man of moderate means can hardly afford to die in any of our great cities. By all means do honor to the departed, but do not consider funeral pageant as necessary. No one was ever more lovingly and tenderly put away to sepulchre than Christ our Lord, but there were only four people in the procession.

Again: Standing in this garden with a new sepulchre, I am impressed with the fact that you cannot keep the dead down. Seal of Sanhedrim, company of soldiers from the tower of Antonia, floor of rock, roof of rock, walls of rock, door of rock, cannot keep Christ in the crypts. Come out and come up he must. Come out and come up he did. Prefiguration. First fruits of them that slept. Just as certainly as we come down into the dust, just so certainly we will come up again. Though all the granite of the mountains were piled on us we will rise.

O, my brethren, death and the grave are not so much as they used to be; for while wandering in this garden with the new sepulchre, I find that the vines and flowers of the garden have completely covered up the tomb. Instead of one garden, there are four gardens, opening into each other—garden of Eden, garden of the world's sepulchre, garden of the earth's regeneration, garden of heaven. Four gardens. Bloom, O earth! Bloom, O heaven! O, my friends, wake up to gladness on this Easter morning! This day, if I interpret it right, means joy—it means peace with heaven, and it means peace with all the world.

Oh! bring more flowers. Wreath them around the brazen throat of the cannon; plant them in the desert, that it may blossom like the rose; braid them into the main of the returned war-charger. No more red dahlias of human blood. Give us white lilies of peace. All around the earth strew Easter flowers. And soon the rough voyage of the church militant will be ended, and she will sail up the heavenly harbor, scarred with many conflict, but the flag of triumph floating from her top-gallants. All heaven will come out to greet her into port, and with long-reverberating shout of welcome will say, "There she comes! the glorious old ship Zion. After tempestuous voyage she drops anchor within the veil."

OUR GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES A SHIP TO CARRY THE FIRST "CHRISTIAN HERALD" FOOD CARGO TO STARVING INDIA

OUR readers will be glad to learn that the Inter-denominational Committee, which, as announced last week, had been called together to apportion the magnificent Easter gift of twenty-five thousand dollars from Christian America, has placed the money in the hands of the missionaries who are in the most urgent need of help. It is being expended in the purchase of millet and rice, the two chief articles of diet in India. Even so large a sum is speedily exhausted when the number of the starving reaches into the tens of millions. It is very gratifying to know that this vast distribution is made without cost. The missionaries are only too glad to have the opportunity of feeding the hungry people, and cheerfully undertake the arduous duty free of all expense. The new members of the Committee, appointed on account of their intimate knowledge of the famine area, are: Rev. Edwin F. Frease of the Methodist Episcopal Mission at Baroda; Rev. G. N. Thomssen of the Baptist Mission at Bapatla; Rev. Edgar M. Wilson of the Presbyterian Mission at Ratnagiri; Rev. M. D. Adams of the Church of the Disciples Mission at Bilaspur; Rev. J. H. Harpster of the Lutheran Mission at Gunter, and Rev. M. B. Fuller of the Alliance Mission at Girgaon, Bombay. Rev. E. S. Hume of the American Board's Mission at Byculla, still continues his services as secretary.

A MEAL FOR FAMINE SUFFERERS

With so efficient a means of reaching the suffering people and saving the lives of those who are ready to perish, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invites with confidence the contributions of all American Christians. It now appears from reliable statistics, that while fully sixty million persons are in the grip of the famine, there are twenty-five millions who are in absolute peril of starvation.

God, in his own way, is opening all the doors for our India Famine Relief work. Our friends everywhere will be delighted to learn that the United States Government, in response to a personal appeal made through the State Department by Rev. Dr. Talmage, has directed Pay-Director Denniston, of the Navy Pay Office in New York, to charter a vessel to carry a cargo of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief supplies to India. Secretaries Hay and Long, of the State and Navy Departments, after consulting with the Attorney-General, decided that the present famine, being a continuous prolongation of that of 1897, the unexpended appropriation for chartering a famine cargo, made under the authority of joint resolution of Congress adopted that year, might lawfully be applied towards the despatching of a new cargo.

This generous gift, which is eloquently and officially expressive of the nation's sympathy, will enable us to despatch the first cargo of life-saving corn before the close of the present month. It will go to Bombay, and on arrival there, will be under the personal supervision of our Interdenominational Committee, reaching the sufferers at a time when the need is sorest and when help will be most warmly welcomed. This appropriation for transportation, secured from our government by the earnest representations of Dr. Talmage, reinforced by the intelligent and valuable co-operation of Mr. Charles M. Pepper, is equivalent to an addition of $40,000 to the Famine Fund.

Rev. J. E. Abbott, the American Board's missionary in Bombay, writing to the Advance, draws a pathetic picture of the poor creatures, whom the fathers who have gone to the Relief Camps, have left behind to die. It is not heartlessness that has led to desertion. They love their wives and babes, as we love ours, but they could not save them if they stayed. There is generally a tearful parting, the husband knowing that his wife will slowly perish, and the wife fearing that the husband will die on the road thither before he reaches succor. As the missionary visits these homes, some of them belonging to families who have been baptized and become members of his little church, how must he grieve that he has not the power to give even one meal to postpone the inevitable end.

Mr. Abbott says:

"The little skeleton babies are one of the saddest features of this famine. The merry boys and girls of the villages are such no longer, with their one great thought for food, and their bodies growing weaker as the days go by. And when orphaned, either by the famine or ordinary disease, who is there to care for them, when every one is in the battle of keeping himself alive? And the men and women are fighting with their one problem of no food and no water, millions of them straining every nerve to avoid the humiliation or the hardship of toil at relief camps. The aged, the infirm, women in conditions unfitted for hard toil, and children, dependent on others to care for them, are rapidly weakening in body, and in the months of famine still remaining their prospect is appalling."

It is no wonder that the missionary in whose hands the contributions of the Christians at home have been placed, goes to such scenes with a heart full of gratitude to the people in his own land who have made him an angel of mercy, a very giver of life to these hopeless sufferers. With what joy is he welcomed: and how in years to come, will his message of the Bread of Life be listened to by the people who owe their lives to his ministrations!

Mrs. M. B. Fuller, of the Alliance Mission in famine-stricken Gujrat, the province which is now in the direst need, writing her thanks for the two thousand dollars cabled to her for relief work from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, says: "I want in the name of all our missionaries who are helping me in the work of succor to thank you and your generous readers who have given us the means to relieve this overwhelming distress. I praise God for moving their hearts to give this money and I pray him to lead them to continue their blessed help, for there is a long time of suffering still before us. I went the other day to Ahmedabad and on the way we saw the bony figure of a man under a tree a few yards from the road. We went to him and found that he was still alive. He had simply fallen down through weakness and had not strength to rise. He had lain down to die and I suppose would have died, if we had not seen him; but we managed to lift him into the cart, and having given him some nourishment, took him with us to the camp. Before we reached it we found a poor woman with her baby by the roadside. The mother was in the delirium of the fever that comes with starvation and the child was evidently in a critical condition. We put both in the wagon with the man and took them to the camp, where they would be fed and cared for. That was the best course with them, as the camp was so near and our own funds were needed for people at a greater distance from government aid.

"Such scenes are witnessed by every traveler. One of our missionaries saw an ox-cart in which the driver had collected six living skeletons on his way, whom he was taking to the Government Relief Station. Still worse is it in the early morning hours, because the people die in the night if they lie down to rest by the roadside. One missionary counted fourteen corpses during his morning walk and another said that he saw the buzzards gathered over a field and went to see what it was they were doing and found that there were a number of dying people there whom the buzzards were waiting to eat. At one of our stations an elderly woman asked for food and offered to work in payment for it. She had one child with her. She and her three sons and their wives and three children had left their native village where they were starving to death, hoping to get work elsewhere. The whole party had died one by one by the way until only the old woman and one grandchild were left and they were near death. Only careful supplies of food given in small quantities at short intervals saved their lives. In one family five had died in four days. Parents are selling their children for a handful of grain, but in some cases I have known there has been a sad and pathetic clinging together until the whole family died. These are the scenes witnessed on all sides. If your readers could see the things we see daily, there would be no need of appeals.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN WAITING FOR ADMISSION TO A RELIEF CAMP

"We are putting the money you have sent to us to the best use. We have many Christian weavers who are starving. These we have supplied with yarn and are paying them for weaving it. We give the cloth away to the naked, and sell any surplus there is, adding the money to the food fund. Then your liberality has encouraged us to receive the orphans who have been brought to us. We have now three hundred of them on our hands. In many other ways we are doing all we can to save life, but in spite of all our efforts people are dying for lack of food and our money is slowly dwindling. May God move the hearts of his people to send us more, for there are long months of this suffering before us."

Mr. Moody's Appeal

"In the complicated conditions of modern society it is not always easy to determine 'What Jesus would do'; but in the Gospel of Matthew we have a clear statement of what he did when surrounded by a hungry crowd. The evangelist tells us that he had compassion on the multitude because they had nothing to eat (Matt. 15: 32). The multitudes of starving India are hungry and they are appealing to Christian America in this hour of their dire necessity. It is our privilege to show that compassion which characterized the Divine Head of the Church.

"It is credibly stated that a few cents are sufficient to sustain the life of one of these sufferers. Surely there are hundreds of thousands of Christians in America who will practise some self-denial that they may be able to save some of these little ones. If during the next thirty days each would give up some luxury and send the result of such self-denial to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD how many of the starving might be fed! And their sacrifice would not be without a blessing to themselves. He who had compassion on the multitude has himself said: 'Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple shall in no wise lose his reward.'

"W. R. MOODY."

Luke 7: 18-28

: : : JESUS AND JOHN THE BAPTIST : : :

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for April 29.
Golden Text, Mark 7: 37.

RUINS OF THE FOUNDATIONS OF MACHŒRUS (JOHN'S PRISON)

ANOTHER "prisoner of the Lord!" What a glorious and mighty company in history are they who were sent to prison, not because they were worse, but better than their fellows! Joseph, Jeremiah, Jesus, Paul, and many another made a prison a palace of power. From prison Joseph came to the premiership of Egypt, then the world's foremost nation. From the lion's den Daniel returned to the premiership of Babylon, then in the foremost place. Jeremiah, imprisoned by petty politicians, through unfaithfulness of cowardly preachers, was even in prison his country's foremost statesman, and master of the situation. Jesus and Paul, prisoners of Cæsar, were really King and premier of the world. In one of the European prisons, where many a Christian and patriot has been sent, not for his vices, but because of his virtues, I read the words, scratched into the stone wall with a nail, "Be thou faithful unto the death, and I will give thee a crown of life," which means not faithful to the time of death, but faithful up to the dying point. Most of us are not faithful up to the sneering point. To bear imprisonment, much more death, rather than speak a falsehood, aye, rather than keep back a brave word that God bids us speak, is our faithfulness of that quality? John's was. It was rebuking the most influential of his hearers for a wicked divorce and remarriage that got him into trouble. It takes courage to speak to wicked kings of righteousness, temperance and a judgment to come, as did Moses, Nathan, Jeremiah, Daniel, Paul; but it calls for yet greater courage to rebuke a wicked queen, to be an Elijah before Jezebel, a John the Baptist before Herodias, a Knox before Queen Mary. Partly because so many men have dared to go to prison for righteousness in the past, there are few prisoners of the Lord in our day. But lesser terrors than prison serve to silence many who ought to speak, some in the pulpit, more in politics, yet more in the marts of trade.

The Caged Eagle Depressed Art thou he that should come? Bible heroes assure us they are "men of like passions with ourselves," that we may not reason away every sign of weakness and temptation. John was in the very wilderness where Christ was tempted to hasten the establishment of his kingdom by using the devil's short cut of force. Why should not John feel that same temptation yet more, being only a man and shut up in a dungeon, not at all like our modern prisons, healthy and well lighted, and supplied with work and reading to pass away the time! John no doubt remembered how God had saved Moses from the wrath of Pharaoh, and Daniel from savage beasts and yet more savage men, and wondered why one who could do such miracles as he heard of Christ's doing should not rescue one who had heralded him. His anxiety was no doubt yet more due to the fact that after a year and a half of miracles Christ had not yet established himself as King of the Jews and King of the World. The apostles of Jesus were still looking for a temporal kingdom, and John no doubt was under the same misapprehension. John was apparently in a brief eclipse of faith. But we need not go farther than our own hearts to find the same doubt. We say, Why is it at the end of nineteen Christian centuries that Christ's kingdom has been so imperfectly developed in even Christian nations, aye, in Christian men? Mohammed made Mohammedans and Mohammedan nations swiftly by the sword, but it was only a superficial work. A painter who had very slowly developed an immortal work was chided by one who said, "You have been a long time painting it." The reply was, "But I was painting for a long time." God's work in nature and in grace alike is slow but sure. Blessed is he, as Jesus said in this case, who does not stumble in his faith, because God's work in men and nations alike is more an evolution than a revolution. We must have patience with the slowness of the Christ development even in ourselves, if we are really at the post of duty, though we are of the "shut in," like John, whose only service at this time for the King was to "stand and wait."

Creed and Deed Go and show those things which ye do hear and see. It is as if one should say, "Are you really a Christian?" and you dared to answer: "Stand by and see my day's work." To John's question Jesus did not reply with a long argument, but showed his work—not theological or ecclesiastical work, but of the kind which preachers too much decry, humanitarian work—the kind Isaiah said the Messiah would do (35: 5, 6; 61: 1, 2); work that helped those who were not figuratively, but literally blind, lame, deaf, diseased, dead—the "poor" especially.

Is Christianity the noblest uplifting force in the world? Our best answer will be the work it has done, not yet a perfect work, but better than any other. Thomas Jefferson said to Daniel Webster: "The studious perusal of the Sacred Volume will make better citizens, better husbands and better fathers." Another sceptic, Huxley, called the Bible "the Magna Charta of the poor and oppressed."

What is the Matter With the Church? Bishop Brooks, in a searching passage, said that many are turning John's question on the Church of to-day: "Art thou he that should come?" Can the Church do for the nation and the world in our time what needs to be done? Can it develop men who can bear the temptations of modern politics and pleasures and business? Can it overcome the increasing misrule of our cities? Can it displace the engulfing selfishness of our commerce? The Bishop said that not a few are thinking that the unfaithful Church may be set aside for some new agency, of which the Salvation Army is a suggestion. In any case, the Church must answer those who question her, not with ponderous arguments, but with Christlike works of reform and charity, with transformations of the maimed, the halt and the blind into whole men and ennobled communities.

The nearest application of the story is personal. I must prove myself a Christian, not by words, but by deeds. Justified to God, who sees the heart, by faith, I must justify my faith to man by works. The most perfect illustration of faith and works for the business man is found in the commercial agency reports. When a retail merchant applies for goods on credit at a wholesale house, the "credit man" does not depend upon the applicant's prospectus or promises, but rather he looks up the man's record in the book of judgment at the commercial agency. If it is there stated that from the days of his clerking he has attended strictly to business in business hours, has paid his bills promptly and has no vicious habits, his record proves his revenue. When the Chicago fire made such men penniless, their character became their capital, and they resumed at once on the same large scale as before. On the other hand, the man who is put down on the commercial record as keeping a dog and a gun, often leaving business for pleasure, and is rated careless about paying debts, and fond of drink and what goes with it, will find credit refused, even while he is still rich. One man ceased to credit another on seeing him sneak through a ferry gate without paying his fare. His fears were justified, for he soon went into dishonest bankruptcy. Not James only emphasizes the need of proving our faith by its fruits, but Paul quite as strongly in the Epistle to Titus, and Jesus in this and many passages. Here is a capital story of faith and works for those at school:

"I knew a college fellow," says Dr. Lyman Abbott, "who was pretentiously pious and constitutionally lazy. He was always at his class prayer-meeting, and always unprepared in recitation. An eccentric professor once rebuked him before the class in the following manner:

"'You're a professor of religion, aren't you?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And a member of the Society of Inquiry?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And of the Missionary Band?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And always at the class prayer-meeting?'

"'Generally, sir.'

"'Yes, and always unprepared; never have your lesson; hopelessly lazy. Well, I can see through your piety; and I guess the Lord's as far-sighted as I am!"

John's Excellent Spine What went ye out to see? A reed shaken by the wind? Here is a suggestion of that chief quality of strong minds which we name from the chief element of the body: backbone. Many who are physically in the upper order of vertibrates are really only mollusks in mind. We cannot conceive of them as standing before a monarch or a mob with such courageous denunciations as John the Baptist spoke.

Of him it could have been said as of John Knox: "He never feared the face of man." That was because he ever beheld the face of God. We can fear nothing while consciously in his sight. Peter, the natural coward, whom faith made fearless, tells us that the way to courage is the way of faith. "Add to your faith, virtue"; literally, valor (II. Peter 1: 5). "Soft clothing," that is, luxury—of which this age and this country has drunk to perilous intoxication, is suggested as unfavorable to such sterling virtues as John developed in his wilderness of "plain living and high thinking." If luxury be our lot, let us arm ourselves against its perils, and be valorous saints even in Cæsar's household.

A prophet. Foretelling is only an incidental part of the prophet's work. A prophet is one who speaks for God to man, as a priest is one who speaks for man to God. The prophet gathers warnings from the past and encouragements from the future, but his object is always to reform the present, to reform individual men, but especially cities and nations and the world in their business and politics and pleasures. And to this work we are all called in that exhortation, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets."

True Greatness He that is least in the Kingdom of God is greater than he. We are greater in privileges than John, with Christ in heaven influencing the whole world; a Christ approved by nineteen centuries of miracles upon men and nations, and an outpoured spirit such as the world had not felt to the full when John preached. We are greater in privileges than John when, by our printed words and by the missionaries we send we can speak to the whole world. Greater in privilege in that our government is at least far above Herod's. In many ways we are greater in privileges and greater in acknowledged rights, such as free speech; but are we really greater in courage and fidelity? Are our doubts as few? Do we with like faith gaze across the ages and behold the Lamb that beareth away the sins of the world? We may well stand beside John's prison and study true greatness, remembering how the years have proved the prisoner greater than the king and queen who sent him there.

Men say falsely, "Nothing succeeds like success." John is but one of many illustrations of the successes of those who fail. In the catalogue of faith's victories, in Hebrews 11, we find enumerated some who were "slain with the sword." In this list of slain victors Paul himself, as well as John the Baptist, was enumerated. Let us dare to fail for Christ's sake in business and politics. In the words of Browning, the modern seer:

> "Aspire, break bounds, I say:
> Endeavor to be good, and better still,
> And best. Success is naught;
> Endeavor's all."

Thus the martyrs succeeded in seeming failure, succeeded in building the Church, succeeded in the nobler building of their own characters, failing in which is the only real failure. Let us learn Christ's way of estimating greatness. He passed by the kings of his time and declared John, the prisoner, the greatest of his age. On a voyage to Europe the writer was led by that declaration to spend one whole Sabbath reading everything said by or about John in the four gospels, with the result that three supreme pictures stand out in memory: first, John the hero, facing multitude and monarch in parallel pictures, with fearless speech; second, John, the faithful witness, proclaiming Christ, the Lamb of God, as he beholds behind the baptized Christ the distant cross upon the sky; third, John, "the friend of the bridegroom," who had come as the trusted friend of Christ to prepare the bride, the Church, for his coming, and on his arrival stands back in the shadow gladly surrendering his previous prominence, smiling with full contentment as he hears the bridegroom's voice in place of his own speaking to the bride, whispering himself with supreme self-effacement, "He must increase and I must decrease." For such greatness let us earnestly aspire.

* * *

Greater than he. Christ did not mean greater in station, or in character, or in power, but greater in the position and privileges of the better time. John, like the other Old Testament worthies, was a servant of God—truly a high honor—but Christ came to reveal sonship, which is far higher. The humblest Christian can go forth to the world with a better message than John proclaimed before Christ was revealed to him. He preached repentance and reformation of life. That kind of preaching was needed at the time, because there was so much Pharisaism and hypocrisy; but the honest seeker after righteousness would find how powerless he was to renew his own soul and would long for help. He would then be in a condition to appreciate the message that Christ gave to Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria. So John had prepared the way for Christ.

∴ A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PILGRIMAGE TO THE ORIENT ∴

The Furst Bismarck is a majestic ship, but she will rock and plunge, to the discomfort of many doctors of divinity, and, strange to say, the bigger the man (with D.D.'s and LL.D.'s) the sicker he seemed to get. The sea is no respecter of persons. Our second day out the glorious Sabbath dawned, beautiful overhead, but wet under foot. The upper deck was filled with men and women in all shapes and conditions. Some limp; some rolled up, tucked up and buttoned up. Sedate professors, profound students and dignified clergymen had all things in common. Evangelist Chapman, as he sat in his steamer chair, muffled up and tucked up, asked the man from California, "Have you been sick yet?" and receiving the reply, "No, and I do not intend to be," he said with a far-away look. "Neither did I." When asked if he was to lead the devotional exercises, he responded in a subdued voice, "Not to-day."

"THE SEA BRINGS ALL TO A LEVEL"

once more on terra firma. Our handsome, popular D.D., occupying one of the most influential metropolitan pulpits, enters the dining saloon with a genial smile and a sweater. With prompt decision the waiter informs him that he must divest himself of the sweater. "Not allowable, don't you know," etc. The man of dignity pulls down the sweater and meekly displays a white coliar; presuming upon its appropriateness he remains, in spite of the protest of the under steward. But a mightier force is at work, and he who could exclaim, "O, shaw! Ridiculous! that a sweater is not allowable," suddenly divests himself of the genial smile, takes with him the obnoxious sweater and rushes out to commune with nature.

There was excitement among our pilgrims on Friday. They were aroused at 6.30 A. M. to behold a scene never to be forgotten, the Azores or Western Islands, which rise abruptly from the sea. We passed in the night snow-crowned Pico, and now looked upon San Miguel with its green hills rising from the ocean. Our pilgrims' kodaks are quickly leveled at this beautiful island, with its orange groves, vineclad hills and massive pines. Soon the islands vanish in the distant horizon and we are again on the high seas.

REV. F. C. OTTMAN REV. I. B. HOPWOOD REV. J. W. CHAPMAN MRS. CHAPMAN

SOME OF OUR FELLOW-PILGRIMS

IN SIGHT OF GIBRALTAR'S ROCK

A sea voyage, like some other things, bring all men to a level, and women too. Our California heiress would give a good slice of her income if she could only get

Mr. Inazo Nitobe, author of the book, The Soul of Japan, and special commissioner of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce at Sapporo, accompanies the pilgrims as far as Gibraltar. Mr. Nitobe was educated in the United States, has imbibed Christian ideas, and is a very intelligent, wide awake, keen observer. He carries with him constantly a copy of the New Testament.

On Sunday, 18th, our pilgrims, twenty-two of whom were ministers (blue Presbyterians, deep water Baptists, Lutherans and Evangelical all represented), held a religious service in the second cabin, Dr. Chapman conducting the service. Rev. John Balcom Shaw also spoke and the exercises were enjoyed by all.

On sighting the straits the cry of land ahead brought all the pilgrims on deck. Many were somewhat the worse for wear, but all were happy at the anticipation of going on shore. Nearly every pilgrim prepared to land, the inducement was so great. The joy of being again on solid earth was anticipated, so that we were all ready when the steam yacht came alongside. We seemed like a crowd at a Christian Endeavor Convention waiting for the doors to open.

The moment our feet touch the soil we are hypnotized. Where are we? "Who is who?" We are allowed by a permit to enter the garrisoned town. As we pass through the gate we are met by a host of jehus, who jabber, gesticulate, wiggle and perform contortions, and a grand pantomime, in their endeavors to get you into a coach. Sweat-shops are open, the hucksters are on the street, the saloons are in American style, and the English, Italian and Spanish languages are largely in evidence. We are warmly invited to visit the Spanish bull fight ring, at the city of Linea, which is connected with Gibraltar by a narrow isthmus, but our party declines to be enticed, so we continue our pilgrimage and view the Alameda, the "pride of Gibraltar," but the beautiful park is far exceeded in culture and beauty by many in America; still we are fain to admire the palm trees, the peppers, the olive trees, and the vine-clad hills. In this cosmopolitan town there are 26,184 population, composed of British, Italians, Spanish, Jews and Moors. The latter parade the streets with bare legs and white tunics. Blind beggars run after you for a long way crying for help, asking in a wailing voice, "A penny! penny! a penny!"

Our shore visit over we return to the ship and resume our interrupted voyage up the Mediterranean. The first sunset on the Mediterranean was glorious, but the moon cast a silver sheen over the wavelets of the sea that was even more bewitching. Many remained long upon deck, enjoying the calm, beautiful sea. Is it possible that Paul was ever shipwrecked upon such a sea?

On February 21st, eleven days from home, we anchor off the north shore of the Bay of Naples. Rising out of the depths of the bay is Mount Vesuvius, shadowed now by a nimbus cloud. Steam yachts, craft of all kinds greet our eye. Below, as we look down from the main deck, is a troop of troubadours, with a guitar, mandolin and violin, which accompany three female voices, but their words are unintelligent to our non-Italian ears. They were graceful in gesture and most pleasing in manner, as they plead for a gift, to be thrown down to them. One of the troubadours caught the coins we flung him in an open umbrella.

Passing the "customs," we entered the city proper. Imagine a street, with houses of five stories, narrow and with a balcony at each window; trucks, two-wheeled, drawn by one, two or three horses abreast, and everywhere the Carrozzella, two-seated, drawn by one horse. Venders are a pest. Flowers at twenty-five cents or one shilling a bunch were passed up to us on a stick. We observe the absence of bits in the horses' mouths, and in lieu there is a head-gear, fastened tightly about the nose. Italian beggars, peddlers, money-changers, pick-pockets. One of our noted pilgrims divine had his pocket picked somewhere between the Furst Bismarck and the first street in Naples. From the first moment of landing to the last of embarking, it is one systematic scheme of robbing in the high places and the low. Money-changers, post-office clerks, venders, drivers, all rob you if they get half a chance. One driver agreed to take two ladies for one franc to the boat at nine o'clock P. M. Stopping quite a way from the boat the fellow explained to the ladies: "Boat illuminated; horse afraid," and when they got out he charged them four francs. Too far from police or boat, the timid ladies reluctantly submited to the extortion. Match girls seize your hand and kiss it and leave a box of matches in your pocket or on your arm and then pester you for pay. Venders follow you continually.

At every turn it is "baksheesh." Even guides ask for baksheesh from the tourists for the driver. The tramways, first and second class, seem to be the only refuge. The itinerary may read: "A trip to the aquarium." When you arrive it is two francs (40 cents) admission. You drive to the top of St. Elmo, to the San Martino Monastery, and it is one franc admittance. "Please leave your umbrella, sir," and coming out, "Baksheesh, please, for umbrella." As you get into your carriage, "Baksheesh for the guide, please," and the four in the carriage are expected to give one franc a piece for the self-appointed guide. I mention this so that if any readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contemplate a trip abroad, they may be forewarned and also forearmed with an abundant supply of baksheesh.

The passing scenes, however, more than repay us. Two strapping native fellows meet in the middle of the street and hug and kiss each other. One of our party pays for a bunch of flowers to a vender running by the side of the carriage and looks for change, but the latter keeps running until he runs away with the money. A few blocks farther on the carriage is approached by the same boy, who does not recognize it, and offers his flowers. This time our friend takes the flowers first and gets even with the little rogue. Goats are driven on the sidewalk and milked at the door. Organ-grinders are very much in evidence.

We have only a day at Naples, dinner at seven, then all go on the steamer Umberta for the night. Instead of a steamer exclusive for the pilgrim party, we found ourselves in an overcrowded ship, four persons each being assigned to staterooms hardly large enough for two. Next day we cleared for Alexandria.

EASTER JOYS IN PARIS

The Flowers, the Parks, the Markets, the People—The Exposition—United States' Day and the Lafayette Monument

ON THE OUTER EDGE OF THE CENTRAL MARKET, PARIS

A BUSY SECTION OF THE CENTRAL MARKET AT EASTER

EVEN in ordinary years European society gravitates to Paris at Eastertime, and wealthy tourists from America, Australia and other countries are prone to schedule their journeyings so that Easter will find them in the French capital; for Paris, always gay and beautiful, is at its loveliest then. It is natural that the city of the Seine should excel herself this Easter, for is not the season of the holy festival also that set for the initiation of the great Exposition, at which all the nations of the earth will gather to see Paris at her fairest? Formal opening of the Fair is to be delayed somewhat; but the city is in reception garb and visitors are crowding in.

The twittering swallows dipping in the basins of the Tuileries gardens seem to rejoice when April and Easter have come. The little children playing in the parks seem bubbling over with happiness. Such wonderful rabbits and eggs as Easter brings them! And does it not bring the wonderful Gingerbread Fair held two weeks at this season in Faubourg St. Antoine? The leafage of trees and shrubs in parks and gardens is yet of a tender green. Beds of early flowers make splashes of brilliant color. The purple and white of budding lilacs and other heralds of spring are visible here and there. Many folks that pass, even the nurse-girl and the washerwomen, have sprigs of bloom and greenery pinned somewhere about them. In the windows of almost every quarter are gay and fragrant signals of popular joy. Just before Palm Sunday, trains loaded with flowers and greens begin to crowd the roads to the city, and with slight interruption this continues until Easter. Paris at Easter has been aptly compared to a tremendous flower show. There are flowers, flowers, everywhere, so many and so cheap that the very poor may buy a bit of loveliness and fragrance with which to brighten their dwellings. The flower-markets, of which there are five, are always interesting to visitors. The great Central Market of Paris is one of the sights which no tourist should entirely omit; it consists of ten buildings separated by covered streets, and occupying altogether twenty-two acres.

Long, long before daylight, the wagons of market gardeners are rolling over the thoroughfares leading to this common center. They come from the surrounding country, hence the market is a good place to see sturdy rustic folks as well as city hucksters. The good farmwife, unloading her supplies, will often mark off the little territory alloted to her with deftness and taste, arranging her fresh onions, beets and carrots so that the green tops make a fringe or border for her domain, and the silky white skins of the onions gleam effectively between the crimson of the beets and the gold of the carrots. Emerald heads of curly lettuce will be cunningly bestowed as a valley of division where a hillock of vivid red tomatoes threatens the purple glory of a mountain of egg-plants; neatly tied bunches of asparagus; dainty baskets of scarlet berries and various hothouse delicacies raised for the patron who carries a long purse, are each and all grouped with as much eye to effect as the florist uses in the composition of a bouquet.

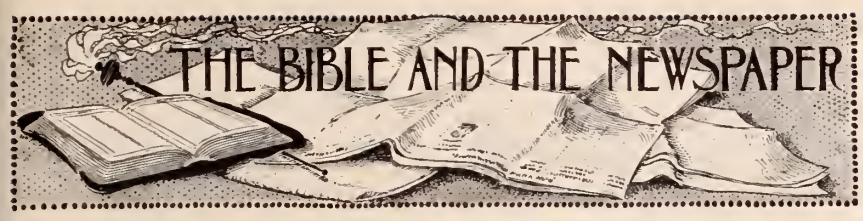
In the fish-market one sees an array of the treasures of the deep that is dazzling and almost limitless; shining scaly creatures—gold, silver, salmon, pink and pearl make rainbows of irridescence hard by the ugly black eels and the sprawling red lobsters. Besides the fish on the trays and in the osier baskets there are whole schools of live fish in immense tanks supplied with water by faucets. In another part of the market—given over to poultry—geese, ducks, chickens, pheasants and other feathered things reign supreme. In still another section, butchers in white aprons are weighing and cutting up tons of meat and dealing out marvelous quantities of sausages, sweetbreads, calves' feet and other edibles. Up to a certain hour traders only can make purchases; after that, the public. Hotel men buying in large quantities, a nun purveying for a convent school, a little white-capped maid-of-all work purchasing carefully for her mistress, a poor woman of the slums making a few cents go a long way in providing for a large family, children catering for parents or for themselves—all constitute a part of the interesting medley of humanity which one sees at market. The market-women waste no time; as soon as wares are arranged they take out a piece of knitting or sewing, and their fingers fly when they are not busy waiting on a customer; nor do their tongues take too much rest. If one understands French this is the place to hear interesting city and provincial gossip.

A SCENE AT THE EASTER GINGERBREAD FAIR

During Lent, buying and selling of some kinds of food has not been brisk, and laying in supplies for the Easter feast is all the more lavish and exciting. The white-capped maids and the housewives of threadbare raiment find their way out through the flower market and crown their baskets of meat and vegetables with a bunch of something pretty and odorous. Sidewalks everywhere are crowded with men and women carrying baskets or guarding piles of produce. The cackle of geese and chickens and the clatter of tongues seems to follow one until the last lingering vestige of the great Central Market is left well behind.

The promenades and drives, and the boulevards leading to the Madeleine, St. Roche, and other prominent churches show a widely differing phase of Parisian life and grades of society which have little to do with the great market, except to be sustained by it. People from the provinces flock to Paris during Passion Week to enjoy the religious privileges and, honesty compels the admission, to see what the latest fashions are. This last reason exercises potent influence, too, over pilgrims not French, who hie to Paris for Holy Week. Before Easter Sunday it looks as if the display on the promenades were of the latest styles in mourning. On Saturday toilettes begin to brighten; on Sunday they bloom out like the flowers into the very freshest, gayest and brightest things possible. This Easter hundreds of sober, demure people, who have little interest in such light matters, are finding their way into Parisian churches, and Protestant congregations are unusually enlarged.

"I am going to the United States," or "I am going to Japan," say the architects and workmen as they hurry back and forth along the Quai d'Orsay, where the nations of the earth have established pavilions and run up flags. The pavilion of the United States is of a goodly size. It has been likened to a pantheon, and there is an equestrian statue of George Washington on the portico. Beside our majestic structure, the handsome Austrian pavilion looks quite dwarfed. Fourth of July is to be "United States Day." On that day America formally presents to France the monument of Lafayette, which is to have a place in the Louvre. Of that interesting date and occasion, Hon. Benjamin D. Woodward, our Assistant Commissioner-General, says: "When this monument is unveiled at noon and the procession of distinguished guests cross the Tuileries, going by way of the Champs Elysees toward our National Pavilion, every eye will be turned in the direction of the high tower, which Eiffel himself has put at the disposition of the United States. By means of an electrical contact, the President of the United States at 7 A. M. (noon at Paris), in the Executive Mansion at Washington, will unfurl to the breeze on top of the highest structure in France, the largest American flag which has ever been made."



Dublin's Royal Guest

ROYAL has been the welcome accorded to Queen Victoria by the people of Ireland. A more hearty and cordial reception could not have been given than that with which she was greeted on her arrival in Dublin. The gaily decorated streets, the illuminations, the cheering thousands of citizens who lined the roadways and sang "God Save the Queen" as she passed, all testified to the pleasure which the Irish people felt at her visit. With her usual tact, the Queen took special pains to gratify the humblest of the people by driving through the poorest quarters of Dublin. Although rain was falling on the first day of her visit, she rode in an open carriage and was careful to respond with pleasant smiles to the greetings of the crowds assembled to see her pass. By her own request, one day was made a children's day. Seven thousand Dublin children and thirty thousand school children from other cities were assembled and were made the Queen's guests for the day. The Queen's love for children and their joy at having a day reserved for them made the occasion one that will be long memorable in Ireland. It is now thirty-nine years since her Majesty visited Ireland, but the cordiality of her reception will doubtless lead to more frequent royal visits in the future. The present visit is due to the Queen's desire to give public recognition of the valor and distinguished service of the Irish soldiers now fighting under the British flag in South Africa. She rightly felt that it would gratify them to have her go among their fellow-countrymen and spend a few days in the capital of their beloved country. That in spite of her eighty-two years she should undertake such a journey is an evidence of her patriotism and her womanly grace and tact. If an earthly sovereign, grateful for the service of her soldiers, shows her gratitude by her favor to their fathers and mothers and wives and children, how much more will our heavenly King show kindness to the relatives of those who serve him and answer the prayers offered for them.

The Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you as it is this day (Deut. 10: 15).

The Disastrous Flood in Texas

A calamity, the full extent of which is unknown at the time of writing, is reported from Austin, Tex. The dam across the Colorado River, by which Lake McDonald was formed, gave way on April 7 and released the enormous mass of waters which raised the level of the river nearly fifty feet above the normal height. The swollen stream rushed down the valley with a noise like thunder, carrying all before it. Seven men and boys who were in the municipal power-house, just below the dam, were drowned and a number of other persons, who were on a projecting tongue of land, were swept away by the resistless current. How many others were caught by the flood lower down the river is not yet known, but it is feared that the number is large. Residences, barns, cattle and trees could be seen floating on the surging flood. The dam was 1,143 feet long and sixty feet deep and was the second largest in the United States. It cost over a million dollars. The waters it confined in Lake McDonald were thirty miles long and about half a mile wide. For several days the river had been swollen by heavy rains and the impact of the torrent with the wreckage it brought down had been a severe strain on the dam which yielded at last along a stretch of five hundred feet. Very sincere sympathy will be felt all over the country for the bereaved and for those who have lost their property in this disaster. It may be hoped that Christians everywhere will pray for them, and that they themselves will look to Him whom David addressed:

Save me, O God, for the waters are come into my soul. I am come into deep waters where the floods overthrow me (Ps. 69: 1, 2).

A Ship for a Coffin

A correspondent of the New York Sun describes a remarkable coffin which was constructed by the man who was eventually buried in it. He says: "Probably the strangest coffin ever used was that of a very old Englishman who served in the French wars under Lord Nelson, and afterward went to Canada and settled in Victoria, B. C. In his leisure moments he constructed a model of the flagship Victory. It was eight feet long and had all the masts, sails, rigging and cannons which Nelson's ship had. The old man took the greatest pride in it, and in his last days used to watch it for hours at a time. He was a very small man, and when he died some of his old sailor friends lifted the deck off the Victory and had the inside upholstered. Then they put the old man in and replaced the deck. At the funeral the "Victory" was lowered into the grave with sails set and the flags flying. I don't suppose there was ever a more appropriate coffin than that." If the old man had known in his lifetime that his favorite model would be used as his coffin, he would have been very pleased. But now it is far more important for him that he should have had a part in another victory, which will be for him an eternal glory.

To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne (Rev. 3: 21).

SACKVILLE STREET, DUBLIN, SCENE OF THE WELCOME TO QUEEN VICTORIA

A Girl Heroine

Passengers by an express train in Indiana a few days ago have reason to be grateful to an heroic girl for being saved from dire peril. She is a telegraph operator at a junction near New Point, Ind. Her duties are performed in a little tower forty feet above the track, which at that point is on an embankment twenty feet high. She thus works at an elevation sixty feet above the ordinary level. On the morning of the occurrence she gave the signal for a freight train to leave the siding. As it came out, one of the cars jumped the track opposite to her tower and pulled three other cars after it. The cars rolled against the iron work supporting the tower and overturned it. The girl was so badly injured by the fall that she could not stand; but suffering as she was, she recollected that the fast train would be due in half an hour. On her hands and knees she climbed the embankment and found the conductor of the wrecked train. She just managed to tell him of the approaching train and beg him to immediately signal it, when she became unconscious from her pain and was sent to her home. No one else had thought of the impending danger, but this devoted, self-sacrificing girl. She has been critically ill since. Some indication of what she suffered in climbing the embankment to prevent the wreck of the approaching express, is gained from her talk in her delirium. She imagines herself still trying to save the train and fearing that her strength will fail before she reaches the top of the embankment. Many a noble soul in the face of some crisis has had the same fear, and in some cases it has been the eternal safety of others that has appeared to depend on some weak person doing a difficult duty. To all such the promise is very encouraging:

He giveth power to the faint: and to them who have no might he increaseth strength (Isa. 40: 29).

The Prince of Wales Shot at

The attempt to murder the Prince of Wales, on April 4, was a surprise to all Europe. The Prince has so scrupulously avoided mixing in politics, or doing anything in a public capacity to excite animosity, that he seemed to be one of the last persons in the world likely to be marked as the victim of an assassin. The attack was made in Brussels, while the Prince was on the way with his wife to visit his father-in-law, the King of Denmark, at Copenhagen. He had just seated himself in a railroad car to resume his journey after a brief halt, when a young man sprang on the platform of the car and fired at him point blank with a revolver. Twice the pistol missed fire, but the would-be assassin succeeded in sending two bullets into the car, but neither of them did any damage to the occupants. He was seized by the railroad officials and dragged from the platform before he could fire again. He was identified as a tinsmith named Sipido, sixteen years of age, and a member of anarchist societies. He had attended a meeting on the night before the Prince's arrival, at which the British war with the Boers had been denounced, and had filled his pockets with anarchist literature. Another youth, seventeen years of age, was arrested with him and charged with complicity in the plot, which was evidently premeditated. If the youth had possessed ordinary common sense, he would have been aware that there was nothing to be gained by such a crime, neither by himself nor by others; but he was probably partially demented and was in that condition which is easily excited to deeds of blood by such utterances as those of Dr. Leyds and his friends, to whom he had been listening.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness, and the end mischievous madness (Eccles. 10: 13).

BRIEF NOTES

The oldest inhabitant of Norfolk Island, granddaughter of Fletcher Christian, of the "Bounty" mutiny, and widow of Rev. G. H. Nobbs, the Island chaplain, has lately died, aged ninety, and has left 180 descendants.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has opened an attractive house in Manila for the use of our soldiers who may need a quiet place for reading and writing, away from liquor temptations. Services for the Filipinos will also be held there under the charge of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The Salvation Army is now operating eleven Shelters and Industrial Homes for poor men and women, in the vicinity of New York alone, accommodating some 1,400 persons, in addition to a Home for Fallen Women. Colonel Holland, of 122 West 14th Street, says gifts of magazines, etc., are much needed by the inmates, and will be greatly appreciated.

Dr. Nansen, when a guest at a dinner of medical and other scientists, held at Munich, was asked: "Did you take any alcohol with you when you left the Fram, or use any intoxicating liquor during your heroic expedition by sledges?" "No," said Nansen; "if I had done so I should never have returned."

Evangelist Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, who superintended the Gospel Tent work in New York last summer, has closed a series of revival meetings with the Baptist and Presbyterian churches in Bradford, Penn. Among the persons who have been led to seek Christ at these meetings are a large number of young men.

A testimony to the value of missions comes from the Hon. Charles Denby, for many years United States minister to China, who says, having in mind what he has seen of Christian missions in China, "The silent but persistent worker, the missionary, has been the pioneer of modern civilization as well as Christianity."

The cosmopolitan character of the Boer army is illustrated by the fact that one hospital in South Africa required Bibles in the Gaelic, Dutch, German, Flemish, French, Swedish, Danish, Italian, Bulgarian, Croat, Magyar, Roumanian and Czech languages, all of which the British and Foreign Bible Society supplied.

Very successful evangelistic meetings have been held at Des Moines, Ia., under the conduct of Dr. L. W. Munhall. Two thousand men were present at the meeting in the Church of the Disciples at one of the meetings for men only. Dr. Munhall served in the army during the Civil war and found many of his comrades at Des Moines. A special service for old soldiers was one of the most interesting of the series.

The magnanimity of a clergyman in Ohio is shown in an item quoted by the Observer. The clergyman had occasion some time ago to denounce the liquor traffic in general, and the course of a leading liquor-seller of his town in particular. The sermon excited a great deal of feeling at the time. Recently the same clergyman undertook a long journey at the request of the same liquor dealer, who being near death, sent an urgent letter asking the clergyman to come to him and show him the way of salvation. The clergyman started immediately.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Samantha, Josiah Allen's wife, who thinks she "ort to go to the Paris Exposition," has to make an earlier start than she intended. She must take her little grandson, Tommy, on a long sea voyage ordered by his physician. Josiah firmly declines to risk seasickness of which he has had a lively experience, and it looks as if she and Tommy must journey alone, when Dorothy Snow stops in Jonesville with Tommy's mother, who is her cousin. Dorothy, a rich orphan, is attended by Miss Meechim, whose heart is set on keeping her unmarried, and by her French maid, Aronette. They are on their way to San Francisco, whence they sail on a tour including Hawaii, the Philippines, Japan, China, possibly Egypt, and ending with the Paris Exposition. Samantha and Tommy start off with them, leaving Josiah weeping on the patform. They stop at New York, Saratoga, Niagara Falls and Chicago, and Samantha enjoys the sights greatly. In Chicago, she talks with Prince and Princess Cantacuzene and other distinguished people. On the way to Denver, Phila Henzy, of Loontown, near Jonesville, comes on the train with her husband, who is taking her to his home in Salt Lake City. She and Samantha talk about the good work young Elder White is doing for factory folks in Loontown. In Salt Lake City, Samantha visits a Mormon and his eleven wives, and has a call from Brigham H. Roberts, to whom she expresses her opinion. At San Francisco, she meets Robert Strong, Miss Meechim's nephew, a wealthy young philanthropist, who helps Miss Meechim protect Dorothy "from the attentions of other gentlemen" and who is to tour with them. He takes them over San Francisco and to his City of Justice—a model village where his factory hands live. As the party is about to sail, Josiah, from whom Samantha to her great anxiety has not heard since leaving New York, rushes up the gang-plank. Behind him comes Arvilly, a Jonesville book agent, who has a history. Disguised as a soldier, she had followed her husband to Cuba, and was beside him when Alan Thorne, crazed with drink, shot him; Alan's sweetheart, Waitstill Webb, was by, too; Alan was executed; the two women made common cause against the Canteen which they held responsible. Arvilly tells Samantha that Waitstill is now in the Philippines as an army nurse.

Among the ship's passengers are Evangeline Noble, missionary to Africa; Elder Wessel, missionary to China; Lucia, the Elder's pretty daughter, who makes great friends with Aronette, and "Widder" Gray, going to see her sick son in Manila. The Elder and Arvilly take issue on the temperance question, the Elder defending the saloon as the "poor man's club." Samantha calls on Queen Liliuokalani at Honolulu, sees the "House of Fire" and other sights. She is much interested in things at Manila; comes upon "Cousin John Richard Allen," a missionary, who is trying to render spiritual aid to our soldiers who plainly need it; calls with Arvilly on General Grant, and begs him to use his influence against the liquor evil in the army. Search for Willie Gray shows that he died pleading in vain for a minister to pray for him. Waitstill Webb calls, and tells Arvilly that Elder White has written asking her to marry him. Lucia and Aronette disappear; a detective reports seeing them stagger out of a Canteen on the previous evening with two young men who had been showing them attention for some time. The Elder is crushed; everybody is heartbroken; diligent search is made, but at last they have to sail away, ignorant of the fate of the missing girls. The next stop is at Hongkong; they then sail up the Pearl River to Canton. In both cities Samantha has many amusing experiences. They go to Japan.

In The Mikado's Empire

THE next mornin', after tiffen, which wuz what they call breakfast, bein' just so ignorant of good Jonesville language. Josiah and I and Tommy sallied out to see what we could see, the rest of our party havin' gone out before.

Wantin' to go a considerable ways, we hired two jinrikishas, and I took Tommy in my lap, and I must say that I felt considerable like a baby in a baby carriage carryin' a doll; but I got over it and felt like a grandma before I had gone fur. How Josiah felt I don't know, though I hearn him disputin' with the man about his prices—we had took a interpreter with us so we could know what wuz said to us. The price for a jinrikisha is five sen, and Josiah thought it meant five cents of our money, and so handed it to him. But the man wuz so ignorant he didn't know anything about Jonesville money, and he kep' a-callin' for sen, and the interpreter sez "Sen." holdin' up his five fingers and speakin' it up loud, and I hearn Josiah say:

"Well you fool, you. I have given you five cents! what more do you want? But at last he wuz made to understand; but when Josiah made him know where he wanted to go the interpreter said that the sedan carriers wanted a yen, and my poor pardner had another struggle. Sez he:

"You consarned fool, how do you spoze I can give you a hen? Do you spoze I can git into my hen house ten thousand milds off to git you a hen? Or do you want me to steal one for you?"

THE EARTHQUAKE—"JOSIAH HURRIED ME ALONG ON A SWIFT RUN"

"A yen," sez the interpreter, and the way he said it it did sound like hen.

"Well, I said hen, didn't I?" said my pardner.

But I leaned out of my baby cart and sez, "Y-e-n, Josiah. A yen is their money, a dollar."

"Oh, why don't they call it a cow or a brindle calf?" He wuz all het up by his efforts to understand. They call one of their dollars a yen, a sen is a cent, and a rin is the tenth part of a cent. Josiah fell in love with the copper rins with square holes in the centre. Sez he:

"How I would love to furnish you with 'em, Samantha, when you went to the store in Jonesville. I would hand you out five or six rins and you could string 'em and wear 'em round your neck till you got to the store."

"Yes," sez I, "half a cent would go a good ways in buyin' family stores."

"Well, it would have a rich look, Samantha, and I mean to make some when I git home. Why, Ury and I could make hundreds of 'em out of our old copper kettle that has got a hole in it, and I shouldn't wonder if I could pass 'em."

Miss Meechim had a idee that the Japans wuz in a state of barbarism, but Arvilly who wuz always at swords' pints with her threw such a lot of statistics at her that it fairly danted her. There are six hundred newspapers in Japan. The Japanese daily at Tokio has a circulation of 300,000. She has over 3,000 milds of railroads and uses the American system of checking baggage. Large factories with the best machinery has been built late years, but a great part of the manufacturing is done by the people in their own homes, where they turn out those exquisite fabrics of silk and cotton and rugs of all the colors of the rainbow, and seemingly as fadeless as that bow. Slavery is unknown, and there is very little poverty with all the crowded population. The Japans are our nearest neighbors acrost the Pacific and we've been pretty neighborly with 'em, havin' bought from 'em within the last ten years most three hundred millions worth of goods. She would miss us if anything should happen to us.

Yokohama is a city of 124,000 inhabitants, most all Japans, though in what they call the settlement there are fifteen or twenty thousand foreigners. There are beautiful homes here with flower gardens containing the rarest and most beautiful flowers, trees and shrubs of all kinds.

The day Josiah had his struggle with the interpreter and Japan money we rode down the principal streets of Yokohama. And I would stop at some of the silk shops, though Josiah objected and leaned out of his jinrikisha and sez anxiously:

"Don't spend more'n half a dozen rins, Samantha, on dress, for you know we've got more than 10,000 milds to travel and the tarven bills are high."

Sez I in real dry axents, "If I conclude to buy a dress I shall have to have as much as a dozen rins; I don't believe that I could git a handsome and durable one for less." My tone wuz sarcastical. The idee of buyin' a silk dress for half a cent! But I didn't lay out to buy; I wuz jest lookin' round.

In Yokohama Shops

I saw in those shops some of the most beautiful silks and embroideries that I ever did see, and I went into a lacquer shop where there wuz the most elegant furniture and rich bronzes inlaid with gold and silver. They make the finest bronzes in the world; a little pair of vases wuz fifteen hundred dollars and you couldn't get 'em for less. But why shouldn't there be beautiful things in a country where every one is a artist?

We stopped at a tea house and had a cup of tea, delicious as I never spozed tea could be and served by pretty young girls with gay colored, loose silk suits and hair elaborately dressed up with chains and ornaments; their feet and legs wuz bare, but they wuz covered with ornaments of brass and jade. Afterwards we passed fields of rice where men and wimmen wuz working, the men enrobed in their skin toilette of dragons and other figures and loin cloth and the wimmen in little scanty skirts comin' from the waist to the knees. Their wages are eighty cents a day. I wondered what some of our haughty kitchen rulers who demand a dollar a day and the richest of viands, would say if they wuz put down on a basis of eighty cents a day and water and rice diet.

The little bamboo cottages are lovely lookin' from the outside with their thatched roofs, some on 'em with little bushes growin' out on the thatch and little bunches of grass growin' out under the eaves. The children of the poor are entirely naked and don't have a rag on 'em until they're ten or twelve

"KNEELIN' IN FRONT OF THE IDOL"

A lot of 'em come up to the jinrikishas and called out "oh-hi-o" to Josiah, and he shook his head and sez affably:

"No, bub, I am from Jonesville."

But the interpreter explained oh-hi-o means good mornin'; and after that for days Josiah would say to me as soon as I waked up, "Ohio," and wanted to say it to the rest, but I broke it up.

One thing Josiah thought wuz wicked: a Japanese is not allowed to wear whiskers till he is a grandpa, so old bachelors have to go with smooth faces.

Sez Josiah, "What if Cousin Zebedee Allen couldn't wear whiskers? why," sez he, "his whiskers are his main beauty and naterally Zeb is more particular about his looks than if he wuz married. Such laws are wicked and arbitrary. Why, when I courted my first wife, Samantha, my whiskers and my dressy looks wuz what won the day. And I d'no," sez he inquiringly, "but they won your heart."

"No," sez I, "It wuzn't them, and heaven only knows what it wuz; I never could tell. I've wondered about it a sight."

"Well," sez he, "I didn't know but it wuz my whiskers."

We passed a number of temples where the people worship. The two principal religions are the Shinto and the Buddhist. The Shinto means, "The way of the gods," and they believe that their representative is the Mikado, so of course they lay out to worship him. The Buddhists preach renunciation, morality, duty, and right living. Bein' such a case to cling to Duty's apron strings I couldn't feel towards the Buddhists as Miss Meechim did. Sez she, "O why can't they believe as we do in America? Why can't they all be Episcopalians?"

But 'tennyrate all religions are tolerated here, and as Arvilly told Miss Meechim when she wuz bewailin' the fact that they wuzn't all Episcopals and wuzn't more like our country.

Arvilly Champions the "Japs"

Sez Arvilly, "They don't drownd what they call witches, nor hang Quakers, nor whip Baptists, nor have twenty wives. It don't do for us to find too much fault with the religion of other nations, Miss Meechim, specially them that teaches the highest morality, self-control and sacrifice."

Miss Meechim wuz huffy, but Arvilly drove the arrer home. "Gamblin' is prohibited here; you wouldn't be allowed to gamble for bed-quilts and afghans at church socials, Miss Meechim."

Miss Meechim wouldn't say a word. I see she wuz awful huffy. But howsumever there are lots of people here who believe in the Christian religion.

We passed such cunning little farms; two acres is called a good farm, and everything seemed to be growin' on it in little squares, kep' neat and clean, little squares of rice and wheat and vegetables.

And Josiah sez, "I wonder what Urv would say if I should set him to transplantin' a hull field of wheat, spear by spear, as they do here, set 'em out in rows as we do onions. And I guess he'd kick if I should hitch him onto the plow to plow up a medder, or onto the mower or reaper. I guess I'd git enough of it. I guess he'd give me my come up-ance."

"Not if he wuz so polite as the Japans," sez I.

"And what a excitement it would make in Jonesville," sez Josiah, "if I should hitch Ury and Philury onto the mowin' machine. I might," he continered dreamily, just for a change, drive 'em into Jonesville once on the lumber wagon."

But he'll forgit it, I guess, and Japan will forgit it too before long. Their tools are poor and fur behind ourn, and some of their ways are queer; such as trainin' their fruit trees over arbors as we do vines. Josiah wuz dretful took with this and vowed he'd train our old stick no further over a arbor. Sez he, "If I can train that old tree into a runnin' vine I shall be the rage in Jonesville."

But he can't do it. The branches are as thick as his arm. And I sez, "Children and trees have to be tackled young, Josiah, to bend their wills the way you want 'em to go." They make a great fuss here over the chrysantheum, and they are beautiful I must admit. They don't look much like mine that I have growin' in a kag in the east winder.

Their common fruits are the persimmons, a sweet fruit about as big as a tomato and lookin' some like it, with flat black seeds, pears, good figs, oranges, peaches, apples. There is very little poverty, and the poorest people are very clean and neat. Their law courts don't dally along for month after month and years. If a man murders they hang him the same week.

But mebby our ways of lingerin' along would be better in some cases, if new evidence should be found within a year or so, or children should grow up into witnesses.

We went into a Japanese house one day. It is made on a bamboo frame, the roof and sides wuz thatched with rye straw, the winders wuz slidin' frames divided into little squares covered with thin white paper. The partitions wuz covered with paper, and movable, so you could if you wanted to make your house into one large room. Josiah told me that he should tear out every partition in our house and fix 'em like this. "How handy it would be, Samantha, if I ever wanted to preach."

And I told him that I guessed our settin' room would hold all that would come to hear him preach, and sez I, "How would paper walls do with the thermometer forty below zero?" He looked frustrated, he had never thought of that.

The house we went into wuz sixteen feet square, divided into four square rooms. It wuz two stories high, and little porches about two feet wide wuz on each story, front and back. There wuz no chimney; there wuz a open place in the wall of the kitchen to let the smoke out from the little charcoal furnace they use to cook with, and one kettle wuz used to cook rice and fish; no spoons or forks are needed. The doors and frame-work wuz painted bronze color. There wuzn't much furniture besides the furnace and tea-kettle that stands handy to make tea at any time. A few cups and saucers, a small clock, a family idol, and a red cushioned platform they could move, high and wide enough for a seat so several can set back to back, is about all that is necessary.

Their floors are covered with a lined straw matting, soft as carpet; they sleep on cotton mats put away in the day time; their head-rest is a small block of wood about one foot long, five inches wide and eight inches high. A pillow filled with cut rye straw and covered with several sheets of rice paper isn't so bad, though I should prefer my good goose feather pillows. The Japanese are exceedingly neat and clean; they could teach needed lessons to the poorer classes in America.

We one day made an excursion twenty milds on the Tokiado, the great highway of Japan. It is broad and smooth, five hundred milds long, and follers the coast. Part of the way we went with horses, and little side trips into the country wuz made with jinrikishas. Quaint little villages wuz on each side of the road, and many shrines on the waysides. That day we see the famous temple of Diabutsu with its colossial bronze idol. It wuz fifty feet high and eighty-seven feet round. The eyes three feet and a half wide. One thumb is three and a half feet round. He seemed to be settin' on his feet.

A widder and a priest wuz kneelin' in front of this idol. The priest held in one hand a rope and anon he would jerk out melancholy sounds from a big bronze bell over his head. In his other hand he held some little pieces of wood and paper with prayers printed on 'em. As he would read 'em off he would lay one down on the floor, and the widder would give him some money every time. I thought that wuz jest about where the prayers went, down on the floor; they never riz higher I don't believe.

Josiah wuz kinder took with 'em, and sez he, "How handy that would be, Samantha, if a man wuz diffident, and every man, no matter how bashful he is, has more or less wood chips in his back yard. Sometimes I feel diffident, Samantha."

But I sez, "I don't want any wooden prayers offered for me, Josiah Allen, and," sez I, "that seen shows jest how widders are imposed upon."

"Well," sez he, "she no need to dickered with the priest for 'em if she hadn't wanted to."

And I did wish that that little widder had known about the One ever present, ever living God, who has promised to comfort the widder, be a father to the orphan, and wipe away all tears.

But the Sunrise Land is waking up, there is a bright light in the East:

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ is born acrost the sea,
> With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me.

With the sweet gentleness and amiable nater of the Japans what will not the divine religion of the Lord Jesus do for them? It will be plantin' seed in good ground that will spring up a hundred fold.

At Tiffin in Tokio

I spoze that it wuz on Robert Strong's account (he is acquainted with so many big Chinamen and Japans), that we wuz invited to a elegant tiffen in one of the Mikado's palaces at Tokio. The grounds wuz beautiful, the garden containing some of the most beautiful specimens of trees, trained into all shapes, some on 'em hundreds of years old, but havin' their faculties yet, and growin' jest as they wuz told to; and all the beautiful flowers and shrubs that Japan can boast of, and palm trees, bannanas, giant ferns and everything else beautiful in the way of vegetation.

The palace is one of the oldest in Tokio. It wuz only one story high, but the rooms wuz beautiful. The fan chamber wuz fifty feet square, the walls covered with fans of every size and shape and color. The only furniture in this room wuz two magnificent cabinets of lacquer work and four great, gorgeous bronze vases.

The tiffen wuz gin by a high official; there wuz fifty guests. The hour wuz two in the afternoon. There wuz ten ladies present—two beautiful Japanese ladies, dressed in the rich toilette of Japan. The lunch cards wuz little squares of scarlet paper, with black Japanese writing. Josiah looked at the card intently and then whispered to me:

"How be I goin' to know what I am eatin' from these duck's tracks?"

But I whispered, "Le's do what the rest do, Josiah, and we'll come out all right."

But we had a dretful scare, for right whilst we wuz partakin' of the choice Japan viands a loud rumblin' sound wuz hearn, and I see even as we rushed to the door the timbers of the ceilin' part and then come together agin and the great bronze chandelier swing back and forth. My pardner ketched hold of my hand and hurried me along on a swift run and wouldn't stop runnin' for some time. I tried to stop him for I got out of breath, but he wuz bound to run right back to Yokohama thirty miles off. But I convinced him that we would be no safer there for you can't argy with earthquake shocks where they're comin', they are very common in all parts of Japan. After the first heavy shock there wuz two lighter ones, and that ended it for that time. But though we all went back to the table, I cannot say that I took any great comfort in the tiffen after that.

An April Morn

OH, the sweet of an April morn,
With lilacs budding and singing birds,
Perfumes coy on the breezes borne,
And brooks atune without spoken words.
Lisp of waves on the pebbly beach,
Flit of wings on the household eaves,
And far away as the eye can reach
The wonderful vista of gold-green leaves.

A Hindoo Wedding

WHEN our pretty young daughter is married, her bridegroom comes to the house or the church to meet her, and pay her homage. In India, the bride is escorted to the house of her husband and carried over its threshold, with music and ceremony and a certain glittering pomp among the better circles. The wedding feast which may last for several days, is inaugurated, but the little brown-faced bride, though weighted with golden and silver armlets and ankle bands, and adorned with gems of price, is not the personage of importance that the simplest bride is at home with us. She enters on a life of seclusion; her out-door trips are few; her boundary is the guarded compound of her husband's abode, in which her's are the dark and damp rooms, bare of furniture and shorn of luxury. Except to her husband and the men of his immediate family, the Hindoo wife may not speak, nor does she join these potentates at their meals. Their rice or chicken is cooked and served first; her duty is to wait upon them and to eat the remainder when they have finished. I fancy that no Hindoo woman quite understands the freedom of movement and the peaceful dignity of the American and European wifely state. Her mother-in-law, the system being still patriarchal, rules over the young bride, often with a very stern sway, and in days of illness and child-birth, unless she is attended by a Christian missionary physician of her own sex, she is at the mercy of ignorance and neglect, regarded as unclean, and treated as if she were a creature of shame.

Until Christ becomes the Light of Asia, this state of affairs must continue, and only as Hindoo women find Christ will they become emancipated. They are turning hopefully to the Light of the world in these days. It is interesting to know that the daughter of Pandita Ramabai will enter a New England college next autumn, and that Ramabai's labors among the poor little widows of India have been greatly blessed.

In sad contrast to the state of this wedding, with the bullocks stepping proudly under their trappings, the musicians with their instruments, and the torch-bearers and gay retinue, is the deep poverty of India, as shown to-day in its famine-stricken districts. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing what it can to relieve the bitter woe of the starving, and your meals, dear readers, are sweeter because you have aided in this noble work, and have helped to send bread to those who were in extremity.

A HINDOO WEDDING PROCESSION

Books Around the House

Books are companions for the solitary hour and friends for the time of need, and the book lover is ready to forego any luxury that he may have about him the volumes which he prizes. In a simply utilitarian aspect, books are a good investment for the home-maker, since their presence indicates culture and refinement, and their absence conveys an impression of indifference to mental wealth, not easily removed by bric-a-brac and rich upholstery, though these may be in admirable taste. The most plainly furnished sitting-room takes on an added grace if books lie on the tables and fill a shelf or two, while the last touch of elegance is given to the well furnished parlor by low bookcases which invitingly display the works of good authors.

It is rather surprising that many people never get beyond an uneasy feeling of extravagance when they buy a book. Money for other requirements, for the gratification of any small wish or great one which knocks at the door, they consent to spend without hesitation, but when it is a question of purchasing a new book, they balance the pros and cons and hesitate long before they take the plunge. Numbers of people borrow books; others, and very properly, secure them from libraries, and sometimes women, thoughtfully provident, combine in book-clubs, in which books are loaned from hand to hand and divided at the end of a year. The genuine book lover cuts off an expenditure elsewhere, lingers longingly in the shop where the books tempt him on every side, and finally walks as if on air as he hurries homeward with another book in his possession. If the family are aware of his weakness for the acquisition of literature and do not altogether approve of it, he, or she, for this book buyer is often a woman, may hide the treasure for a day or two, and bring it out unobtrusively when a good opportunity offers itself.

To the economical housekeeper, however, the knowledge that books assist in furnishing the home, in precisely the same way with pictures and other objects of art and beauty, may lead to a more generous outlay in this direction. Books are distinctly decorative with their ornamental covers and brilliant bindings, and though they are, if well chosen, the greatest help one can ever have in the education of the children and the entertainment of guests, yet, were they never opened, their very appearance would dignify and beautify the home which gave them space and shelter.

Gardens

A few flowers in the door yard, and a well-kept lawn give an air of refinement and taste to a house which nothing else imparts. This is the time to make beautiful the outside of the home with fresh paint, to build an addition if it is no longer large enough to accommodate the home brood, and to lay out the pretty garden around it. Let every child have a garden of its own. A few seeds, a few cuttings and a lot of care and pains, and you will be repaid in bloom and beauty.

When the Furnace Fire Dies

The furnace or whatever answers to it, in the cellar, is a welcome agency in winter, when we must keep warm indoors, but as March wanes and April waxes we begin to despise it, and are fain to let its fires die. Now is the hour for a kindly blaze on the hearth in the early morning or chilly evening, for the smouldering glow and crimson flame of the soft coal which sings a song as it burns, for the live sparkle and flicker of the pine-knot; for the cheery crackle and sputter of the irridescent drift-wood, gathered on the beach and encrusted with the ocean spray. A handful of fire, kindled just when the frost begins to steal into the house, takes off the shivery feeling and saves from many a cold. Besides, nothing is more esthetic in its effect; it looks as if the spirit of the flame were glorifying the whole place with a brightening and binding wing. When we cannot have the fire on the hearth, we will fill the cold chimney space with great branches of dogwood, or yellow jasmine, with cherry blossoms or mountain laurel, but for those great flower-glories we must yet wait awhile.

Mother's Picture

When did mother have her picture taken last? I wonder if you children know. Perhaps it was ten years ago; perhaps twenty. Don't you see that she is growing older? and of course dearer with every year; but, one of these days when you are least prepared for it, that great silent angel who sweeps over the doorsill and brings the darkness with him may take her away. Then how you will wish that you had persuaded her to put on her best gown and smooth her dear white hair, and sit to the photographer for a likeness of herself as she is now. That picture will be precious beyond words, if you have it, after mother is gone. She may defer it, but keep her in mind that her sons and daughters want her picture.

The Next Congress of Mothers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD publishes with great pleasure the following communication from Mrs. Mary H. Weeks, corresponding secretary of the National Congress of Mothers. No question which confronts the present is more frought with vital issues than the query, "What shall I give my children to read?" The lists referred to by Mrs. Weeks will furnish a trustworthy answer to this difficult and delicate inquiry.

As many of our readers know, the Congress of Mothers will this year convene in Des Moines, Iowa, May 21 to 25, the invitation to come having been sent by the Governor of the State, the Mayor of the City, the Chamber of Commerce, Board of Trade, and the Woman's Club of Des Moines. Mrs. Theodore W. Birney will preside, and, in her winning way, will speak of the "Benefits to be Derived from Organized Motherhood." Other prominent educators will take part in the program.

Mrs. Weeks's letter speaks for itself.

"More people have written stating that they saw such and such a thing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD than have come to me from all other sources combined. I, therefore, ask you that you will state that the Mothers' Book List is now ready at ten cents a copy, that the outlines for study in mothers' clubs are also ready, that the Children's Book List, which will be ten cents each, will be out in a short time."

Mrs. Weeks's address is Kansas City, Mo.

Much space will be devoted to the interesting exercises of the Mothers' Congress, during the latter part of May.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—MOVER. If books must be removed from place to place, they should be carefully packed in small boxes, with layers of wrapping-paper inserted between them. Their weight—which is formidable when they are numerous—renders packing boxes of large size unwieldy and inadmissible for books.

—MAY BELLE. Try to interest the young people in your neighborhood in some pleasant evenings together; in music and games. You are too young to undertake to influence a young man, all by yourself, but you may show by your manner that you do not approve of certain foolish and wrong practices in which young men indulge, and your silence will speak for you. A girl may serve the Lord, and help all the people she meets by simply being sweet and true and consistent in her Christian life. About earning money, if you can do any single thing so well that it is worth purchasing, from embroidery to candymaking, try that. Of course you need not wear long dresses unless you choose. For week-days skirts which clear the ground are convenient and comfortable.

—J. G. C. Dear and honored friend, your letter deserves and receives consideration and thanks, although I do not altogether agree with you.

—SINCERE INQUIRER. A young woman employed in an office works for her salary only, and in no circumstances is justified in accepting gifts from her employer. The fact that a gift was offered you, accompanied by a caution that you should preserve silence as to the donor, should have made it impossible for you even to think of accepting it. An unmarried girl does not receive gifts from married men. To do so is most compromising, dangerous and immoral. Girls in business must confine their relations to all concerned and to those they meet regularly or transiently strictly to business. Sentiment does not enter into a business woman's contract. Attend only to your work and avoid, even, the appearance of evil, if you have a just idea of yourself and the situation is the rule to be observed. Every young woman in business stands for the great sisterhood who worthily toil, as well as for her individual self. Please remember this, my dear puzzled friend.

A Sailors' Haven

HOW THE NEW YORK SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION CARES FOR THE WAYFARERS OF THE DEEP

SHIPS from all parts of the world sail weekly into New York harbor, bringing sailors of all nationalities; and there is not a more important work or one further reaching in its effects than that which the Christian people of this city are doing for the floating population that drifts periodically to and from its shores. The history of the Seamen's Christian Association is well-known to our readers; the progress of its efforts to help the sailor have been noted in these columns from time to time since the days in which the mission had its humble beginning in an old liquor saloon on Washington street. Not far from its first habitation stands the large three-story building, 399 West street, which the mission now occupies.

Hard by are the docks where the Oceanic, Britannic and other great ocean liners lie in rest when in port, not to mention the many smaller vessels which daily "tie up" on the city's west coast. The writer, on the occasion of a recent visit to the mission, could not but note with pain the many sailors grouped here and there in front of saloons, and the thought was evoked: "This is surely the right neighborhood for the mission."

The mission, clean, homelike, bright and cheery, with sound of Gospel songs echoing from within its walls was a marked contrast to its surroundings. The congregation was plainly of sea-faring men; bronzed fellows who had battled for years with wind and storm; lads not yet so deeply marked with the insignia of the sea; men wearing the garb and the air of authority; stokers in blue jumpers, with the soot of the furnace on their hands and faces. Around the room hang marine views and photographs of the crews of many a ship—the picture in every case a souvenir from men who had passed pleasant and profitable hours at the mission. The services were simple and heartfelt; the talks direct and true; the men listened earnestly and some gave testimonies. A quiet little deaconess with a gentle face sang some lovely old Gospel songs, and her hearers seemed particularly pleased. From the attention given every word uttered by Superintendent Stafford Wright, Miss Bangs, and the various missionaries assisting them, the seed sown that night fell upon good ground; and the writer thought: "Perhaps some who are present to-night will influence their friends clustering outside around saloons to come here to-morrow night.

From the time the mission opened at the present building, July, 1899, to March 1, the attendance, consisting almost wholly of sailors and longshoremen, has numbered 24,711; 464 lodgings have been supplied; 309 temperance pledges have been taken. Besides, Mr. Wright has forwarded to the families of seamen over $2,000 entrusted to him by sailors for that purpose. Jack is prone to throw his money away when on land; the unscrupulous are ready to profit by his folly; and a friend who will incite him to thrift and remind him of his duty to the wife and child or the old folks at home is indeed a blessing. The activities of the Seamen's Christian Association are indeed manifold; situations are found for unemployed sailors; seamen, sick or disabled on shipboard and in hospitals are visited; kits are taken care of; letters are written; services are held on different ships; Testaments, Bibles and other literature is distributed; clothing and comfort bags provided for the needy; in fact, the mission is a good all-around friend to Jack, and Jack knows it. The floating library is quite an interesting feature of the work. Twelve or more well-chosen books are placed on outgoing ships, and on their return are exchanged for others, so that the seamen may always have a fresh supply of good literature. On Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter and other festal times, special cheer is provided at the mission. One of our pictures shows how Jack enjoys himself there on such occasions.

On the center-table of the reception room at the Mission is a much-prized volume of letters from sailors and sailors' kindred, bearing the postmarks of many lands and containing sentences like these: "Your mission was a home to me on that side the water;" "I was in a bad way when I heard your voyst saying Jesus could save sinners. I prayed God to keep me and he has kept me. I would do enny hard work before I would write a letter, but I have tryed hard to write this wone." A sailor's wife writes from London: "Since my husband has attended your mission, I can see by his life he is a different man. He does not touch a drop of liquor." From Wales, a mother writes: "Thank you for your kindness to my boy. God reward you."

The president of the Association is Rev. Henry Wilson, D.D. Miss Helen M. Thompson and Mrs. William Wallace Walker are the vice-presidents. The secretary, Miss Emma M. Bangs, is also chairman of the room and devotional committee, and is well-known to the seamen and much beloved by them. She will answer any questions our readers may write her concerning the work.

A SAILORS' SOCIAL IN THE MISSION DINING-ROOM

A Hospital Mission Ship

Capt. Alexander de Soto, formerly leader of the Klondike Gospel Band, and more recently founder of the Wayside Mission on Railroad avenue, Seattle, Washington, has established a floating hospital lying at the foot of Jackson street, Seattle. This hospital is the old ship, Idaho, which Capt. de Soto, after securing it at a nominal price, has repaired and fitted up as well as he could with very limited resources. So far he has only been able to make the lower deck serviceable; the upper cabin is to be converted into a woman's ward. At present he has a number of bed-ridden patients and a company of ailing people, who can creep about the decks. Among the latter are some unhappy victims of the morphine habit who seem to have been greatly helped. Capt. de Soto's object, of course, is to combine in his ship the offices of a mission and a hospital, to make its work a ministry to the soul as well as to the body. He has several consecrated workers as volunteer assistants. Besides the regular patients stopping on board the ship, others make daily visits from the shore for treatment, and the opportunities for doing good are correspondingly enlarged. Many sufferers from the hardships of the gold fields are among his beneficiaries.

Progress in Puerto Rico

Educational Work at San Juan—"The Christian Herald's" Sunday School

REV. JAMES JAMIESON, our Sunday School Superintendent in Puerto Rico, in a letter just received, conveys interesting information of the progress of educational and Sunday School work on the island. He says:

"The boys' charity school of Puerto Rico is under control of the Board of Charity. It was formally opened several weeks ago for the reception of the orphan boys of Puerto Rico, who will receive an industrial training. The institute is beautifully situated in a healthy district on the military road in the suburb of Santurce, about two miles from the Plaza in San Juan. The school is under the direct supervision of Mr. Devalle. It has excellent accommodations for five hundred pupils. At present there are two hundred and nineteen names on the roll. The establishment is practically under military rule, the boys being divided into companies under the command of captains.

"Supt. Devalle, in order to give me an evidence of the patriotic spirit of the children, ordered the captains to march their companies into the interior court, where the little band played "My Country! 'tis of Thee," "The Star Spangled Banner," and "The Red, White and Blue," which the boys sung with intense emotion and enthusiasm. The school has no endowment, its main support being derived from the customs duties and not from taxation.

"There are at present four industries in full operation, viz., baking, carpentering, tailoring, and shoemaking. In the near future those in control contemplate introducing other trades.

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Sunday School continues to do remarkably well. Last Sunday we had an attendance of more than a hundred scholars. All appear to be deeply interested in their teachers and in what they are being taught. Many adults and children are compelled to stand in the yard at the rear of the building and on the sidewalk and listen to what is being said within. As there are two or three new houses being erected in the district I am hopeful of being able to secure more commodious quarters before long."

What is God's Due?

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 29. Luke 20:19-26

WHEN Jesus was approached by any honest inquirer who was sincerely desirous of getting light on a difficulty, his answers were clear and definite; but when mere quibblers questioned him, or when enemies desired to extract from him answers which might be used against him, Christ shrewdly turned their questions into reproof. In this instance of the tribute money he clearly perceived their motive. If he told them to pay the tribute, he would be renouncing his claims to kingship; if he told them not to pay, he would come under the ban of rebellion and would be liable to the punishment of a Roman court. His answer, in effect, was that in using Roman money they practically acknowledged the Roman supremacy. So long as they accepted the money and the protection and advantages which the Roman supremacy secured as the inscription on the coin implied, it was foolish, if not dishonest, to withhold the tribute. Every benefit has its corresponding duty. In using Roman money they recognized the duty of loyalty to Rome. The same principle based on the acceptance of benefits involved loyalty to God. The boy at school must render obedience to his teacher and the docility that his presence there implies; but such submission does not diminish his duty as a son to his father. There are certain duties required by the teacher, other duties required by the parent, other duties to be performed as a citizen to the State, and still other duties he should render to God. In all relations there are duties to be peformed which no conscientious man will neglect, but he will take care that the duties he renders to men are never in conflict with those due to God.

What, then, are the things that are God's? As our Creator he is entitled to our worship; as our King he is entitled to our loyalty; as our Father he is entitled to our loving reverence; as our unfailing Benefactor he is entitled to our gratitude and service, and as our Saviour and Helper he is entitled to our unfaltering trust. But all these are not things apart from our lives; they permeate our conduct and affect all that we do. No man can truly and sincerely love God without loving his fellow-men. No man can give himself wholly to God without fulfilling more completely his obligations in every relation of life. He becomes a better son, a better husband, a better father, a better master, a better servant, because of his trying to be a better son of God. "I do always the things that please him," is a motto that goes deep down into the springs of thought and action, and purifies and energizes all behavior. That is why the Christian is not under any law but the law of liberty. The law has to do with overt acts, but this principle touches motive and purpose. The "things which are God's" include right feeling as well as right action. There is a readjustment of human nature at conversion. The things which may have been done before without scruple, take on a new aspect as they are tested by the supreme allegiance involved in sonship. There are amusements and occupations which it would be difficult to prove wrong, that produce a discord in the spiritual harmony of a nature that has been attuned to God's. As when a boy grows up to manhood the toys which amused him in boyhood lose their fascination and he needs different amusements and pleasures, so the changed man finds himself in a higher life in which the old things have lost their charm.

Perhaps the most comprehensive of "the things which are God's," is self-surrender. The most hopeful thing a young man can do is to yield himself up to God with the earnest prayer that God would take his nature in hand and make of it what he will. Who can tell the possibilities of a human being that God is molding, when there is no resistance to the treatment? He may not have an easy life. There may come trouble, annoyance, disappointment, persecution, poverty, hardship and suffering. All these are tools which God may use in turning out a perfect man. It is not a light thing for one to enter on such a course. But what a hopeful thing it is! To have Him who made us take us in hand for full development is surely the way to the highest attainment. In the process there is perfect peace because there is the firm conviction that the trials which come do not come by chance, but are sent for a purpose. The irksome connection in business or the home, which tries the spirit, produces no impatience, because it is one of the molding influences which are developing character. Through it all, the eye turns lovingly to the great Father and accepts the discipline joyfully, anxious only that the lesson it was sent to teach shall be learned. No happier life can be imagined because it is a life of progress and the soul is armored so that it is never really hurt by any of the trials that it endures. And the Model is ever in our view. Looking at Christ, studying his character, reflecting as a mirror his glory, we are insensibly changed into the same image. That is what is due to God. Happy is the man that renders it.

The Starvation Plan

Of Treating Dyspepsia and Stomach Troubles is Useless and Unscientific

The almost certain failure of the starvation cure for dyspepsia has been proven time and again, but even now a course of dieting is generally the first thing recommended for a case of indigestion or any stomach trouble.

Many people with weak digestion, as well as some physicians, consider the first step to take in attempting to cure indigestion is to restrict the diet, either by selecting certain foods and rejecting others, or to cut down the amount of food eaten to barely enough to keep soul and body together, in other words, the starvation plan is by many supposed to be the first essential.

All this is radically wrong. It is foolish and unscientific to recommend dieting to a man already suffering from starvation, because indigestion itself starves every organ, nerve and fibre in the body.

What people with poor digestion most need is abundant nutrition, plenty of good, wholesome, properly cooked food, and something to assist the weak stomach to digest it.

This is exactly the purpose for which Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are adapted and the true reason why they cure the worst cases of stomach trouble.

Eat a sufficient amount of wholesome food and after each meal take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to promptly digest it.

In this way the system is nourished and the overworked stomach rested, because the tablets will digest the food whether the stomach works or not, one grain of the active digestive principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets being sufficient to digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or other albuminous food.

Dr. Harlandson and Dr. Redwell recommend these tablets in all cases of defective digestion because the pepsin and diastase in them are absolutely free from animal matter and other impurities and being pleasant to the taste are as safe and harmless for the child as for the adult.

All drug stores sell this excellent preparation and the daily use of them after meals will be of great benefit, not only as an immediate relief, but to permanently build up and invigorate the digestive organs.

COFFEE ARGUMENT

New Evidence of the Effect

A South Dakota man, W. A. Dawley, Sturgis, explains the condition some men get into from coffee drinking. Let it be understood that coffee seems to agree with some people well enough, but when a person finds it does not agree, it is better to leave it off. He says: "I used coffee about twenty years, and quit it September 30, 1898. I had become almost a complete wreck, thin in flesh and emaciated, dyspepsia and indigestion of the worst order, nerves shattered, no appetite, slept very little, and my blood was so thin that the slightest breeze chilled me through.

"Medicines gave no relief; I had about given up when I finally concluded to investigate and see if it was really true, as I had read in a number of your statements that coffee acted like a poison to some people. It was an easy matter to leave off coffee when I took Postum Food Coffee, for the food coffee tasted as good as the other, and to my surprise, it set good on my weak stomach.

"I have been buying the Postum through my grocer, Mr. Jas. Meyer, and always have followed directions carefully. I liked it from the first and have drank Postum three times a day ever since. Have gained twenty pounds in weight, my appetite is better than ever before, my sleep perfect, dyspepsia is a thing of the past and my nerves are what they should be. I can vouch for the statement that Postum Food Coffee 'makes red blood' and plenty of it. My son, Amos Dawley of this city has been completely cured of dyspepsia in three months by quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee. This is given you as an honest testimonial of the priceless value of your (to me) life-saving food drink. You are welcome to use my name if you want." Respectfully.

A BASKET OF EASTER FLOWERS

HOW THEY BRIGHTENED THE LIVES OF POVERTY'S BRIGADE

By .... ERNEST GILMORE

IT was a beautiful Easter day. The window was open, near which Miss Taylor sat, and through it the soft wind came stirring the lace curtains and touching her auburn hair gently. The sweet fragrance of early flowers abloom came to her. She heard the music of the organ from the cathedral near by. She imagined that she even heard the rustling of the silk dresses as their wearers walked down the aisle. But no sound or sight or breath of "green things growing" brought a smile to her face. She was very sad. She had passed through too deep waters to smile—she would have told you had you questioned her on the subject. Suddenly she heard a familiar voice outside the window.

"It's Ben," she said to herself, "and I know what he wants. He has come for me to go to church, but I shall not go."

Benson Grant was her cousin; they had been close friends ever since they could remember.

"Come," called Ben outside the window, "the church bells are ringing. Get your hat on, Helen."

"I'm not going," she said.

"Not going to church on Easter day! How is that?"

"I don't care to go."

"Well now," he said smilingly, "it seems as if you ought to care to go considering you're neither blind, nor deaf, nor disabled."

He was a fine looking young fellow. Grace, tact and genuine goodness spoke in his every act and word. His face was radiant with the joy of a perfect Easter day.

Helen did not answer.

"Supposing then, seeing you're not going to church, we take a stroll," he proposed.

"All right," she said, "I will do that." She put on her hat and wrap and went outside.

"What a lot of flowers you have already!" said Ben, "they're earlier than usual, aren't they?"

"Oh, yes, much earlier. Help yourself, Ben; take all you want."

"Do you mean it?" he asked. "Shall I take all I want?"

She smiled in spite of herself. "Yes, take all you want," she said. "I'm not afraid of your trespassing; you have never been greedy."

Sukey, the black cook, who had lived with Miss Helen ever since her birth, opened the kitchen door.

"Sukey, will you lend me a market basket?" he called pleasantly. Sukey brought one. He picked flower after flower quickly but carefully, Helen regarding him wonderingly, until there was not one left. Then he looked up at Helen questioningly.

"I didn't think you could be so greedy as to take them all," she said, with a frown of displeasure.

"You don't need them, my dear," was his gay respond, "but they do."

"Who?"

"Poverty's brigade. Come on Helen."

"You feel disposed to talk in riddles," she said as she followed him out the gate.

"I beg your pardon, I'll explain. If you're willing we'll go down to Harris street. Are you?"

"Isn't it a dreadful place?"

"It's a poverty-stricken place, but it isn't a place to be afraid of. Jesus would find his way there if he were in the city."

A bird was singing from the fence rail. The grass was already green in some of the yards and a few flowers were abloom but these were soon passed by. They entered a dark, narrow street. It did not seem like spring there. Helen pulled up her wrap and buttoned it close.

"It seems cold," she said.

"You'll not feel cold when you get inside the rooms of the poverty brigade," Ben answered.

Ben put the basket in Helen's hands after they had climbed the stairs of an old tenement. "Here are the flowers, they're yours to do what you like with."

Their first call was upon a bed-ridden old woman on a fourth floor back. So many long and weary years had passed since the poor old soul had touched or even seen a flower that the wondrous beauty and sweetness of the lilies that Helen gently put within her feeble grasp struck her dumb with joy. Into her tired eyes there came a glow such as they had not known for years. While Helen sat beside her, smiling at her, Benson stole out softly, coming back soon with his hands full of packages which he quietly laid down on the rickety old table.

"Just a little remembrance," was his thought, "for his sake who died and rose again."

They made a half dozen more calls, and wherever Helen left a bunch of flowers for Christ's sake, Benson gave a more substantial remembrance.

One of their calls was upon a widow with five small children. She was extremely poor, but so brave that Helen was put to shame.

"Oh," said the little widow, "it's been and still is a hard struggle, but it must be God's will, and so why should I grumble?"

She accepted Helen's gift joyfully.

"I'll put them on Sam's grave," she said. "I've longed so for some, but couldn't afford to buy any. Oh, this blessed Easter day. How good of you to remind me with the sweet flowers that Christ is risen. And Sam will rise, too." Her tears and kisses fell upon the flowers. She even, in her great joy, kissed Helen's hand. As for Helen, tears were rolling down her cheeks. She hid her face in the sunny curls of the "littlest one" who had climbed to her lap. Benson, as was his way at such critical moments, slipped out, this time with one of the children in his arms. When he returned he put his head within the door calling softly to Helen, "Are you ready?"

She joined him and they began the long descent. At the foot they met a big boy with a big basket and the little boy whom Benson had carried out of the room. His face was aglow.

"Duss see dare," he called, "it's full to de brim for mommy an' all of us. Dares everyfing in de basket, everyfing. Oh my, won't mommy laugh?"

Benson laughed as he walked on.

Presently, up in the widow's room, there was another scene upon which angels smiled.

And so the good work went on. When the Easter stroll was over and they were entering the Taylor grounds, Benson said, "Are you tired?"

"I hadn't thought of being tired," was the answer, "perhaps I am, but I'm so happy I don't mind it. I thank you, Ben dear, for teaching me a lesson."

"What lesson?" he asked gently.

"To look upward instead of in the grave. I shall see my dear ones again sometime, somewhere."

The Easter bells were ringing. "They seem to say," said Helen softly, "Christ is risen! Christ is risen."

SCHOOL GIRL'S FOOD

A Very Important Question for Growing Girls

A little girl in Providence, R. I., high school was badly run down, owing to the fact that she was not properly fed. When her parents discovered the value of Grape-Nuts food she quickly recovered. Her father's letter is as follows:

"Without any desire whatever for publicity—in fact, with every desire to avoid it, I yet would like you to know of the following in reference to Grape-Nuts.

"My daughter is in the Providence High School English department, and working very hard, her studies telling on her severely, partly because of a serious illness she had some two or three years since. She has been accustomed to take meat luncheons with her, and to obtain a cup of hot drink, often of milk, at the school building. She came home quite hungry, however, on most occasions and somewhat exhausted.

"Three months ago she began to carry Grape-Nuts instead of her meat sandwiches, and now will not forego them. She says she can stand the after study on them better and has no sense of exhaustion on reaching home, although always able to enjoy her meal, as her appetite is good.

"We regard this as strong testimony in favor of Grape-Nuts, and if you can use it without publishing our names, we shall be pleased to have you do it, and will further say that we shall be glad to answer questions on the subject through the mails. We have used Grape-Nuts as an article of diet for nearly two years. Yours truly."

The name of this gentleman can be had by application to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

CHAPTER II.

AS the cab stopped before one of the festering tenements of the East Side, the children sprang quickly out and rushed pell mell into a dark and narrow passage, whither Somerville would have followed them with difficulty had not their clamorous voices led the way. Then up a rickety stairway they fled, and, pushing open a door on a dark landing, they tumbled precipitately across the room and flung themselves upon the miserable bed crying: "Mamma! mamma! Here is a gentleman come to see you and the doctor is coming too."

There was no response. Somerville advanced quickly to the bed. The woman's appearance shocked him beyond anything he had ever seen. Had she not feebly opened her eyes at that moment he would have thought her dead. She gazed at him with uncomprehending eyes. With his breath stopping short in his throat he leaned deferentially over her and said: "A physician will be here in a moment. What can I do for you?"

A pathetic intelligence showed itself in her haggard features, but as, with a mighty effort she roused herself from the death-like stupor that held her, she said faintly: "Am I—dreaming—or is there—a friend here?"

"Oh, mamma," sobbed the girl, "the doctor is coming in a minute to cure you."

"I am here. I am your friend. Let me do anything I can," said Somerville, hastily.

"Run into the other room for a minute, dearies," said the mother. As they obeyed she turned her great eyes with their unearthly light full on him and said: "There is nothing that you can do for me. I feel it is too late—but they have had nothing to eat for twenty-four hours. I have lain here unable to do anything for them, and they have thought only of me. Give them something to eat."

With an exclamation of horror he almost ran to the door, and as he did so he collided with the doctor, who entered at that moment.

"Quick!" cried Somerville. "There's not a moment to be lost!"

In an instant the physician was by the bed, his emergency case torn open, and a glass of a reviving cordial held to the woman's lips. As she sank back upon the pillow the experienced eye of the practitioner scanned her closely, then, motioning Somerville out into the hall, he said: "It's starvation and a close call. Get food—soup. We may be able to save her."

Feeling as though he held a human life in his hands, he made such urgent haste as never business had wrung from him, and as with swift strides he forced his way amid the unsightly debris of the noisome street there welled up within him the cry: "God grant it is not too late."

It was a cry that was heard and answered. Fifteen minutes later the scene within the bare and poverty-stricken rooms had shifted to a strange mingling of luxury and want. Within the cracked and battered store a fire blazed that was radiating its cheerful warmth on the chill air. On the table were piled fruits, substantial foods, and a steaming tureen of soup, while through the open doorway came the laughter of the children in the room beyond as they ravenously assuaged the pangs of hunger. Half propped up in the bed the mother lay, with that indescribable look on her face that comes only to those over whom the dread shadow of the Angel of Death has passed.

The doctor arranged a bottle, glass and spoon on the chair by the bed.

"I will be back at four o'clock this afternoon," he said. Then, aside to Somerville, he said: "You got here just in time. All she needs is food, but see that she has only small quantities at frequent and regular intervals to-day."

As the door closed on the doctor the pale figure on the bed motioned him to approach.

"Do you know what you have done?" she said. "You have saved three lives. I was only compelling myself to live until my children came back to kiss them good-by—and God only knows what their fate would have been then—for they have never begged and they are too young to earn anything."

Henry Somerville knew there was a mist before his eyes as he replied: "I have done nothing. God meant that you should draw on his bank in time."

"Mamma," said the boy, climbing up on the other side of the bed, "it's nice and warm in here now, ain't it? But, say, mamma, do you know how hunky warm you can be in a cab! Sis hollered like 's if she'd set off a firecracker."

"Let your mother sleep, children," said their visitor, softly. Even as he spoke, the relaxation of relief following utter physical exhaustion crept over her face, the wasted limbs felt a grateful languor creep through them, and the pale eyelids drooped their curtains over the pathetic orbs.

When he stole quietly out a few minutes later she lay in a deep, dreamless sleep, and on either side sat her two little guardian angels.

"She is all right now, and as soon as she recovers strength she can easily support herself, for she can sew; and I will give her some work and so will Mrs. Parmalee and Mrs. Ainsworth."

It was the evening of the same day and Mrs. Somerville was speaking to her husband.

"Never have I heard such a story," she continued. "I scarcely know which was more heroic, the mother or the children, but the end had nearly come for all of them—would have come, if it had not been for——"

"Not for me, Helen," interrupted her husband; "but for an over-ruling Providence that directs all. By the way, do you know that this is our first disbursement out of the fund in the Lord's bank? Let us see how we stand now."

When they cast up the account, they found it showed these items: Doctor, $2.00; food and fuel, $4.00; clothing for the children, $3.00; one month's rent paid in advance, $4.00; total, $15.00; balance, $985. They looked at one another. Then Henry Somerville got out of his chair and walked rapidly up and down the room a dozen times before he stopped in front of his wife and said in tones surcharged with deep feeling: "Helen, I cannot comprehend that we have spent only fifteen dollars. At least one human life has been saved, perhaps three, all of incalculable value, and the good that has been done is worth one million dollars to me." He paused. "I never knew the joy of giving before. Why, do you know—" he made a rapid calculation, "in the same proportion that we have spent these fifteen dollars we can relieve one hundred and ninety-seven more! I shall not rest until our other unknown depositors put in an appearance and claim their share."

It needed no interpreter to tell Somerville's business associates that a change had come over him.

A few days later, as he sat in his private office deeply engaged in conversation with a neighboring broker, John entered and said that an unknown man waited outside to see him.

"Show him in," was the prompt reply, to the astonishment of his friend, who immediately arose. "No, don't go, Carlisle, it's nothing private and will only take me a moment."

As he finished speaking the man without the door entered, his whole bearing and appearance indicated his errand unerringly. When, alas! did deserving need ever wear the livery of prosperity! Before he could reach Somerville's chair he was out of it and halfway across the room with outstretched hand.

"The Lord's Bank"

"Good morning, sir. I am glad to see you. What can I do for you?"

The man reddened confusedly under his stubby beard, then, with a direct and honest look, he replied straightforwardly:

"You can do everything, sir, if you will. I've been out of work for three months, and yesterday I got a job to go to work at next Monday, but what with my wife and four children, and my mother living with us and sick most of the time, I got behind with the rent and unless it's paid to-day we'll all be set out to-morrow, and if you would help me with that, sir, until I can——"

"With pleasure. How much is it?"

"Five dollars, sir. Here is the address. You can find out for yourself."

"I shall only keep it so that my wife or myself can call some time and see how you are getting along. I am very glad you have got work. This is not a loan and you are under no obligations to me for it. If you get into a tight place again you will always find me here."

The man took the slip of paper and as he looked at it he gulped hard, then, taking a step forward he said with an almost fierce intensity: "God bless you, sir. Jim Conway told me what you done for his little lame girl last week and he said you wouldn't turn me down, but I didn't believe him — it seemed to good to be true that there would be a business man anywhere who wouldn't order me out of his office. Mollie made me come, for the sake of the children and the mother. If I don't hurry they'll be setting the things on the sidewalk now. You've saved our home." He flung himself out with sudden and precipitate haste.

"Somerville, what on earth does this mean?" asked Carlisle. "I thought you never gave to beggars."

"I never give to rascally beggars, if I know it, Carlisle. I never give to a purely professional beggar or to a deliberate fraud, but you know as well as I do that the man who was just in here was none of these; he was simply a man and a brother in need. As for the 'giving' part of it, I do not give at all. I merely set aside a sum which belongs to the Lord, and I and my wife are jointly the agents to distribute it. We consider these people who call on us our friends and we take pleasure in paying over to them their share of the funds on deposit. Now look, for instance, at the relief afforded by the five dollars I just now gave out: It keeps a roof over the heads of seven persons, and saves them from being homeless. Can you call that 'giving to a beggar'?"

"Well, in this case, to a beggar—no. But still it must be a case of give, give—"

"Ah, so I used to think, and there was just where I made my mistake. Every time I gave a dollar it cost me an effort and I felt as though I had done a great thing. Now all is changed. The approach of an applicant for assistance causes an expansion instead of a contraction. The Lord's fund is set aside—it is there in the bank waiting to be distributed, and I am only his agent to see that it is well done. By giving it all at once I got rid of this idea of give, give, give. It is all given and the more who apply to draw on it the better, for it should certainly assist as many as possible. I tell you it is a great thing, Carlisle, to readjust your point of view once in a while. I have done it and I'm all the better off for it. Better try it yourself."

"Well, I must say this idea of setting aside a fund and then simply drawing on it does strike me favorably, but it must take quantities of valuable time to receive and dispose of these applicants."

"Not as much as the other method. How long was that man in here a while ago? Only a few minutes. Our investigations we conduct systematically, my wife and I, and if any expense is involved it comes out of the fund. Thus far we have not had to spend one per cent. for that. I tell you this thing has a practical working."

And so it proves. Perhaps $1,000 were never spent to better advantage than was that fund. A year later when they cast up the sum total they found that, directly and indirectly, two hundred and eighty-one persons had been permanently relieved from dire and pressing necessity, and one hundred and six had found employment. Only three per cent. of all the cases had proved to be unworthy, and although twenty-five per cent. had applied for aid the second, or in a few instances the third time, it was in every case due to sickness, death or loss of position. They sat side by side and viewed the results with happy eyes.

"The Lord's bank is solvent," murmured the wife.

"Yes," responded the husband, "and he has doubled the capital for next year."

Children Helping India

Two Little Tots who Gave Their Last Dime to Feed the Sufferers

SURELY a special blessing will rest upon the money which children are sending to the starving people of India. It would seem, by some of the letters and offerings we receive, as if the very babies of America were reaching out tiny hands of loving helpfulness. Hundreds of little folks are asking for mite-boxes: and again, other small people will not wait for these to reach them before sending along their contribution, which, small as it may seem in itself, is magnified many times in value by the sacrifice it involves on the part of the little maid or man whose all it may be, and by the fact that, though it be but a dime, it will support life for five days in a man, woman or child, who would otherwise perish. The offering of the two wee folks—almost babies—mentioned in the subjoined letter will preserve two human lives for five days—not a little work truly, though the workers be so tiny! Mrs. R. J. Hill, Kendalia, W. Va., writes:

REBECCA AND BETTIE HILL

Enclosed find $2 to help buy bread for the starving people of India. Also two dimes sent by my two little granddaughters, Bettie and Rebecca. It is money given them by their papa to buy candy with; but when I showed them the pictures of the starving children of India, they asked me to send you the money that these children might have some bread to eat. The sum is small, but in each case it represents the child's all—its last dime.

He Sold Hazelnuts for India

Below is a letter from a little lad, Dale Miller, Perry, Ia., whose earnings will keep eight people alive for a week. If we add to this the amounts contributed by his little playmates, Edith, John and Albert Miller, Newel Brooks, and Faye and Don Brewer, the total makes $3, which will keep three people alive for three months:

DALE MILLER

I sold hazelnuts and earned $1.14, which I send to the poor little starving children in India. I wish I could send more. I feel so sorry for them when I look at the pictures in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It must be terrible to starve to death.

Strangely Drawn to Christ

Many Remarkable Conversions Follow Countess Schimmelmann's Appeal to Souls

DURING the month of February the Countess Adeline Schimmelmann, the story of whose life work for Christ has already been published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, addressed public meetings every day in New York, Brooklyn, and surrounding towns. She is specially popular among the Scandinavians and Germans, who know the story of her life, and are acquainted with the persecutions she has endured for the Gospel.

COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN

In the Emmanuel Swedish Church, Brooklyn, she spoke one evening to a crowded house, and in her address she magnified the preciousness of her "living Lord," as she delights to call him, while, as the result of a conspiracy, she was confined in the hospital and received most cruel treatment. When the conspiracy was discovered, and the conspirators arrested, the authorities asked her what her wish was in regard to them. She replied that she simply desired the privilege of forgiving them for the sake of Christ, and all she asked of God was one soul for every tear she had shed during that awful experience. At the close of her address a man arose, and lifting his hand, said, "Pray for me." The Countess at once preached unto him Jesus, and before the meeting was over he had accepted Christ. After the benediction he rushed up to her and taking her by the hand said, "Countess, here's one of your tears; I was the boon companion and intimate friend of the physician who was used in kidnapping you, and I have to-night accepted your Saviour." A few days afterward the sister of this man came to the Majestic Hotel and, in the room of the Countess, surrendered her heart and life to Jesus.
